United States Ex Rel. Shore v. O'Leary (Nov. 9, 1987)

"Lower court owes deference to higher court and ordinarily has no authority to reject doctrine developed by higher court."
 "One foundation block of our judicial system is the principle of stare decisis which demands adherence to precedents. Decisions are made in accord with previous authoritative decisions in similar cases emanating from one's own circuit and from the Supreme Court. A lower court owes deference to those above it; ordinarily it has no authority to reject a doctrine developed by a higher court. See, e.g., Thurston Motor Lines, Inc. v. Jordan K. Rand, Ltd., 460 U.S. 533, 535, 103 S.Ct. 1343, 1344, 75 L.Ed.2d. 260 (1983) (per curiam); Perri v. Director, Dept. of Corrections of Ill., 817 F.2d. 448, 451 n. 4 (7th Cir.1987)."

Miller v. United States (Feb. 8, 1989)

"In light of lack of evidence that Supreme Court was harboring intentions to find Sixteenth Amendment had been invalidly enacted, Courts of Appeals and district courts were unable to disregard prior case law upholding Amendment's validity."

"One such limitation stems from the bedrock principle of stare decisis: lower courts are bound by the precedential authority of cases rendered by higher courts. U.S. Ex Rel. Shore v. O'Leary, 833 F.2d. 663, 667 (7th Cir.1987). This limitation on judicial power is one of the cornerstones of the legal structure in that it serves broader societal interests such as the orderly and predictable application of legal rules. This doctrine prevents us from disregarding the Supreme Court's opinions upholding the constitutionality of the sixteenth amendment. The Court's decisions are binding on us and the district court absent strong evidence that the Court will overrule its own cases. Colby v. J.C. Penny Co., 811 F.2d. 1119, 1123 (7th Cir.1987)"

Ewing v. United States (Apr. 19, 1989)

"It should be noted that these cases are nonetheless persuasive for being old. Indeed, it often happens that those closer in time to the enactment of a statute or the handing down of a precedent know best what it really stands for. Frequently changes in social and political beliefs cause later courts to put glosses on statutes and precedents which do not really belong there. Regarding the present issue, it is worth observing that no case located anywhere near in time to Rosenman hints at the liberalized standard for "payment" that the government urges today; it did not begin to emerge, in cases which were not squarely on point, until the 1960's, and not until 1980, in Ford, do we find it baldly stated that "an examination of taxpayer intent [that is, intent expressed other than by a written agreement] has been an important factor in determining whether a remittance is 'payment' of tax." Ford, supra, at 360. But note, as analyzed supra, Ford misstates the holdings of prior cases. And not that Ford's statement of the applicable standard is merely dicta and not even precedent in the Fifth Circuit, isasmuch as Mercantile National Bank is still the law there." p. 269.

"It may be correct to say that Rosenman stands for the proposition that no tax can ever be collected before formally assessed, except when accompanied by a return; as will be seen shortly, there is an interpretation of the language consistent with that. Nonetheless, let us assume arguendo that it is possible to have a collection before assessment, even in a case where assessment is formally required. It cannot be the case that any remittance of money at all constitutes collection, for the taxpayer won in Rosenman. Now we get to the language the loose interpretations are based on. "[T]he taxpayer did not discharge what he deemed a liability nor pay one that was asserted." Id. at 662, 65 S.Ct. at 538. Can this be taken to mean that any time a taxpayer remits money, he is "deeming" it to be due to a "liability," unless he does it kicking and screaming ("This payment is made under protest and duress, and solely for the purpose of avoiding penalties and interest, since it is contended by the executors that not all of this sum is legally or lawfully due," id. at 660, 65 S.Ct. at 537)? It would seem that some courts urge this interpretation.

See, e.g., Ford v. United States, supra; "[The] per se rule, however, contradicts a concept basic to our taxing system, the concept of voluntariness. Ideally our taxing system is a voluntary one, dependent for compliance in large part upon a sense of civic duty: The system has been described as one of 'self-assessment'." Ford at 360."

"It should be borne in mind that Rosenman was written by the great Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter. If he had meant to draw a distinction between those who remit money under protest, taking care to specify they do not really believe they owe it all, and those who fail to say so out loud, he would have found the words to say so more clearly. He would not have let such an important distinction lie in the single phrase, "what he deemed a liability," without further explication. ... The key here is that something, other than the mere remittance of money, must happen to define the amount of the obligation."

"The Court believes the correct standard for "defining" the amount of a tax obligation consists of: (1) a tax return or equivalent filled out by taxpayer when he is remitting at his own initiative; or (2) either an assessment made by the IRS, or a written acknowledgement by the taxpayer of amount owed, when proceedings are initiated by the government; that is, by government agents informing the taxpayer that they believe he owes additional taxes. Of course, whether the initial payment is based on the taxpayer's own calculations on his return, or the government's calculation upon assessment, it is still possible for the taxpayer to claim a refund within the statutory period if he believes the initial payment to have been wrong; to that extent, it is not final. But the point is that until one of these calculations has been made, there is no tax "payment" in the first place."

"It is well known among tax attorneys that to make inquiry of the IRS concerning a deficiency notice frequently results in a refusal to explain how the deficiency was calculated and can bring thinly veiled threats that failure to remit promptly will result in interest, penalties, or even criminal prosecution. It would not be something to be wondered at if many taxpayers sent in checks pursuant to deficiency notices without having the slightest idea whether they owed the amount remitted, let alone "acquiesced" in it. Under those conditions, ignorance cannot be equated with acquiescence. In view of all this, something more than the mere remittance of money must be required before a taxpayer can be said to have "voluntarily" paid, or "acquiesced" in the amount of his obligation, or that the amount of indebtedness has been "defined;" to say that money paid under duress in regard to an arbitrarily named figure, to escape worse consequences, constitutes "collection" of an obligation fairly "defined," does violence to the plain English meanings of the words "collection" and "define." Justice Frankfurter would not have approved." [Brackets original, bold added.]

United States v. Kim (Sept. 11, 1989)

"Elements of tax evasion are willfulness, existence of tax deficiency, and affirmative act constituting evasion or attempted evasion of tax."

"Constitutionality of statute setting forth mandatory presumption depends on rationality of connection between facts proved and ultimate fact presumed."

"Mandatory presumption in statute will be regarded as irrational unless it can at least be said with substantial assurance that presumed fact is more likely than not to flow from proved fact on which it is made to depend."

"For purposes of §7201 evidence of willfulness must generally show voluntary, intentional violation of known legal duty. Such evidence is ordinarily circumstantial, since direct proof is often unavailable. United States v. Schafer, 580 F.2d. 774, 781 (5th Cir.) [...]. Circumstantial evidence in this context may consist of, among other things, failure to report substantial amount of income, United States v. Schechter, 475 F.2d. 1099, 1101 (5th Cir.) [...], a consistent pattern of underreporting large amounts of income, Holland v. United States, 348 U.S. 121, 139, [...], the spending of large amounts of cash that cannot be reconciled with amount of reported income, United States v. Daniels, 617 F.2d. 146, 150 (5th Cir.1980), or "any conduct, the likely effect of which would be to mislead or to conceal." Spies v. United States, 317 U.S. 492, 499 [...]."

"A criminal defendant is entitled to have the jury instructed on a theory of the defense for which there is any foundation in the evidence. Perez v. United States, 297 F.2d. 12, 15-16 (5th Cir.1961). The judge need not instruct the jury with the very words proposed by the defendant, but is only required to instruct in such a way that adequately and fairly presents the theory of the defense. United States v. Barham, 595 F.2d. 231, 245 (5th Cir.), [cites omitted].

"[T]he instructions must be sufficiently precise and specific to enable the jury to recognize and understand the defense theory, test it against the evidence presented at trial, and then make a definitive decision whether, based on that evidence and in light of the defense theory, the defendant is guilty or not guilty." "In addition Congress's intention to create a tribal cause of action under the Act can be inferred from Congress's understanding of the law at the time the Act was enacted. The intention of Congress can be gleaned, at least in part, by reference to prior law, as Congress is presumed to be knowledgeable about existing law pertinent to any new legislation it enacts. [Cite omitted.] Thus, Congress can be presumed to know that statutes passed for the benefit of Indian tribes will be liberally construed in favor of such tribes. 16 Am.Jur.2d., §256

"The general rule is that an unconstitutional statute, whether federal or state, though having the form and name of law, is in reality no law, but is wholly void, and ineffective for any purpose; since unconstitutionality dates from the time of its enactment, and not merely from the date of the decision so branding it, an unconstitutional law, in legal contemplation, is as inoperative as if it had never been passed. Such a statute leaves the question that it purports to settle just as it would be had the statute not been enacted. No repeal of such an enactment is necessary.

"Such an unconstitutional law is void, the general principles follow that it imposes no duties, confers no rights, creates no office, bestows no power or authority on anyone, affords no protection, and justifies no acts performed under it. A contract which rests on an unconstitutional statute creates no obligation to be impaired by subsequent legislation.

"No one is bound to obey an unconstitutional law and no courts are bound to enforce it. Persons convicted and fined under a statute subsequently held unconstitutional may recover the fines paid.

"A void act cannot be legally consistent with a valid one. An unconstitutional law cannot operate to supersede any existing valid law. Indeed, insofar as a statute runs counter to the fundamental law of the land, it is superseded thereby. Since an unconstitutional statute cannot repeal or in any way affect an existing one, if a repealing statute is unconstitutional, the statute which it attempts to repeal remains in full force and effect. And where a clause repealing a prior law is inserted in an act, which act is unconstitutional and void, the provision for the repeal of the prior law will usually fall with it and will not be permitted to operate as repealing such prior law.

"The general principles stated above apply to the constitutions as well as to the laws of the several states insofar as they are repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States. Moreover, a construction of a statute which brings it in conflict with a constitution will nullify it as effectually as if it had, in express terms, been enacted in conflict therewith."

"What shall be the test of want of constitutional sanction is a question of more or less difficulty in all cases involving it. It is usual, on the part of those who insist on the constitutionality of any given statute, to claim that it must be regarded as constitutional, unless expressly prohibited by some provision in the constitution. In other words, in construing the constitution of the state, whatever is not expressly denied to the legislative power is possessed by it. The opposite of this rule, I may remark, is the rule of construction of the federal constitution. I assent to this, but not that the inhibitions of the constitution must be always express. They are equally effective, and not less to be regarded, when they arise by implication, and this is the case when the legislative provision is repugnant to some provision of the constitution: [cites omitted]. To illustrate this idea: the executive power of the state, under the constitution, is lodged in a governor; and the legislative, in a senate and house of representatives. It would be manifestly repugnant to these provisions of the constitution if an act of assembly should provide for the election of two executives, or two senates and houses of representatives, at the same election; yet it would be unconstitutional only by implication, there being no express prohibition on the subject. So, in regard to qualification for office. An act which should require a residence in the state for ten years, instead of three, or an age of fifty years, or freehold estate, in order to be eligible to the office of representative, would be void for repugnancy, because differing from the qualification expressed in the constitution, and would be so only by necessary implication,--necessary to keep legislation within the paramount rules of the constitution. The expression of one then in the constitution is necessarily the exclusion of things not expressed. This I regard as especially true of constitutional provisions declaratory in their nature. The remark of Lord Bacon, "that, as exceptions strengthen the force of a general law, so enumeration weakens, as to things not enumerated," expresses a principle of common law applicable to the constitution, which is always to be understood in its plain, untechnical sense: Commonwealth v. Clark, 7 Watts & S. 127."

"For the orderly exercise of the right resulting from these qualifications, it is admitted that the legislature must prescribe necessary regulations as to the places, mode, and manner, and whatever else may be required, to insure its full and free exercise. But this duty and right inherently imply that such regulations are to be subordinate to the enjoyment of the right, the exercise of which is regulated. The right must not be impaired by the regulation. It must be regulation purely, not destruction. If this were not an immutable principle, elements essential to the right itself might be invaded, frittered away, or entirely excised under the name or pretense of regulation, and thus would the natural order of things be subverted by making the principal subordinate to the accessory. To [sic] state is to prove this position. As a corollary of this, no constitutional qualification of an elector can in the least be abridged, added to, or altered by legislation or the pretense of legislation. Any such action would necessarily be absolutely void and of no effect. We hold, therefore, what, indeed, was not expressly denied, that no regulation can be valid which would have the effect to increase the district or state residence prior to the time of an offer to exercise the right of an elector, or which would impose other additional taxation or assessments than those provided in the constitution."

[The following four paragraphs is the case summary supplied by the publisher and is not part of the official court report.]

"Action in the Circuit Court of New York on a bill of exchange accepted in New York, instituted by the holder, a citizen of the State of Maine. The acceptance and indorsement of the bill were admitted, and the defense was rested on allegations that the bill had been received in payment of a pre-existing debt, and that the acceptance had been given for lands which the acceptor had purchased from the drawer of the bill, to which lands the drawer had no title; and that the quality of the lands had been misrepresented, and the purchaser imposed upon by the fraud of the drawer, and those who were co-owners of the land and co-operators in the sale. The bill accepted had been received bona fide, and before it was due.

"There is no doubt that a bona fide holder of a negotiable instrument for a valuable consideration, without any notice of the facts which implicate its validity as between the antecedent parties, if he takes it under an indorsement made before the same becomes due, holds the title unaffected by those facts, and may recover thereon, although, as between the antecedent parties, the transaction may be without any legal validity.

"The holder of negotiable paper, before it is due, is not bound to prove that he is a bona fide holder for a valuable consideration, without notice; for the law will presume that in the absence of all rebutting proof, and therefore it is incumbent on a defendant to establish by way of defense satisfactory proofs of the contrary, and thus to overcome the prima facie title of the plaintiff.

"The 34th section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, which declares "That the laws of the several States, except where the Constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States shall otherwise recognize or provide, shall be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply," has uniformly been supposed by the Supreme Court to be limited in its application to State laws strictly local: that is to say, to the positive statutes of the State, and the construction thereof adopted by the local, and to rights and titles to things having a permanent locality, such as the rights and titles to real estate, and other matters immovable and intraterritorial in their nature and character. The section does not extend to contracts or other instruments of a commercial nature; the true interpretation and effect whereof are to be sought, not in the decisions of the local tribunals, but in the general principles and doctrines of commercial jurisprudence." [End of the case summary.]

"There is no doubt that a bona fide holder of a negotiable instrument for a valuable consideration, without any notice of facts, which impeach its validity as between the antecedent parties, if he takes it under an indorsement made before the same becomes due, holds the title unaffected by these facts, and may recover thereon, although as between the antecedent parties to the transaction may be without any legal validity.

This is a doctrine so long and so well established, and so essential to the security of negotiable paper, that it is laid up among the fundamentals of law, and requires no authority or reasoning to be now brought in its support. As little doubt is there, that the holder of any negotiable paper, before it is due, is not bound to prove that he is a bona fide holder for a valuable consideration, without notice; for the law will presume that in the absence of all rebutting proofs, and therefore it is incumbent upon the defendant to establish by way of defense satisfactory proofs of the contrary, and thus to overcome the prima facie

"But, admitting the doctrine to be fully settled in New York, it remains to be considered, whether it is obligatory upon this court, if it differs from the principles established in the general commercial law. It is observable that the courts of New York do not found their decisions upon this point upon any local statute, or positive, fixed, or ancient local usage; but they deduce the doctrine from the general principles of commercial law. It is, however, contended, that the 34th section of the Judiciary Act of 1789 (ch. 20) furnishes a rule obligatory upon this court to follow the decisions of the State tribunals, in all cases to which they apply. That section provides "that the laws of the several States, except where the Constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States shall otherwise require or provide, shall be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply." In order to maintain the argument, it is essential, therefore, to hold, that the word "laws," in this section includes within the scope of its meaning the decisions of the local tribunals. In the ordinary use of language it will hardly be contended that the decisions of courts constitute laws. They are, at most, only evidence of what the laws are, and are not of themselves laws. They are often re-examined, reversed, and qualified by the courts themselves, whenever they are found to be either defective or ill-founded, or otherwise incorrect. The laws of a State are more usually understood to mean the rules and enactments promulgated by the legislative authority thereof, or long established local customs having the force of laws. In all the various cases, which have hitherto come before us for decision, this court have [sic] uniformly supposed that the true interpretation of the 34th section limited its application to State laws strictly local, that is to say, to the positive statutes of the State, and the construction thereof adopted by the local tribunals, and to rights and titles to things having a permanent locality, such as the rights and titles to real estate, and other matters immovable and intraterritorial in their nature and character. It never has been supposed by us that the section did apply, or was designed to apply, to questions of a more general nature, not all dependent upon local statutes or local usages of a fixed and permanent operation, as, for example, to the construction of ordinary contracts or other written instruments, and especially to questions of general commercial law, where the State tribunals are called upon to perform the like functions as ourselves, that is, to ascertain upon general reasoning and legal analogies, what is the true exposition of the contract or instrument, or what is the just rule furnished by the principles of commercial law to govern the case. And we have not now the slightest difficulty in holding, that this section, upon its true intent and construction, is strictly limited to local statutes and local usages of the character before stated, and does not extend to contracts and other instruments of a commercial nature, the true interpretation and effect whereof are to be sought, not in the decisions of the local tribunals, but in the general principles and doctrines of commercial jurisprudence. Undoubtedly, the decisions of the local tribunals upon such subjects are entitled to, and will receive, the most deliberate attention and respect of this court; but they cannot furnish positive rules, or conclusive authority, by which our own judgments are to be bound up and governed."

And why upon principle should not a pre-existing debt be deemed such a valuable consideration? It is for the benefit and convenience of the commercial world to give as wide an extent as practicable to the credit and circulation of negotiable paper, that it may pass not only as security for new purchases and advances, made upon the transfer thereof, but also in payment of and as security for pre-existing debts. The creditor is thereby enabled to realize or to secure his debt, and thus may safely give a prolonged credit, or forbear from taking any legal steps to enforce his rights. The debtor also has the advantage of making his negotiable securities of equivalent value to cash."

"Be this as it may, we entertain no doubt that a bona fide holder for a pre-existing debt of a negotiable instrument is not affected by any equities between the antecedent parties, where he has received the same before it become due, without notice of any such equities. We are all, therefore, of the opinion that the question on this point, propounded by the Circuit Court for our consideration, ought to be answered in the negative; and we shall accordingly direct it so to be certified to the Circuit Court."

United States v. Wigglesworth (Oct. 1842)

"In the first place, it is, as I conceive, a general rule in the interpretation of all statutes, levying taxes or duties upon subjects or citizens, not to extend their provisions, by implication, beyond the clear import of the language used, or to enlarge their operation so as to embrace matters, not specifically pointed out, although standing upon a close analogy. In case, therefore, of doubt, such statutes are construed most strongly against the government, and in favor of the subjects or citizens, because burdens are not to be imposed nor presumed to be imposed beyond what the statutes expressly and clearly import. Revenue statutes are in no just sense either remedial laws or laws founded upon any permanent public policy, and, therefore, are not to be liberally construed."

RESOLUTIONS OF CONGRESS.

"Joint resolutions of Congress are not distinguishable from bills, and, if approved by the President, or if duly passed without the approval of the President, they have all the effect of law."

"But separate resolutions of either House of Congress, except in matters appertaining to their own parliamentary rights, have no legal effects to constrain the action of the President or of the Heads of Departments."

"The act of a Head of Department is, in effect, an act of the President. Now, the Constitution provides for co-ordinate powers acting in different and respective spheres of co-operation. The executive power is vested in the President, whilst all legislative powers are vested in Congress. It is for Congress to pass laws; but it cannot pass any law, which, in effect, coerces the discretion of the President, except with his approbation, unless by concurrent vote of two-thirds of both Houses, upon his previous refusal to sign a bill. And the Constitution expressly provides that orders and resolutions, and other votes of the two Houses, in order to have the effect of law, shall, in like manner, be presented to the President for his approval, and if not approved by him shall become law only by subsequent concurrence in vote of two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives."

"In a word, the authority of each Head of Department is a parcel of the executive power of the President. To coerce the Head of Department is to coerce the President. This can be accomplished in no other way than by a law, constitutional in its nature, enacted in accordance with the forms of the Constitution."

"Of course, no separate resolution of either House can coerce a Head of Department, unless in some particular in which a law, duly enacted, has subjected him to the direct action of each; and in such case it is to be intended, that, by approving the law, the President has consented to the exercise of such co-erciveness on the part of either House."

"It does not help the case, constitutionally speaking, if there should happen to be a resolution of the same substance, or even of the same identical words, passed by each House; for such separate resolutions have not the form nor the responsibilities of enactment, according to the rules of the two Houses, nor do they possess the conditions of a law according to the Constitution."

"Indeed, it seems little better than a mere truism to say, that a separate resolution of either House of Congress is not a law."

"Whenever a general act is passed, like that for the payment of half-pay to certain officers of the Virginia line, that is to say, a law embracing a defined class of cases, and assigning to a Head of Department the executive duty of ascertaining the particular cases of the class, and applying the law to them, in such case the terms of the law constitute a rule for his government. It is incumbent on him, as on every other citizen, to obey the law. To obey it, in him, is to execute it according to its provisions, as conscientiously construed by him in his best judgment, or if he doubt, then as he may be advised by the Attorney General. To do otherwise, that is, on the one hand to refuse to apply the law to cases to which it is justly applicable, or on the other to apply it to cases to which it is not justly applicable, is to disobey, not to obey,--to violate, not to execute,--the constitutional will of the legislative department of the Government."

"But the Constitution has not given to either branch of the legislature the power, by separate resolution of its own, to construe, judicially, a general law, or to apply it executively to a given case. And its resolutions have obligatory force only so far as regards itself or things dependent on its own separate constitutional power."

"Any other view of the subject would result in the absurd conclusion that a separate resolution of either House could repeal or modify an act of Congress. For, as the Supreme Court well say [sic], in one of the cases before cited, a Head of Department "must exercise his judgment in expounding the acts and resolution of Congress, under which he is, from time to time, required to act." That exposition of the law, conscientiously made by him, and with the aid of the law officer of the Government, is the law of the case. If the question be one of judicial resort, the exposition of the statute by the Supreme Court will constitute the law. But, if it be a mere executive question, then the exposition of the particular Secretary, or of the Attorney General, is just as much the law, and, as such, binding on the conscience of the Head of Department, as any other part of the statute, which may happen to be of unquestionable import, and so not to require exposition. In fine, it becomes the law; that is, the authorized construction of the legal intentment of the act of Congress. That ascertained legal intentment of a statute cannot be authoritatively changed by a separate resolution of either or of both Houses; but only by a new act of Congress."

"The conclusive test of the whole doctrine is, to inquire whether the Supreme Court of the United States would adjudge that the report of a committee, or a resolution of either House, has the effect of repealing, modifying, or conclusively construing an act of Congress. It is perfectly clear that they would not. (Albidge v. Williams, iii Howard, 9.)"

"It is not readily perceivable why the Executive should act against his conscience to prevent the reproach of "a disagreement between the Executive and the two Houses of Congress," when the thing done by the former is a complete legal act within his constitutional competency, and the thing done by the latter is a mere expression of opinion, not possessed of any obligatory force by the Constitution. The obvious way of determining any such disagreement, and removing "the reproach upon the justice of the Government," is for Congress to pass a declaratory law in the forms of the Constitution."

"For, as we have seen, a report of a committee, or a separate resolution of either House, is not itself the law, nor an authoritative exposition of the law. The opinion of either House, or of its committees, should be regarded with all possible deference in matters of pure discretion, but cannot justify the violation of an act of Congress."

"Now, there is [an] obvious difference between the report of a committee, which is the opinion of a majority of the members of the committee only, and a resolution of either House, which is the opinion of a majority of the members of that House."

"Most assuredly it cannot be sound constitutional doctrine, that a declaratory resolution of either House, construing a general law, is obligatory against the judgment of the Executive, and that it is the duty of the Executive to yield its judgment in all such cases to the mere opinion of the Senate or of the House of Representatives. Such an assumption is contrary, as I have shown, to the plain letter and clear spirit of the Constitution.

"If it be said that, although a Head of Department be not absolutely bound in law to yield up his own judgment, yet that, in the language of the opinion under consideration, it is his duty so to do, out of deference to both or either of the Houses, or to prevent the public reproach of disagreement between the legislative and executive branches of the government, or for any other possible consideration of mere expediency, I reply that the whole weight of the argument of expediency is the other way; for the adoption of such a rule would inevitably tend to the disorganization of the Government.

"In the first place, the President is not bound to yield up his own judgment, even to the most unequivocally expressed opinion of the two Houses, in the form of a bill passed through all the solemnities of constitutional enactment. But, if the hypothesis under consideration be maintainable, a separate resolution of either House will constrain the Executive, when a bill, solemnly passed to be enacted, would not. Of course this idea would afford easy means of striking the veto power and the rights of minorities out of the Constitution, and conferring on a bare majority of the two Houses that legislative omnipotence, which it was one of the great objects of the Constitution to guard against and avoid.

"According to the letter of the Constitution, resolutions of the two Houses, even a joint resolution, when submitted to the President and disapproved by him, do not acquire the force of law until passed anew by a concurrent vote of two-thirds of each House."

"In the second place, the hypothesis puts an end to all the forms of legislative scrutiny on the part of Congress. A declaratory law, especially if it involve the expenditure of the public treasure, has forms of legislation to go through to insure due consideration."

"In this way, instead of the revenues of the Government being subject only to the disposition of Congress in the form of a law constitutionally enacted, they will be transferred to the control of an accidental majority, expressing its will by a resolution, passed, it may be, out of time, and under circumstances, in which a law, duly and truly representing the will of Congress, could not have passed. And thus, all those checks and guards against the inconsiderate appropriation of the public treasure, so carefully devised by the founders of the Government, will be struck out of the Constitution."

"But, after all, is not our first duty that of humble submission to the Constitution? Of what avail are arguments of expediency against the positive injunctions of the Constitution?"

"A mere vote of either or of both Houses of Congress, declaring its opinion of the proper construction of a general law, has, be it repeated, in itself, no constitutional force or obligation as law. It is opinion merely, and to be dealt with as such, receiving more or less of deference, like other mere opinions, according to the circumstances."

Rector, Etc., Of Holy Trinity Church v. United States (Feb. 29, 1892)

"In construing a doubtful statute the court will consider the evil which it was designed to remedy, and for this purpose will look into contemporaneous events, including the situation as it existed, and as it was pressed upon the attention of the legislative body, while the act was under consideration."

"It being historically true that the American people are a religious people, as shown by the religious objects expressed by the original grants and charters of the colonies, and the recognition of religion in the most solemn acts of their history, as well as in the constitutions of the states and the nation, the courts, in construing statutes, should not impute to any legislature a purpose of action against religion."

"It is a familiar rule that a thing may be within the letter of the statute and yet not within its spirit nor within the intention of its makers. This has been often asserted, and the Reports are full of cases illustrating its application. This is not the substitution of the will of the judge for that of the legislator; for frequently words of general meaning are used in a statute, words broad enough to include an act in question, and yet a consideration of the whole legislation, or of the circumstances surrounding its enactment, or of the absurd results which follow from giving such broad meaning to the words, makes it unreasonable to believe that the legislator intended to include the particular act."

"All laws should receive a sensible construction. General terms should be so limited in their application as not to lead to injustice, oppression, or an absurd consequence. It will always, therefore, be presumed that the legislature intended exceptions to its language which would avoid results of this character. The reason of the law in such cases should prevail over its letter. The common sense of man approves the judgment mentioned by Puffendorf, that the Bolognian law which enacted 'that whoever drew blood in the streets should be punished with the utmost severity, did not extend to the surgeon who opened the vein of a person that fell down in the street in a fit. The same common sense accepts the ruling, cited by Plowden, that the statute of 1 Edw. II., which enacts that a prisoner who breaks prison shall be guilty of felony, does not extend to a prisoner who breaks out when the prison is on fire, 'for he is not to be hanged because he would not stay to be burnt.'" [Quoting U.S. v. Kirby, 7 Wall. 482, 486.]

"In the case of U.S. v. Fisher, 2 Cranch, 358, 386, Chief Justice MARSHALL said: "... Where the intent is plain, nothing is left to construction. Where the mind labors to discover the design of the legislature, it seizes everything from which aid can be derived; and in such case the title claims a degree of notice, and will have its due share of consideration." And in the case of U.S. v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. 610, 631, the same judge applied the doctrine in this way: "The words of the section are in terms of unlimited extent. The words 'any person or persons' are broad enough to comprehend every human being. But general words must not only be limited to cases within the jurisdiction of the state, but also to those objects to which the legislature intended to apply them. Did the legislature intend to apply these words to the subjects of a foreign power, who in a foreign ship may commit murder or robbery on the high seas? The title of an act cannot control its words, but may furnish some aid in showing what was in the mind of the legislature. The title of this act is, 'An act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States.' It would seem that offenses against the United States, not offenses against the human race, were the crimes which the legislature intended by this law to punish."

"It will be seen that words as general as those used in the first section of this act were by that decision limited, and the intent of congress with respect to the act was gathered partially, at least, from its title. Now, the title of this act is, 'An act to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its territories, and the District of Columbia. Obviously the thought expressed in this reaches only to the work of the manual laborer, as distinguished from that of the professional man.' No one reading such a title would suppose that congress had in its mind any purpose of staying the coming into this country of ministers of the gospel, or, indeed, of any class whose toil is that of the brain. The common understanding of the terms "labor" and "laborers" does not include preaching and preachers, and it is to be assumed that words and phrases are used in their ordinary meaning. So whatever of light is thrown upon the statute by the language of the title indicates an exclusion from its penal provisions of all contracts for the employment of ministers, rectors, and pastors."

"It was never suggested that we had in this country a surplus of brain toilers, and, least of all, that the market for the services of Christian ministers was depressed by foreign competition."

"Especially would the committee have otherwise recommended amendments, substituting for the expression, 'labor and service, whenever it occurs in the body of the bill, the words 'manual labor' or 'manual services, as sufficiently broad to accomplish the purposes of the bill, and that such amendments would remove objections which a sharp and perhaps unfriendly criticism may urge to the proposed legislation. The committee, however, believing that the bill in its present form will be construed as including only those whose labor or service is manual in character, and being very desirous that the bill become a law before the adjournment, have reported the bill without change."

"Even the constitution of the United States, which is supposed to have little touch upon the private life of the individual, contains in the first amendment a declaration common to the constitutions of all the states, as follows:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," etc.,--and also provides in article 1, §7, (a provision common to many constitutions) that the executive shall have 10 days (Sundays excepted) within which to determine whether he will approve or veto a bill. [Bold added.]

"There is no dissonance in these declarations. There is a universal language pervading them all, having one meaning. They affirm and reaffirm that this is a religious nation. These are not individual sayings, declarations of private persons. They are organic utterances. They speak the voice of the entire people."

McMahon v. Lundin (Apr. 20, 1894)

"The statute is clear and plain, and its policy is wise and just. It must be construed exactly as it reads. He who in good faith sells and furnishes seed from which a crop may be raised, and properly files a note taken for the same, should be and is entitled to priority of lien over all other persons. We see nothing in the suggestion that the obligation of a contract is impaired if it be declared that a lien arising by virtue of a seed-grain note has priority over a lien upon the same property acquired by means of the provisions of a previously executed chattel mortgage. The power of the legislature to provide for first liens of this character ought not to be doubted. Again, a mortgage upon a crop not yet planted or sown attaches only to such interest as the mortgagor has in the crop when it comes into being. Simmons v. Anderson, 44 Minn. 487, 47 N.W. 52."

Benziger v. United States (Jan. 4, 1904)

"This revision of the statute should be liberally construed in favor of the importer, and if there were any fair doubt as to the true construction of the provision in question, the courts should resolve the doubt in his favor."

Spreckels Sugar Refining Co. v. McClain (Feb. 23, 1904)

"The contention of the government is that the tax is not a direct tax, but only an excise imposed by Congress under its power to lay and collect excises which shall be uniform throughout the United States. Art. 1, §8. Clearly the tax is not imposed upon gross annual receipts as property, but only in respect of the carrying on or doing the business of refining sugar. It cannot be otherwise regarded because of the fact that the amount of the tax is measured by the amount of the gross annual receipts. The tax is defined in the act as "a special excise tax," and, therefore, it must be assumed, for what it is worth, that Congress had no purpose to exceed its powers under the Constitution, but only to exercise the authority granted to it of laying and collecting excises."

"Keeping in mind the well-settled rule that the citizen is exempt from taxation unless the same is imposed by clear and unequivocal language, and that where the construction of a tax law is doubtful, the doubt is to be resolved in favor of those upon whom the tax is sought to be laid...." [Bold added.]

S. H. Hawes & Co. et al. v. Wm. R. Trigg Co. et al. (Sept. 9, 1909)

"A holding as to the status of a corporation and as to the constitutionality of a statute, in a former suit to which the parties to the present suit were parties, is res judicata."

"Where the United States government voluntarily submitted its rights under a contract to the determination of the state courts, the theory that a sovereign cannot be sued without its consent has no application."

An act of Congress governs all persons under the jurisdiction of the enacting power; whereas, a "joint resolution" is merely a rule for the guidance of the agents and servants of the government."

"The difference between an act of Congress and a joint resolution is that the former governs all persons under the jurisdiction of the enacting power, while the latter is but a rule for the guidance of the agents and servants of the sovereign."

"In any view to be taken of this contract and of the joint resolution of Congress, pursuant to which the contract was entered into, the lien stipulated for is contractual only and not a statutory lien."

"In United States v. Canal Bank, Fed.Cas. No. 14,715, 25 Fed.Cas. 278, the opinion says: "It has long been settled, by the solemn adjudication of the Supreme Court, that the United States do not possess any general right of priority or privilege' over private creditors for the satisfaction of the debts due to them, founded upon any general prerogative belonging to the government in its sovereign capacity; but that all the priority or privilege which the government is at liberty to assert is or must be founded upon some statute, passed by Congress in virtue of its constitutional authority. This was expressly so held in United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch, 358-396, 2 L.Ed. 304, and the doctrine has ever since been strictly adhered to." [Cites omitted; bold added.]

"In the interpretation of statutes levying taxes, it is the established rule not to extend their provisions, by implication, beyond the clear import of the language used, or to enlarge their operations so as to embrace matters not specifically pointed out. "It is a recognized rule of interpretation that--

"In case of doubt or uncertainty, acts in pari materia passed either before or after, and whether repealed or still in force may be referred to in order to discern the intent of the Legislature in the use of particular terms, or in the enactment of particular provisions." p. 631.

"If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law, he must be taxed, however great the hardship may appear to the judicial mind to be. On the other hand, if the crown, seeking to recover the tax, cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free, however apparently within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be. In other words, if there be admissible in any statute what is called an equitable construction, certainly such a construction is not admissible in a taxing statute, where you can simply adhere to the words of the statute."

Panama Railroad Co. v. Johnson (Apr. 7, 1924)

"Generally, where existing legislation on a particular subject has been systematically revised and restated in a comprehensive general statute, subsequent enactments touching that subject are to be construed and applied in harmony with the general statute, save as they clearly manifest a different purpose."

"A statute must be construed, if fairly possible, so as to avoid not only the conclusion that it is unconstitutional, but also grave doubts on that score."

"In this connection it is well to recall that the Constitution, by §1 of article 3, declares that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court "and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish," and, by §8 of article 1, empowers the Congress to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the several powers vested in the government of the United States. Mention should also be made of the enactment by the first Congress, now embodied in §§24 & 256 of the Judicial Code, whereby the district courts are given exclusive original jurisdiction "of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it."

Moran v. La Guardia (Apr. 14, 1936)

"Concurrent resolution of Legislature cannot modify or repeal statutory enactment, but to repeal or modify a statute requires a legislative act of equal dignity and import, and concurrent resolution of the two houses is not a 'statute.'"

"Concurrent resolution of Legislature, unlike a statute, is binding only on members and officers of legislative body, and resembles statute neither in its mode of passage nor in its consequences."

"To hold that statute may be terminated or repealed by some act other than repealing statute, court must at least find clearly expressed provision to that effect embodied in law thus to be terminated."

"Joint resolution of Legislature repealing act permitting city to reduce salaries of employees held not to constitute action by the Legislature and could not result in repeal of such act which declared that temporary emergency existed requiring its enactment, and that its provisions were to apply 'until the legislature shall find their further operation unnecessary'."

"At first the Legislature passed a bill to repeal this law, which was vetoed by the Governor. Next the Legislature sought to accomplish the same result by means of a joint resolution."

"A concurrent resolution of the Legislature is not effective to modify or repeal a statutory enactment. [Cite omitted.] To repeal or modify a statute requires a legislative act of equal dignity and import. Nothing less than another statute will suffice. A concurrent resolution of the two Houses is not a statute. [Cite omitted.] A concurrent resolution, unlike a statute, is binding only on the members and officers of the legislative body. It resembles a statute neither in its mode of passage nor in its consequences. The form of a bill is lacking, and readings are not required. It does not have to lie on the desks of members of the Legislature for three legislative days. N.Y.Const. art. 3, §15. But more important, its adoption is complete without the concurrent action of the Governor, or, lacking this, passage by a two-thirds vote of each House of the Legislature over his veto. Thus a joint resolution may be adopted by a mere majority of the Legislature without action by the Governor or notice to the public, whereas the enactment of a statute requires action by three distinct bodies and at least three days' notice to the public. As has been well said; 'In the exercise of this vast power [of the Legislature] according to the fundamental idea and constitution of parliament the concurrence of the three distinct bodies of which it is composed, each acting by itself and independent of the others, is necessary. No two of them acting together, much less alone, can make a law.'" [Brackets original.]

"In Koenig v. Flynn, [cite omitted] it was held that action by the Legislature meant action by both Houses and the Governor. The language involved was "Shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof." U.S.Const. art. 1, §4."

"Presumption of correctness of determination by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is not evidence; once the presumption is overcome by plaintiff's evidence, it disappears and is no longer in the case; when this occurs, the court is required to base its decision of preponderance of all the credible evidence in the case."

An employee may receive economic benefits from his employer that are not subject to withholding provisions of the code."

"Per diem payments paid by engineering firm as a living allowance to employees located at a jobsite remote to the firm's regular place of business were not "wages" within income tax withholding statute providing that the term "wages" means all remunerations for services performed by an employee for his employer."

"The government argues that Revenue Ruling 59-371, 1959-2 Cum.Bull. 236, has the force and effect of law. We do not agree. A ruling is merely the opinion of a lawyer in the agency and must be accepted as such. It may be helpful in interpreting a statute, but it is not binding on the Secretary or the courts. "The government strongly urges that the well established rule that a determination by the Commissioner is presumed to be correct must govern this case. It contends that the plaintiff failed to overcome this presumption with its evidence. This presumption is not evidence. Wiget v. Becker, 8 Cir. 1936, 84 F.2d. 706; and Mertens, Law of Federal Income Taxation, Vol. 9, Section 5071. Furthermore, once the presumption is overcome by the plaintiff's evidence, it disappears and is no longer in the case. When this occurs, the court is required to base its decision on the preponderance of all of the credible evidence in the case. [cites omitted.]"

"It should be noted that Section 3401(a) does not provide that all payments made to an employee are wages. In order to be wages, the payments must be made "for services performed." It is clear that any payment to an employee which is an economic gain to him must be included in his taxable" income. But we are not concerned with what constitutes taxable income to the employee. The problem here is whether the employees' living allowance payments were wages and by reason thereof the withholding requirement was imposed on the employer." Whether or not payments are taxable to, or deductible by, the employee is immaterial with regard to whether they are subject to withholding [sic] by the employer. That is a matter between the employee and the government. An employee may receive economic benefits from his employer that are not subject to the withholding provisions of the Code."

Consumer Credit Protection Act, §303, 15 U.S.C.A. §1673."

"State law under which, though it could only be done once in 30-day period, 70% to 100% of disposable earnings of one work week could be taken by garnishment, violated Consumer Credit Protection Act provision limiting garnishment earnings of any work week to only 25% of disposable earnings or, if less, 30 times the federal minimum hourly wage, and thus to that extent was preempted by such provision, notwithstanding contention that state law could be construed so as to avoid garnishment of more than 25% of weekly disposable earnings."

"Federal preemption of state statutory garnishment formula to extent that it conflicted with Consumer Credit Protection Act provision limiting garnishment of earnings within any work week to only 25% of disposable earnings or, if less, to 30 times the federal minimum hourly wage would not nullify state statutory provisions to effect that only one garnishment per 30-day period could be filed."

"Bare question of whether state law is preempted by federal law is for federal and not state courts."

"Absolute equality is not mandated by Fourteenth Amendment."

"Consumer Credit Protection Act provision limiting garnishment of earnings within any work week to only 25 % of disposable earnings or, if less, to 30 times the federal minimum hourly wage and provision that no court shall enforce any order or process in violation of such limitation apply directly to garnishments of disposable earnings of Ohio employees, whether paid on weekly, biweekly, or semi-monthly basis."

"Garnishment procedures should never operate so as to deprive employee of more than 25 % of his disposable earnings paid for any one pay period."

"Anti-Injunction Statute did not preclude issuance of injunction restraining enforcement of state law which was contrary to Consumer Credit Protection Act provision limiting garnishment of earnings of any work week to only 25% of disposable earnings or, if less, to 30 times the federal minimum hourly wage."

"Better rule is that Anti-Injunction Statute does not bar injunctive suits brought by United States Government agencies and officers who seek to enforce federal laws."

Rebsamen Motors, Inc., 128 F.2d. 584, 587-588 (1942):

"It is not our understanding that a taxing statute is only to be read literally when a literal reading favors the Government.

"One may honestly and reasonably believe that in drafting a taxing act Congress uses the language which most nearly expresses the legislative intent, and that if the language used fails properly to express that intent, corrections should be made by Congressional action and not by Treasury regulations or by judicial construction. This is not to say that the language of such an act should not be accorded its full meaning or should be given an unduly restricted interpretation or one which will defeat a clearly apparent Congressional purpose. It seems to us, however, that neither the taxing authorities nor the courts are justified in virtually amending a taxing act because they are of the opinion that Congress may have had or should have had a different intention than that which was expressed in the act. There would seem to be nothing unreasonable in a rule of construction which requires legislative bodies, in enacting taxing statutes, to use language of sufficient clarity to be understood by an ordinarily intelligent taxpayer as well as by those who are required to administer and to interpret the statutes."

"Resort may be had to explanatory legislative history, no matter how clear the statutory words may appear on superficial examination."

"The construction of a statute by those charged with its execution should be followed unless there are compelling indications that is wrong. Lewis v. Martin, 397 U.S. 552, 90 S.Ct. 1282, 25 L.Ed.2d. 561 (1970); United States v. Radio Television News Directors Ass'n., 395 U.S. 367, 89 S.Ct. 1794, 23 L.Ed.2d. 371 (1969); Zemel v. Rusk, 381 U.S. 1, 85 S.Ct. 1271, 14 L.Ed.2d. 179 (1965)."

"Here, it is proper to invoke the well known rule of construction that in cases of doubt, a taxing statute must be construed most strongly in favor of the taxpayer and against the government. Tax statutes are not to be extended by implication beyond clear import of language used and, in case of doubt, are construed most strongly against government." Hecht v. Malley, 265 U.S. 144, 44 S.Ct. 462, 68 L.Ed. 949 (1924); Gould v. Gould, 245 U.S. 151, 38 S.Ct. 53, 62 L.Ed. 211 (1917)."

"In construing a revenue act, we presume that the legislative authority uses words in their ordinary sense and with the meanings commonly attributable to them. Commissioner v. Plestcheeff, 100 F.2d. 62 (C.A.9 1938). Where the statute does not define the words used, they must be accepted in their ordinary everyday meaning. Herring Magic v. Tax Analysts and Advocates v. Schultz (June 7, 1974)

"No administrative practice, no matter how long standing, can override a clearly applicable decision by Supreme Court."

"The Court concludes that no statutory provision confers absolute and unfettered discretion with which the defendants would have this Court endow the Treasury Department and Internal Revenue Service in connection with the administration and interpretation of the Internal Revenue Code." [Bold added.]

Albigese v. Jersey City (Aug. 7, 1974)

Sovereignty and Freedom Points and Authorities

"It is a recognized tenet of municipal law that the term "ordinance" encompasses matters legislative in character, while the term "resolution" refers to matters administrative or procedural in nature."

"Amendment or reenactment of legislation required initially to be enacted by ordinance must be accomplished by the same means and may not be done by resolution."

"Unquestionably, the ordinance before us represents an exercise of legislative power. Thus, its enactment by ordinance and not by resolution was required. Amendment or reenactment of legislation required initially to be enacted by ordinance must be accomplished by the same means and may not be done by resolution."

"Hence, the municipality's extension of the rent stabilization ordinance by resolution is invalid."

[Albigese v. Jersey City, 324 A.2d. 577 (1974)]

Palmore v. Superior Court of District of Columbia (July 9, 1975)

"Statutes should be interpreted to avoid difficult constitutional questions."

"Statutory construction is, at best, an imperfect science." "Generalities about statutory construction are not rules of law but merely axioms of experience."

"Congress may not exercise its power, whether explicitly or implicitly derived from the Constitution, in a manner inconsistent with the limitations on government power contained elsewhere in the document."

"Congressional silence, when contrasted with extended Constitutional debates over other proposals, yields conclusion that Congress did not intend statute to have constitutionally-suspect effect."

"If local courts of District of Columbia withhold effective remedies, the federal courts have the power and duty to provide it."

[Palmore v. Superior Court of District of Columbia, 515 F.2d. 1294 (1975)]

United States v. Cotroni (Dec. 22, 1975)

"Unless contrary intent appears, federal statutes apply only within territorial jurisdiction of United States."

"Our holding in Toscanino comports with the canon of construction which teaches that, unless a contrary intent appears, federal statutes apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. Foley Brothers v. Filardo, 336 U.S. 281, 285, 69 S.Ct. 575, 93 L.Ed. 680 (1949); Air-Line Stewards and Stewardesses Association International v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 273 F.2d. 69, 70 (2d Cir. 1959) (per curiam), cert. denied, 362 U.S. 988, 80 S.Ct. 1075, 4 L.Ed.2d. 1021 (1960)."

United States v. Levy (June 21, 1976)

"When enacting §7206(1) Congress undoubtedly knew that the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to prescribe all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of the internal revenue laws, so long as they carry into effect the will of Congress as expressed by the statutes. Such regulations have the force of law. The Secretary, however, does not have the power to make law, Dixon v. United States, supra."

"The Supreme Court, as most properly it should have, has repeatedly warned that men of common intelligence cannot be required to guess at the meaning of a penal enactment."

"That a taxpayer, at the ad hoc discretion of a government officer, agent or employee, without any supporting statute or regulation, may be required to give a statement, of whatever kind, and thereafter be declared a felon in connection with such a statement is at war with the Constitutional due process required of all criminal prosecutions. Whatever else it may have intended, we find ourselves unpersuaded that Congress intended that."

"From the standpoint of the strict construction required of criminal statutes, we cannot hold that 26 U.S.C. §7602 requires a person to answer questions and sign a statement under the penalties of perjury rather than testifying under oath."

"We do not believe that Congress intended a conviction of felony to be founded upon any and all forms which any revenue agent, officer, or employee, in his own discretion, might choose ad hoc to use in the interrogation of a taxpayer. Due process requires that the taxpayer have notice, by statute or by appropriate regulation duly promulgated thereunder, of the uses to which forms may be put before he may be prosecuted for a felony in connection therewith."

[United States v. Levy, 533 F.2d. 969 (1976)]

United States v. Pomponio (Oct. 12, 1976)

"In Bishop we held that the term "willfully" has the same meaning in the misdemeanor and felony sections of the Revenue Code, and that it requires more than a showing of careless disregard for the truth. We did not, however, hold that the term requires proof of any motive other than an intentional violation of a known legal duty. We explained the meaning of willfulness in §77206 and related statutes:

"The Court, in fact, has recognized that the word 'willfully' in these statutes generally connotes a voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal duty. It has formulated the requirement of willfulness as 'bad faith or evil intent, [cite omitted], or 'evil motive and want of justification in view of all the financial circumstances of the taxpayer, [cite omitted], or knowledge that the taxpayer 'should have reported more income than he did.'"

Our references to other formulations of the standard did not modify the standard set forth in the first sentence of the quoted paragraph. On the contrary, as the other Courts of Appeals that have considered the question have recognized, willfulness in this context simply means a voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal duty."

Continental Equities, Inc. v. C.I.R. (Apr. 25, 1977)

"The Tax Reform Act of 1969 did not grant the tax court jurisdiction over equitable claims; it does not follow from the fact that the tax court is now an Article I "legislative court" that it possesses or was intended to possess the full judicial power that is vested in "constitutional courts" created by Congress under Article III,- which it had not possessed before." "A taxpayer challenging the validity of a treasury regulation faces a difficult task. Since Congress has expressly delegated rule making authority to the Secretary of the Treasury, 26 U.S.C.A. §7805(a) (1967); United States v. Cartwright, 411 U.S. 546, 550, 93 S.Ct. 1713, 1716, 36 L.Ed.2d. 528, 533 (1973), treasury regulations are valid legislative rules if they are "(a) within the granted power, (b) issued pursuant to proper procedure, and (c) reasonable." 1 K. Davis, Administrative Law Treatise §5.03, p. 299 (1958) & §29.01-1, p. 654 (Supp.1976); Yellow Freight System, Inc. v. United States, 538 F.2d. 790, 796 (5th Cir. 1976)."

[Continental Equities, Inc. v. C.I.R., 551 F.2d. 74 (1977)]

United States v. Keller (May 22, 1978)

"Law of nations permits exercise of criminal jurisdiction by nation under five general principles: territorial, wherein jurisdiction is based on place where offense is committed; national, wherein jurisdiction is based on nationality or national character of offender; protective, wherein jurisdiction is based on whether national interest is injured; universal, which amounts to physical custody of offender; and passive personal, wherein jurisdiction is based on nationality or national character of victim."

"For purpose of this case we believe the key language in Paragraph (1) to be " . . . any vessel belonging in whole or in part to . . . any citizen . . . [of the United States]." We know of no case which interprets the term "belonging" within the framework of this legislation. Furthermore, the legislative history of this provision is sketchy. We will therefore accept this term in its common usage, which we take it to be as denoting ownership. Black's Law Dictionary, Fourth Ed., p. 198. Thus, if the GREAT MYSTERY was owned totally or partially by any citizen of the United States, the vessel is subject to the operation of 18 U.S.C. §7(1).

"Ownership is a mixed question of law and fact, and at this stage of the proceedings, to be determined by the Court."

"Defendants nevertheless challenge the Coast Guard's actions claiming that a warrant was required for the boarding and search, because "no Act of Congress can authorize a violation of the Constitution." (Almeida v. United States, 413 U.S. 266, 272, 93 S.Ct. 2535, 2539, 37 L.Ed.2d. 596 (1972)), a statement which cannot be quarreled with, but which we consider misapplied to the circumstances of this case."

United States v. Home (Aug. 22, 1983)

"Rules contained in Internal Revenue Manual, even if they were codified in Code of Federal Regulations, did not have force and effect of law, and therefore, district court, in Government's action to collect assessment, correctly precluded defendant from introducing evidence concerning these provisions."

"Defendant's acknowledged failure to file administrative claim, which was prerequisite to bringing suit in district court, was entirely proper ground for district court's dismissal of his counterclaim for refund of amount paid by him in partial satisfaction of assessment."

Limbach v. Hooven & Allison Co. (Apr. 18, 1984)

"Supreme Court's decision in Michelin Tire Corp. v. Wages, which specifically abandoned the concept that the import-export clause constituted a broad prohibition against all forms of state taxation that fell on imports, changed the focus of import-export clause cases from whether the goods have lost their status as imports to whether the tax sought to be imposed is an "impost or duty"; thus, prior decision in Hooven & Allison Co. L. Evatt, U.S. 652, 65 S.Ct. 870, 89 L.Ed. 1252, which held unconstitutional Ohio's application of a nondiscriminatory ad valorem personal property tax to imported fibers still in their original packages, does not retain validity and is overruled to extent that it espoused original-package doctrine."

United States v. Wodtke (Dec. 26, 1985)

"If construction of section of United States Code, which has not been enacted into positive law, is necessary, recourse must be had to original statutes themselves."

"Internal Revenue Code [26 U.S.C.A. §1 et seq.] is a positive law; therefore district court had jurisdiction over action to reduce tax assessments to judgment."

"Validity of enactment of constitutional amendment is not a justiciable issue but is a political question upon which courts cannot rule."

"Sixteenth Amendment [U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 16] is constitutional."

"Taxpayer has burden of proving assessment is in error and proving his or her correct tax liability."

"If construction of a section of the United States Code which has not been enacted into positive law is necessary, recourse must be had to the original statutes themselves. [Cite omitted.] Under §204, the United States Code cannot prevail over the statutes at large if the two are inconsistent."

"The validity of the enactment of a constitutional amendment is not a justiciable issue. It is a political question upon which the courts cannot rule."

"The validity of the Sixteenth Amendment was first upheld nearly seventy years ago in Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 240 U.S. 1, 36 S.Ct. 236, 60 L.Ed. 493 (1916). Recent decisions have been no different. [Cites omitted.] The defendants' argument that the Sixteenth Amendment is a nullity is rejected."

"Section 6502(a) provides for a six-year period for tax collection. However, the six-year period is extended if the Government commences suit to reduce the liability to judgment within that period."

Maisano v. Welcher (July 30, 1991)

"Court proceedings were not required before levy by Internal Revenue Service (IRS) to collect deficiency."

"This court has held that the IRS is authorized to collect taxes by either levy or court proceeding. Maisano, 908 F.2d. at 409 (citing 26 U.S.C. §6502(a); Todd v. United States, 849 F.2d. 365, 369 (9th Cir.1988); Stonecipher v. Bray, 653 F.2d. 398, 403 (9th Cir.1981) cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1145, 102 S.Ct. 1006, 71 L.Ed.2d. 297 (1982))."

"The Maisanos' first claim rests on an attempt to limit the scope of section 6331 by narrowly defining "assets subject to levy" to include only certain "narrow exceptions" (i.e. wages of government employees) mentioned in the provisions of section 6331 itself. However, their reading ignores the first sentence of section 6331(a), which gives the statute its broad scope and clearly states that it applies to all property of any person liable to the IRS."

"Section 6502 gives the IRS the option to collect its assessments by either a levy or a court proceeding, and this court has held that taxpayers do not have the right to a hearing prior to collection efforts by the IRS. See Maisano, 908 F.2d. at 409. Section 6322 merely specifies the length of time that either a lien or a judgment shall remain valid."

Security Bank Minnesota v. C.I.R. (May 21, 1993)

"The Supreme Court has noted that "the true meaning of a single section of a statute in a setting as complex as that of the revenue acts, however precise its language, cannot be ascertained if it be considered apart from related sections, or if the mind be isolated from the history of the income tax legislation of which it is an integral part." Helvering v. Morgan's Inc., 293 U.S. 121, 126, 55 S.Ct. 60, 62, 79 L.Ed. 232 (1934). According to the Court, the construing court's duty is "to find that interpretation which can most fairly be said to be embedded in the statute, in the sense of being most harmonious with its scheme and with the general purposes that Congress manifested." Commissioner v. Engle, 464 U.S. 206, 216, 104 S.Ct. 597, 604, 78 L.Ed.2d. 420 (1984); (quoting *NLRB v. Boske v. Comingore (Jan. 8, 1900)

"Congress has a large discretion as to the means to be employed in the execution of a power conferred upon it, and is not restricted to "those alone without which the power would be nugatory;" for, "all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted" to the end authorized to be attained, "which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional." "Where the law is not prohibited, and is really calculated to effect any of the objects entrusted to the Government, to undertake here to inquire into the degree of its necessity would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department and to tread on legislative ground." McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 415, 421, 423, 4 L.Ed. 579, 603, 605. In the more recent case of Logan v. United States, 144 U.S. 263, 283, 293, 36 L.Ed. 429, 435, 439, 12 Sup.Ct.Rep. 617, 622, 626, this court, referring to the above constitutional provision, said that "in the exercise of this general power of legislation, Congress may use any means, appearing to it most eligible and appropriate, which are adapted to the end to be accomplished, and are consistent with the letter and the spirit of the Constitution." "

"Can it be said that to invest the Secretary of the Treasury with authority to prescribe regulations not inconsistent with law for the conduct of the business of his department, and to provide for the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it, was not a means appropriate and plainly adapted to the successful administration of the affairs of that Department? Manifestly not."

C.I.R. v. Van Vorst (June 24, 1932)

"Department regulations cannot invade field of legislation, but must be confined within limits of congressional enactment."

"Validity of Treasury Department regulation or tax imposed thereunder must be determined by statutory provisions, interpreted in light of Constitution."

"Sections of Revenue Act, defining "dividend" and "gross income," must be construed in light of constitutional income x945-971 provision."

"It is well settled that department regulations may not invade the field of legislation but must be confined within the limits of congressional enactment. [* * *] A regulation to be valid must be reasonable and must be consistent with law."

"In Utah Power & Light Co. v. United States, 243 U.S. 389, 410, 37 S.Ct. 387, 392, 61 L.Ed. 791, this expression appears: "If any of the regulations go beyond what Congress can authorize, or beyond what it has authorized, those regulations are void and may be disregarded; but not so of such as are thought merely to be illiberal, inequitable, and not conducive to the best results."

"In Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189, 207, 40 S.Ct. 189, 193, 64 L.Ed. 521, 9 A.L.R. 1570, referring to the Sixteenth Amendment, the Supreme Court said: "Income may be defined as the gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined, provided it be understood to include profit gained through a sale or conversion of capital assets.

"Referring to this definition, in Taft v. Bowers, 278 U.S. 470, 481, 49 S.Ct. 199, 201, 73 L.Ed. 460, 64 A.L.R. 362, the court said: "The 'gain derived from capital, within the definition, is 'not a gain accruing to capital, nor a growth or increment of value in the investment, but a gain, a profit, something of exchangeable value proceeding from the property, severed" from the capital however invested, and coming in, that is, received or drawn by the claimant for his separate use, benefit and disposal.' United States v. Phellis, 257 U.S. 156, 169, 42 S.Ct. 63, 65 (66 L.Ed. 180)."

"In so far as the section of the statute relating to "gross income" has any bearing on the question here involved, it reads: "The term 'gross income' includes gains, profits, and income derived from * * * sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property." [Bold added.] [Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Van Vorst, 59 F.2d. 677 (1932)]

Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan (Jan. 7, 1935)

"Constitution forbids Congress to abdicate or transfer its essential legislative functions, but does not deny to Congress necessary resources of flexibility and practicality which will enable it to perform its function in laying down policies and establishing standards while leaving to selected instrumentalities making of subordinate rules within prescribed limits and determination of facts to which policy as declared by Legislature is to apply (const. art. 1, §1, and §8, par. 18).

"Regulations of executive officers pursuant to power conferred by Congress for administering laws governing their departments become binding rules of conduct, but are valid only as subordinate rules and when found to be within framework of policy which Legislature has sufficiently defined."

.. President, if allowed to act without showing compliance with such prerequisites as might be specified in act, would be invested with uncontrolled legislative power (National Industrial Recovery Act §9 (c), 15 U.S.C.A. §709 (C); Executive Order No. 6199 [15 U.S.C.A. §709 note]; (Const. art. 1, §1, and §8, par. 18). [Brackets original.]

"The validity of the provision was challenged as a delegation to the President of legislative power. The Court reviewed the early acts to which we have referred, as well as later statutes considered to be analogous. While sustaining the provision, the Court emphatically declared that the principle that "congress cannot delegate legislative power to the president" is "universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the constitution.""

"So, also, from the beginning of the government, the Congress has conferred upon executive officers the power to make regulations--"not for the government of their departments, but for administering the laws which did govern." United States v. Grimaud, 220 U.S. 506, 517, 31 S.Ct. 480, 483, 55 L.Ed. 563. Such regulations become, indeed, binding rules of conduct, but they are valid only as subordinate rules and when found to be within the framework of the policy which the Legislature has sufficiently defined."

"Thus, in every case in which the question has been raised, the Court has recognized that there are limits of delegation which there is no constitutional authority to transcend."

"To hold that he [the president] is free to select as he chooses from the many and various objects generally described in the first section, and then to act without making any finding with respect to any object that he does select, and the circumstances properly related to that object, would be in effect to make the conditions inoperative and to invest him with an uncontrolled legislative power."

"To repeat, we are concerned with the question of the delegation of legislative power. If the citizen is to be punished for the crime of violating a legislative order of the executive officer, or of a board or commission, due process of law requires that it shall appear that the order is within the authority of the officer, board, or commission, and, if that authority depends on determinations of fact, those determinations must be shown. [* * *] When, therefore, such an administrative agency is required as a condition precedent to an order, to make a finding of facts, the validity of the order must rest upon the needed finding. If it is lacking, the order is ineffective."

Manhattan General Equipment Co. v. C.I.R. (Feb. 3, 1936)

"The power of an administrative officer or board to administer a federal statute and to prescribe rules and regulations to that end is not the power to make law, no such power can be delegated by Congress, but the power to adopt regulations to carry into effect the will of Congress as expressed by the statute. A regulation which does not do this, but operates to create a rule out of harmony with the statute, is a mere nullity. Lynch v. Tilden Produce Co., 265 U.S. 315, 320-322, 44 S.Ct. 488, 68 L.Ed. 1034; Miller v. United States, 294 U.S. 435, 439, 440, 55 S.Ct. 440, 79 L.Ed. 977, and cases cited.

And not only must a regulation, in order to be valid, be consistent with the statute, but it must be reasonable. International R. Co. v. Davidson, 257 U.S. 506, 514, 42 S.Ct. 179, 66 L.Ed. 341."

Trading Associates Corporation v. Magruder (Jan. 8, 1940)

"Regulations of an administrative body, such as regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, are not controlling on a court, if they are not in conformity with a proper interpretation of the law which they purport to construe. "

"That interpretation of a section of the internal revenue law imposing a surtax on personal holding companies but excepting from its operation "regular dealers in stocks and securities," would appear to inflict some hardship upon a particular taxpayer, would not render such interpretation invalid since such question relates to the character or policy of the law itself and to other features of it rather than to the particular part involved."

"It is axiomatic that regulations of an administrative body do not control, if they are not in conformity with a proper interpretation of the law which they purport to construe. In other words, such regulations are not to be given the force of law unless they really carry out the intent of the legislative body, as expressed in the law itself."

"Detention of an alien under an invalid order of deportation is established where deportation is ordered for reasons not specified by Congress. Immigration Act of 1918, §§1-3, as amended, 8 U.S.C.A. §137 (c, 3-g)."

"Under Regulations of the Immigration and Naturalization Service rules that statements to be used in evidence shall be in writing, that officer shall ask person interrogated to sign the statement, that interrogation shall be under oath or affirmation after warning, and that a recorded statement may be received in evidence only if its maker is unavailable or refuses to testify or testifies contrary to the statement, investigating officer must obtain statement under oath and seek to have it signed, and only such a recorded statement may be used as evidence when the maker gives contradictory evidence."

"The Regulations of Immigration and Naturalization Service relating to evidence were designed to afford due process of law to the alien, who may insist upon an observance thereof."

"The more liberal the practice in admitting testimony in administrative proceedings, the more imperative the obligation to preserve the essential rules of evidence by which rights are asserted or defended."

"The rules are designed to protect the interests of the alien and to afford him due process of law. It is the action of the deciding body, not the recommendation of the inspector, which determines whether the alien will be deported."

"The method for accomplishing a levy on a bank account is the issuing of warrants of distraint, the making of the bank a party, and the serving with notice of levy, copy of the warrants of distraint, and notice of lien."

"It would seem to require not much exposition to demonstrate that when the sovereign establishes any priority in its favor, and imposes certain conditions upon the enforcement of that right, it is required to comply with the conditions which it has laid down."

"The regulation here in question represents an effort by the Commissioner to supply the definitions that Congress omitted. And it is fundamental, of course, that as "contemporaneous constructions by those charged with administration of" the Code, the Regulations "must be sustained unless unreasonable and plainly inconsistent with the revenue statutes," and "should not be overruled except for weighty reasons." Commissioner v. South Texas Lumber Co., 333 U.S. 496, 501, 92 L.Ed. 831, 836, 68 S.Ct. 695. In this respect our statement last Term in United States v. Correll, 389 U.S. 299, 19 L.Ed.2d. 537, 88 S.Ct. 445, bears emphasis:

""[W]e do not sit as a committee of revision to perfect the administration of the tax Laws. Congress has delegated to the Commissioner, not to the courts, the task of prescribing all 'needful rules and regulations for the enforcement' of the Internal Revenue Code. 26 U.S.C. §7805(a). In this area of limitless factual variations, 'it is the province of Congress and the Commissioner, not the courts, to make the appropriate adjustments'." Id., at 306-307, 19 L.Ed.2d. at 543."

United States v. Heffner (Jan. 6, 1970)

"Government agency must scrupulously observe rules or procedures which it has established and when it fails to do so its action cannot stand and courts will strike it down."

An agency of the Government must scrupulously observe rules, regulations, or procedures which it has established. When it fails to do so, its action cannot stand and courts will strike it down. This doctrine was announced in United States ex rel. Accardi v. Shaughnessy, 347 U.S. 260, 74 S.Ct. 499, 98 L.Ed. 681 (1954)."

"These cases are consistent with the doctrine's purpose to prevent the arbitrariness which is inherently characteristic of an agency's violation of its own procedures. As the Second Circuit said in Hammond v. Lenfest, 398 F.2d. at 715, cited with approval in United States ex rel. Brooks v. Clifford, 409 F.2d. at 706, departures from an agency's procedures "cannot be reconciled with the fundamental principle that ours is a government of laws, not men." ... The document purports to establish certain procedures which Special Agents are "required" to follow. Undoubtedly, a failure to comply is a rare event within the Intelligence Division--a fact which highlights the apparently inadvertent failure to give the warnings here. Furthermore, a reversal here would not only have the salutary effect of encouraging IRS agents to observe their own procedures, L. Jaffe, Judicial Control of Administrative Action 369 (1965), cited with approval in Smith v. Resor, 406 F.2d. at 146, but would assist the IRS in fulfilling its own important purpose in requiring that the warnings be given. For the announcement of the instructions was coupled with the justification that they would insure "uniformity in protecting the Constitutional rights of all persons."

McMartin Industries, Inc. v. Viral (Apr. 26, 1971)

"The trial court correctly noted that the regulation must be sustained unless unreasonable and plainly inconsistent with the revenue statutes, see, Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. South Texas Lumber Co., 333 U.S. 496, 501, 68 S.Ct. 695, 92 L.Ed. 831 (1948); Harper Oil Company v. United States, 425 F.2d. 1335, 1343 (10th Cir. 1970), and that the court's role in cases of this sort begins and ends with assuring that the Commissioner's regulations fall within his authority to implement the congressional mandate in some reasonable manner. See United States v. Correll, 389 U.S. 299, 307, 88 S.Ct. 445, 19 L.Ed.2d. 537 (1967); Rhodes Refrigeration, Inc. v. United States, 435 U.S. 1280 (9th Cir. 1970). It also noted that Revenue Rulings are entitled to weight in the interpretative process. See, United States v. Hall, 398 F.2d. 383, 387 (8th Cir. 1968). But it found that the regulation could not be given effect because it unduly limited the exemption granted by Congress, and that the Revenue Ruling was without basis in fact or law. It reached its conclusions by carefully examining the language and the legislative history of sections 4141 and 4143(a)."

H. Wetter Manufacturing Company v. United States (Apr. 13, 1972)

"Express words of the Internal Revenue Code must control when they conflict with a regulation, and the Secretary may not broaden or narrow the specific provisions of the Code."

"A court may not enforce a treasury regulation which is plainly inconsistent with revenue statute."

"Like other extrinsic aids to construction of a statute, the use of legislative history is to solve, not to create, an ambiguity."

"Where the provisions of an act are unambiguous, and its direction specific, the Secretary of the Treasury has no power to amend the statute by regulation."

"Because Congress has delegated to the Secretary of the Treasury only the power to issue regulations for the enforcement of the revenue laws, and because this power is limited to carrying into effect the will of the Congress as expressed by the statutes, the express words of the Code must control when they conflict with a regulation. The Secretary may not broaden or narrow the specific provisions of the revenue laws. In 1967, this Court approved the observation of the Eighth Circuit that "[t]he Commissioner has no more power to add to the Act what he thinks Congress may have overlooked than he has to supply what Congress has deliberately omitted." General Electric Co. v. Burton, 372 F.2d. 108, 111 (6th Cir. 1967). A court may not enforce a regulation which is plainly inconsistent with the revenue statute. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. South Texas Lumber Co., 333 U.S. 496, 501, 68 S.Ct. 695, 92 L.Ed. 831 (1948); Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Netcher, 143 F.2d. 484, 487 (7th Cir. 1944)." [H. Wetter Manufacturing Company v. United States, 458 F.2d. 1033 (1972)]

Berends v. Butz (March 20, 1973)

"Federal district court had jurisdiction, under statute relating to acts to compel an officer of the United States to perform his duty, of farmers' class action in the nature of mandamus to compel Secretary of Agriculture and certain subordinate officials of the United States Department of Agriculture, Farmers Home Administration, to perform administrative duties owed plaintiffs with respect to emergency loan program."

"Validly issued regulations of an administrative agency have force and effect of statutes."

"Failure of an administrative agency to follow its own established procedures constitutes a violation of procedural due process."

"Under applicable regulations, Secretary of Agriculture had no absolute authority to halt emergency loan program in areas designated by him as emergency loan areas."

"It is not role of courts to pass upon necessity or soundness of a duly promulgated law; likewise, an administrator should not engage in such practice."

"The doctrine of sovereign immunity, raised by defendants, is inapplicable since plaintiffs contend that the defendants' action were beyond the scope of their authority or they were acting unconstitutionally." [Bold added.]

"Shall is mandatory language. The only sensible reading of these statutes requires the Secretary to apply emergency loan benefits to all loans qualifying under these provisions."

"Not only was the administrative action taken in excess of statutory authority, but it also was in violation of the duly promulgated regulations set up by the Department of Agriculture. Validly issued regulations of an administrative agency have the force and effect of statutes. See, Sheridan-Wyoming Coal Co. v. Krug, 84 U.S.App.D.C. 288, 172 F.2d. 282 (1949). The failure of an administrative agency to follow its own established procedures constitutes a violation of procedural due process. Vitarelli v. Seaton, 359 U.S. 535, 79 S.Ct. 968, 3 L.Ed.2d. 1012 (1959); Service v. Dulles, 354 U.S. 363, 77 S.Ct. 1152, 1 L.Ed.2d. 1403 (1957); Accardi v. Shaughnessy, 347 U.S. 260, 74 S.Ct. 499, 98 L.Ed. 681 (1954). As stated in United States v. Heffner, 420 F.2d. 809, 812 (4th Cir. 1970):

An agency of the government must scrupulously observe rules, regulations, or procedures which it has established.

When it fails to do so, its action cannot stand and courts will strike it down."

"However, under the applicable regulations the Secretary has no absolute authority to halt the emergency loan program in those areas designated as emergency loan areas. The language of the regulation is clear that emergency loans will be made available in the counties so designated. The language in the regulations is mandatory and the Secretary is directed to consider applications for emergency loans in designated areas. The refusal to consider applications for emergency loans in designated areas is a violation of the Department's regulations."

"The rights of individuals in so important a matter as procuring emergency relief to help restore damage caused by a natural disaster should not be at the mercy of the whims of an administrator. The unilateral termination of the program without notice to the Minnesota farmers offends all traditional notions of fair play. The people have a right to expect better treatment from their government. [Bold added.] "The failure to give notice prior to the termination of the loan program is also in violation of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. §551 et seq. As stated by Judge, now Chief Justice Burger in Gonzalez v. Freeman, supra: The command of the Administrative Procedure Act is not a mere formality. Those who are called upon by the government for countless variety of goods and services are entitled to have notice of the standards and procedures which regulate these relationships. 334 F.2d. at 578."

"Inherent in these provisions is the concept that the public is entitled to be informed as to the procedures and practices of a governmental agency, so as to be able to govern their actions accordingly."

United States v. Coleman (May 7, 1973)

United States v. Fukushima (Feb. 26, 1974)

"To reiterate, not even under any of the authorities cited by the defendant can this court conclude that the failure on the part of the special agent to use the magic word "criminal" in stating the purpose of his investigation is a "substantial" deviation from the IRS procedures so as to permit this court to find that a constitutional right of the defendant has been encroached upon thereby. This court does not agree with Heffner or Leahey, or the circuit court in Bembridge, that the IRS publication of investigative procedures raises those procedures to the stature of constitutional rights under the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. Moreover, even if it felt otherwise, this court believes that it would be constrained by the consistent opinions of the Ninth Circuit, as indicated by Robson, to hold that the IRS published procedures did not in the slightest erode or in any manner circumscribe the viability of the law on IRS non-custodial warnings, as set forth in Robson."

[United States v. Fukushima, 373 F.Supp. 212 (1974)]

United States v. Ginsburg (Mar. 5, 1974)

"Due process clause proscribes inconsistent and unequal treatment generated by a governmental agency's violation of its own regulations"

"Treasury regulation requiring financial institutions to report to Federal Reserve bank the name of any person or organization involved in a currency transaction of $10,000 or more is specific and concise and is not so vague as to virtually guarantee unequal treatment."

"Under the Bank Secrecy Act, delegation of duty of initial review to another agency cannot serve to preempt the delegating agency from receiving the same information. 12 U.S.C.A. §1829b, 31 U.S.C.A. §§1051-1122."

"Federal Reserve bank did not abuse its power in transmitting to Secretary of Treasury, who initially issued regulation requiring banks to report persons involved in cash transactions of $10,000 or more, banking form required by the regulation nor did Secretary abuse his power in making interdepartmental transfer of the information to the Internal Revenue Service. Trading with the Enemy Act, §5(b)(1), 50 U.S.C.A. App. §5(b)(1)."

"Even if transmission of banking form in which taxpayers involvement in cash transaction of $10,000 was reported and which led to investigation of taxpayers from Federal Reserve bank to Internal Revenue Service was unauthorized, where there was no evidence that Government resorted to coercion, fraud, trickery or deceit in obtaining the information, the transfer would not require application of exclusionary rule to the information."

"Where divulgence of information that taxpayers had engaged in currency transaction involving $10,000 was not coerced from the taxpayers, taxpayers had no standing to challenge bank's disclosure, pursuant to Treasury Department regulation, of that information from its own records to the Department of the Treasury."

"To qualify as an "aggrieved person" within the meaning of Rule 41(e), F.R.Crim.P., a defendant must be the victim of the search and seizure, "one against whom the search was directed, as distinguished from one who claims prejudice only through the use of evidence gathered as a consequence of a search directed at someone else." United States v. Masterson, supra at 613. Since the divulgence of the potentially incriminating evidence was not coerced from the defendants in the case-at-bar, they have no standing to nullify the receipt of the disclosure from a party with whom they have no protected confidential relationship."

California Bankers Association, The v. Shultz (Apr. 1, 1974)

"These appeals present questions concerning the constitutionality of the so-called Bank Secrecy Act of 1970, and the implementing regulations promulgated thereunder by the Secretary of the Treasury. ... Under the Act, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe by regulation certain recordkeeping and reporting requirements for banks and other financial institutions in this country. Because it has a bearing on our treatment of some of the issues raised by the parties, we think it important to note that the Act's civil and criminal penalties attach only upon violation of regulations promulgated by the Secretary; if the Secretary were to do nothing, the Act itself would impose no penalties on anyone." p. 820.

"Incorporated banks, like other organizations, have no privilege against self-incrimination."

"Neither incorporated nor unincorporated associations can plead an unqualified right to conduct their affairs in secret."

"Plaintiffs in the federal courts must allege some threatened or actual injury resulting from a putatively illegal action" before a federal court may assume jurisdiction; there must be a personal stake in the outcome such as to assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues upon which the court so largely depends for illumination of difficult constitutional questions."

"The bank plaintiffs, being corporations, have no constitutional privilege against compulsory self-incrimination by virtue of the Fifth Amendment. Hale v. Henkel, 201 U.S. 43, 74-75, 50 L.Ed. 652, 26 S.Ct. 370."

"Because it has a bearing on our treatment of some of the issues raised by the parties, we think it important to note that the Act's civil and criminal penalties attach only upon violation of regulations promulgated by the Secretary; if the Secretary were to do nothing, the Act itself would impose no penalties on anyone."

"Section 241 of the Act, 31 U.S.C. § 1121 [31 U.S.C.S. § 1121], authorizes the Secretary to prescribe regulations requiring residents and citizens of the United States, as well as nonresidents in the United States and doing business therein, to maintain records and file reports with respect to their transactions and relationships with foreign financial agencies. Pursuant to this authority, the regulations require each person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to make a report on yearly tax returns of any "financial interest in, or signature or other authority over, a bank, securities or other financial account in a foreign country." 31 C.F.R. § 103.24." However, he of course has the same duty as all other public officers of the state, embraced in the constitutional oath of office under Section 228 of the Constitution, of supporting the Constitution, and he is possessed of all common law powers and duties of the office except as modified by the Constitution or statutes."

Said cases point out that an individual has fifth amendment protection against self-incrimination. "42 U.S.C. §1988 (emphasis added): "In any action or proceeding to enforce a provision of sections 1981, 1982, 1983, 1985, and 1986 of this title, title IX of Public Law 92-318 [20 U.S.C. 1681 et seq.], or in any civil action or proceeding, by or on behalf of the United States of America, to enforce, or charging a violation of, a provision of the United States Internal Revenue Code, or title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 [42 U.S.C. 2000d et seq.], the court, in its discretion, may allow the prevailing party, other than the United States, a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs."

"Notice required by Administrative Procedure Act must be sufficient to fairly apprise interested parties of issues involved, and such notice must afford interested parties reasonable opportunity to participate in rule-making process."

"A "rule" or a "regulation" is the product of administrative legislation. A rule is analogous to a statute in that courts are bound by rules in the same way that courts are bound by statutes; this is because a rule is promulgated pursuant to agency authority delegated by Congress. Section 551 of the Administrative Procedure Act ("APA"), 5 U.S.C., defined a "rule" as follows:

"(4) 'rule' means the whole or part of an agency statement of general or particular applicability and future effect, designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy...."

"The APA requires that rules be published in the Federal Register absent an explicit exemption provided by the Act. 5 U.S.C. §553."

[United States v. $200,000 in United States Currency, 590 F.Supp. 866 (1984)]

First Federal Sav. and Loan Ass'n v. Goldman (July 29, 1986)

"Generally, regulation or procedure is binding upon agency when it has force and effect of law."

"Regulation has force and effect of law when it is promulgated by agency pursuant to mandate or delegation of authority by Congress and involves individual rights or obligations, while interpretative rules, general statements of policy, or rules of agency organization, procedure or practice are not binding upon the agency."

"Internal revenue manual was not promulgated pursuant to any mandate or delegation of authority by Congress so that procedures set forth in manual did not have effect of rule of law and therefore were not binding on Internal Revenue Service so that manual conveyed no rights to taxpayers and taxpayers could not allege noncompliance with those procedures to invalidate tax levies."

Montilla v. I.N.S. (Feb. 12, 1991)

"Notion of fair play animating the Fifth Amendment precludes agency from promulgating regulation affecting individual liberty or interest and then with impunity ignoring or disregarding regulation as it sees fit."

"Due process clause and Immigration and Nationality Act afford alien the right to counsel of his choice at his own expense in deportation proceeding."

"Rule that failure of administrative agency to follow its own established procedures is reversible error is not limited to procedures attaining status of formal regulations."

"Alien claiming that Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) has failed to adhere to its own regulations regarding right to counsel in deportation hearing is not required to make showing of prejudice before he is entitled to relief; all that need be shown is that subject regulations were for alien's benefit and that INS failed to adhere to them."

"Violation of agency regulation governing individual interest requires reversal irrespective of whether new hearing would produce same results."

The seeds of the Accardi doctrine are found in the long-settled principle that the rules promulgated by a federal agency, which regulate the rights and interests of others, are controlling upon the agency. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. v. United States, 316 U.S. 407, 422, 62 S.Ct. 1194, 1202, 86 L.Ed. 1563 (1942) (agency regulations on which individuals are entitled to rely bind agency)."

"The doctrine has been applied in other contexts, for example, in Service v. Dulles, 354 U.S. 363; 77 S.Ct. 1152, 1 L.Ed.2d. 1403 (1957) and Vitarelli v. Seaton, 359 U.S. 535, 79 S.Ct. 968, 3 L.Ed.2d. 1012 (1959), to vacate the discharges of government employees, and in Yellin v. United States, 374 U.S. 109, 83 S.Ct. 1828, 10 L.Ed.2d. 778 (1963), to overturn a criminal contempt conviction. This Circuit and other circuits have also used it. See, e.g., Smith v. Resor, 406 F.2d. 141, 145 (2d Cir.1969); United States v. Leahey, 434 F.2d. 7, 9-11 (1st Cir.1970); United States v. Heffner, 420 F.2d. 809, 812 (4th Cir.1969); Geiger v. Brown, 419 F.2d. 714, 718 (D.C.Cir.1969); Pacific Molasses Co. v. FTC, 356 F.2d. 386, 389-90 (5th Cir.1966).

"The Accardi doctrine is premised on fundamental notions of fair play underlying the concept of due process. See International House v. NLRB, 676 F.2d. 906, 912 (2d Cir.1982); Massachusetts Fair Share v. Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, 758 F.2d. 708, 711 (D.C.Cir.1985); K. Llewellyn, The Bramble Bush 43 (1951); Note, Violations by Agencies of Their Own Regulations, 87 Harv.L.Rev. 629 630 (1974). Its ambit is not limited to rules attaining the status of formal regulations. As the Supreme Court noted "[w]here the rights of individuals are affected, it is incumbent upon agencies to follow their own procedures. This is so even where the internal procedures are possibly more rigorous than otherwise would be required," and even though the procedural requirement has not yet been published in the federal register."

"Despite the existence of the long-settled Accardi rule, the government invites us to subject the instant petition to harmless error analysis, as the Ninth Circuit did in United States v. Calderon-Medina, 591 F.2d. 529 (9th Cir.1979). In that case, as in this, an alien challenged the validity of a deportation order claiming that the agency failed to adhere to its own regulations in reaching its decision. The court modified the Accardi analysis, ruling that an agency's violation of its own regulation does not invalidate a deportation proceeding unless (a) "the regulation serves a purpose of benefit to the alien," and (b) "the violation prejudiced interests of the alien which were protected by the regulation." Id. at 531.

"This holding followed the Supreme Court's decision in Morton where the Court said that before an individual may claim reversible error from an agency's failure to comply with its own procedures, he must show that the procedures "affect" his rights."

"The Accardi doctrine is still alive and well, and by applying this judicially-evolved rule ensuring fairness in administrative proceedings, we may avoid deciding the case on constitutional grounds, as urged by the parties. Such approach carefully adheres to a fundamental rule of judicial restraint, namely, if a case can be decided on nonconstitutional grounds, it should be. See Jean v. Nelson, 472 U.S. 846, 854, 105 S.Ct. 2992, 2996, 86 L.Ed.2d. 664 (1985); Ashwander v. TVA, 297 U.S. 288, 347, 56 S.Ct. 466, 483, 80 L.Ed. 688 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring)."

"For these reasons, we hold that an alien claiming the INS has failed to adhere to its own regulations regarding the right to counsel in a deportation hearing is not required to make a showing of prejudice before he is entitled to relief. All that need be shown is that the subject regulations were for the alien's benefit and that the INS failed to adhere to them." [Brackets original.]

Cottage Sav. Ass'n. v. C.I.R. (Apr. 17, 1991)

"Because Congress has delegated to the Commissioner the power to promulgate "all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of [the Internal Revenue Code]," 26 U.S.C. §7805(a), we must defer to his regulatory interpretations of tax code so long as they are reasonable, see National Muffler Dealers Assn., Inc., v. United States, 440 U.S. 472, 476-77, 99 S.Ct. 1304, 1306-1307, 59 L.Ed.2d. 519 (1979)." [Brackets original.]

Curley v. United States (Mar. 25, 1992)

"Plaintiff relies heavily on the Internal Revenue Manual ("IRM") in her argument that the assessment is procedurally invalid. However, the Internal Revenue Manual does not have the force and effect of law. United States v. New York Telephone Co., 644 F.2d. 953, 959 n.10 (2d Cir.1981). Since the IRM is not law, any alleged failure to adhere to its provisions will not necessarily result in an invalid assessment."

"However, failure to adhere to agency regulations may amount to a denial of due process if the regulations are required by the Constitution or a statute. See Arzanipour v. Immigration & Naturalization Service, 866 F.2d. 743, 746 (5th Cir.1989).... To invalidate an assessment, the government's action must also substantially prejudice the complaining party. Calderon-Ontiveros v. Immigration & Naturalization Service, 809 F.2d. 1050 (5th Cir. 1986)."

Flamingo Fishing Corp. v. United States (Dec. 9, 1994)

"Agency regulation should be upheld if court can conclude that it implements congressional mandate in some reasonable manner."

"Where Secretary of the Treasury promulgated regulation under his general authority to prescribe all needful rules and regulations, court owed interpretation less deference than regulation issued under specific grant of authority to define statutory term or prescribe method of executing statutory provision. 26 U.S.C.A. §7805(a)."

"In determining validity of regulation implementing statute, court looks to plain language of statute, its origin, and its purpose."

8.1 The Fundamental Nature of Taxes

Black's Law DictionaryL General Taxes

"GENERAL TAXES. Those imposed by and paid to state as a state which return taxpayer no special benefit other than the protection afforded him and his property by government, and promotion of schemes which have for their benefit the welfare of all. [Cites omitted.] A tax, imposed solely or primarily for purpose of raising revenue and merely granting person taxed right to conduct business or profession." [Cite omitted.]
[Black's Law Dictionary, Fourth Edition, 1951, p. 814]

18 U.S.C. §3283, History Notes

"Revenue" is the product or fruit of taxation. It matters not in what form the power of taxation may be exercised or to what subjects it may be applied, its exercise is intended to provide means for the support of the Government, and the means provided are necessarily to be regarded as the internal revenue.
[18 U.S.C. §3283, History Notes]

Black's Law Dictionary: Tribute

"TRIBUTE. A contribution which is raised by a prince or sovereign from his subjects to sustain the expenses of the state.

"A sum of money paid by an inferior sovereign or state to a superior potentate, to secure the friendship or protection of the latter."

[Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, p. 1676]

Black's Law Dictionary: Tax

"TAX, v. To impose a tax; to enact or declare that a pecuniary contribution shall be made by the persons liable, for the support of government. Spoken of an individual, to be taxed is to be included in an assessment made for purposes of taxation."

"Direct tax. One which is demanded from the very persons who, it is intended or desired, should pay it. Indirect taxes are those which are demanded from one person, in the expectation and intention that he shall indemnify himself at the expense of another. Mill, Pol. Econ. Taxes are divided into "direct," under which designation would be included those which are assessed upon the property, person, business, income, etc., of those who are to pay them, and "indirect," or those which are levied on commodities before they reach the consumer, and are paid by those upon whom they ultimately fall, not as taxes, but as part of the market price of the commodity. Cooley, Tax'n.

"Historical evidence shows that personal property, contracts, occupations, and the like, have never been regarded as the subjects of direct tax. The phrase is understood to be limited to taxes on land and its appurtenances, and on polls. Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. 533, 19 L.Ed. 482; Railroad Co. v. Morrow, 87 Tenn. 406, 11 S.W. 348, 2 L.R.A. 853; People v. Knight, 174 N.Y. 475, 67 N.E. 65, 63 L.R.A. 87."

"Indirect taxes are those demanded in the first instance from one person in the expectation and intention that he shall indemnify himself at the expense of another. "Ordinarily all taxes paid primarily by persons who can shift the burden upon some one else, or who are under no legal compulsion to pay them, are considered indirect taxes." Pollock v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 15 S.Ct. 673, 157 U.S. 429, 39 L.Ed. 759; Thomasson v. State, 15 Ind. 451; Foster & Creighton Co. v. Graham, 154 Term. 412, 285 S.W. 570, 572, 47 A.L.R. 971."

"TAX. A pecuniary burden imposed for the support of the government."

"A tax is a demand of sovereignty...."

"Taxes are not 'debts'; Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318; McKeesport v. Fidler, 147 Pa. 532, 23 Atl. 799; City Council of Charleston v. Phosphate Co., 34 S.C. 541, 13 S.E. 845;...."

[Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Vol. II, Third Revision, Eighth Edition, 1914, p. 3220]

Black's Law Dictionary: Excise

"EXCISE. An inland imposition, paid sometimes upon the consumption of the commodity, and frequently upon the retail sale.

"An excise has been defined as meaning tribute, custom, tax, tollage, or assessment, a fixed absolute and direct charge laid on merchandise, products, or commodities without any regard to amount of property belonging to those on whom it may fall, or to any supposed relation between money expended for a public object and a special benefit occasioned to those by whom the charge is to be paid.

"An excise is an impost for a license to pursue certain callings or to deal in special commodities or to exercise particular franchises. ... any tax not falling within classification of poll or property tax,...; any tax which is not directly on property or the rents or incomes from real estate,...; duties laid on manufacture, sale, or consumption of commodities, or upon certain callings or occupations,...; every form of charge imposed by public authority on performance of act, enjoyment of privilege, or engagement in occupation,...; every form of taxation which is not laid directly on persons or property.

...public charges on subjects other than manufacture and sale of commodities, such as licenses to pursue particular callings, franchises of corporations and particularly the franchise of corporate existence, and inheritance or succession of estates.

...something cut off from price paid on sale of goods as contribution to government,...; tax imposed on performance of act, engagement in occupation, or enjoyment of privilege,...; tax laid on manufacture, sale, or consumption of commodities or upon licenses to pursue certain occupations or upon corporate privileges.

"An 'excise tax' is often used as synonymous with 'privilege' or 'license tax'."

"The terms excise tax and privilege tax are synonymous."

"Tax and Excise Distinguished"

"A tax imposed directly by Legislature without assessment and measured by amount of business done, income previously received, or by extent to which privilege may have been enjoyed or exercised by the taxpayer, irrespective of nature or value of his assets or his investments in business, is excise tax while assessed tax on valuation of property is property tax.

"A 'property tax' is a visitational tax and is the taking of part of taxpayer's wealth, represented by property he owns for need of government, and is not an 'excise tax' for privilege of owning property for period of fiscal year.'

"A tax directly on property is a property tax; but a tax is an excise tax where it is not a tax on property as such, but on certain kinds of property, having reference to their origin and their intended use.

"An excise tax is an inland impost on articles of manufacture or sale, and also upon licenses to pursue certain trades, or to deal in certain commodities, and property tax is a tax which is not a capitation tax or a direct tax on land or personalty.

[Compare with definition two paragraphs above.]

"As usually used, 'franchise tax' is tax on intangible values inhering to business and added value given to tangible property, being 'ad valorem' as distinguished from 'excise' or 'privilege' tax."

"Income tax is a 'property tax' and not an 'excise tax.'"

"The words 'tax' and 'excise,' although often used as synonymous, are to be considered as having entirely distinct and separate significations, under Const.Mass. c. 1, §1, art. 4. The former is a charge apportioned either among the whole people of the state or those residing within certain districts, municipalities, or sections. It is required to be imposed, so that, if levied for the public charges of government, it shall be shared according to the estate, real and personal, which each person may possess; or, if raised to defray the cost of some local improvement of a public nature, it shall be borne by those who will receive some special and peculiar benefit or advantage which an expenditure of money for a public object may cause to those on whom the tax is assessed. An excise, on the other hand, is of a direct charge laid on merchandise, products, or commodities, without any regard to the amount of property belonging to those on whom it may fall, or to any supposed relation between money expended for a public object and a special benefit occasioned to those by whom the charge is to be paid." [All cites omitted.]

Bouvier's Law Dictionary: Income Tax

"Income Tax."

"In order to invoke the powers of a court of equity to restrain the collection of illegal taxes, the case must be brought within the well recognized foundations of equitable jurisdiction [* * *] and it must clearly appear not only that the tax is illegal, but that the property owner has no adequate remedy at law, and that there are special circumstances bringing the case under some recognized head of equity jurisdiction...." [Cites omitted.]

"Taxes become a lien on property only by statute...."

"Taxes illegally assessed and paid may always be recovered back, if the collector understands from the payor that the taxes are regarded as illegal and that suit will be instituted to compel the refunding of them; Erskine v. Van Arsdale, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 75 21 L.Ed. 63, a case of internal revenue taxes."

"Where a state officer receives money for a tax paid under duress with notice of its illegality, he has no right to it and the name of the state does not protect him from suit; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 223 U.S. 280, 32 Sup.Ct. 216, 56 L.Ed. 436, Ann.Cas. 1913C, 1050."

"The rule is firmly established that taxes voluntarily paid cannot be recovered back, and payments with knowledge and without compulsion are voluntary; when paid under protest or with notice of suit, a recovery may, on occasion, be had, although, generally speaking, even protest or notice will not avail if the payment be made voluntarily, with full knowledge, and without any coercion by the actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or supposed to be possessed, over person or property, from which there is no means of immediate relief than payment; *Chesebrough v. "Taxpayers

"The personal Income Tax Law imposes an income tax on individuals and on estates and trusts. The word "individual" as here used applies only to natural persons. However, such a person may be taxed either in a natural capacity or in a special capacity such as that of a partner or fiduciary.

"The personal income tax is levied not only on residents of the state, to the extent of their entire taxable income, but also on nonresidents, to the extent of taxable income derived from sources within the state. And the tax applies to the entire taxable income of an estate, if the decedent was a resident, and to the entire taxable income of a trust, if the fiduciary of beneficiary is a resident. A "resident" is any individual who is in the state for other than a temporary or transitory purpose, or any individual domiciled in this state who is outside the state for a temporary or transitory purpose. A "nonresident" is any individual other than a resident."

"ASSESSMENT. In a general sense, the process of ascertaining and adjusting the shares respectively to be contributed by several persons towards a common beneficial object according to the benefit received.

"Taxation

"The listing and valuation of property for the purpose of apportioning a tax upon it, either according to value alone or in proportion to benefit received. Also determining the share of a tax to be paid by each of many persons; or apportioning the entire tax to be levied among the different taxable" persons, establishing the proportion due from each. ""Assessment" and "levy" are frequently used interchangeably. [Cite omitted.] Though properly speaking it does not include the levy of taxes. [Cite omitted.] Assessment is also popularly used as synonym for taxation in general, the authoritative imposition of a rate or duty to be paid, but in its technical signification it is only taxation for a special purpose or local improvement, local taxation, as distinguished from general taxation; taxation on principle of apportionment according to the relation between burden and benefit; whole taxes are impositions for purpose of general revenue. [Cites omitted.]

An assessment is doubtless a tax, but the term implies something more; it implies a tax of a particular kind, predicated upon the principle of equivalents, or benefits, which are peculiar to the persons or property charged therewith, and which are said to be assessed or appraised, according to the measure or proportion of such equivalents; whereas a simple tax is imposed for the purpose of supporting the government generally, without reference to any special advantage which may be supposed to accrue to the persons taxed. Taxes must be levied, without discrimination, equally upon all the subjects of property; whilst assessments are only levied upon lands, or some other specific property, the subjects of the supposed benefits; to repay which the assessment is levied." [Bold added; cite omitted.]

Black's Law Dictionary: Gross Income

"GROSS INCOME. The term may mean the "gross receipts" of a business before deduction or expenditures for any purpose being equivalent to "gross proceeds" or "gross receipts" as distinguished from net income," which is that portion of the receipts which remain after paying wages and paying for materials, or, in the narrower sense, profits over and above interest on capital invested. First Trust Co. of St. Paul v. Commonwealth Co., C.C.A.S.D., 98 F.2d. 27, 31, 32." [Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, p. 832]

Black's Law Dictionary: Gross

"GROSS. Great; culpable. General. Absolute. A thing in gross exists in its own right, and not without diminution or deduction. [Cites omitted.] Whole; entire; total; as the gross sum, amount, weight--opposed to net." [Cite omitted.] [Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, p. 832]

26 U.S.C.S. §61(a)(1)

"GROSS INCOME DEFINED. (a) GENERAL DEFINITION.--Except as otherwise provided in this subtitle, gross income means all income from whatever source' derived, including (but not limited to) the following items:

"(1) Compensation, including fees, commissions, fringe benefits, and similar items;...."

[26 U.S.C.S. §61(a)(1)]

Black's Law Dictionary: Compensation

"COMPENSATION. Indemnification; payment of damages; making amends; making whole; giving an equivalent or substitute of equal value; that which is necessary to restore an injured party to his former position; consideration or price of a privilege purchased; equivalent in money for a loss sustained; equivalent given for property taken or for an injury done to another; giving back an equivalent in either money which is but the measure of value, or in actual value otherwise conferred; recompense in value; recompense or reward for some loss, injury, or service, especially when it is given by statute; remuneration for the injury directly and proximately caused by a breach of contract or duty; remuneration or satisfaction for injury or damage of every description; that return which is given for something else." [Bold added.] [Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, p. 354]

38 Cal.Jur.3d., Income taxes, §8"In general; definition of gross income

"The "gross income" which constitutes the basis for determining the personal income tax means all income from whatever service derived, unless excluded by statute. Gross income includes such items as compensation for services, including fees, commissions, and similar items; gross income derived from business; gains derived from dealings in property; interest; rents; royalties; dividends; alimony and separate maintenance payments; annuities; income from life insurance and endowment contracts; pensions; income from discharge of indebtedness; distributive shares of partnership gross income; income in respect of a decedent; and income from an interest in an estate or trust."

Black's Law Dictionary: Exception

"EXCEPTION. Act of excepting or excluding from a number designated or from a description; that which is excepted or separated from others in a general rule or description; a person, thing, or case specified as distinct or not included; an act of excepting, omitting from mention or leaving out of consideration; and "except" means not including."

"An exception in a statute is a clause designed to reserve or exempt some individuals from the general class of persons or things to which the language of the act in general attaches. People v. Bailey, 103 Misc. 366, 171 N.Y.S. 394, 397."

"An "exception" exempts absolutely from the operation of the statute, while a "proviso" generally defeats operation of statute conditionally."

"The office of an "exception" in a statute is to except something from the operative effect of a statute or to qualify or restrain the generality of the substantive enactment to which it is attached, and it is not necessarily limited to the section of the statute immediately following or preceding. *Gatliff Coal Co. v. "FRANCHISE TAX. A tax on the franchise of a corporation, that is, on the right and privilege of carrying on business in the character of a corporation, for the purposes for which it was created, and in the conditions which surround it." "Though the value of the franchise, for purposes of taxation, may be measured by the amount of business done, or the amount of earnings or dividends, or by the total value of the capital or stock of the corporation in excess of its tangible assets, a franchise tax is not a tax on either property, capital, stock, earnings, or dividends. In a technical sense, but on all intangible property of such a corporation, not otherwise taxed, used in state as component part of corporation's entire system."

"The more intelligent adversaries of the new Constitution admit the force of this reasoning; but they qualify their admission by a distinction between what they call INTERNAL and EXTERNAL taxation. Hylton v. United States (Feb. 1796)

"If it can be considered as a tax neither direct within the meaning of the Constitution, nor comprehended within the term duty, impost or excise; there is no provision in the Constitution, one way or another, and then it must be left to such an operation of the power, as if the authority to lay taxes had been given generally in all instances, without saying whether they should be apportioned or uniform; and in that case, I should presume, the tax ought to be uniform; because the present Constitution was particularly intended to affect individuals, and not states, except in particular cases specified: And this is the leading distinction between the articles of Confederation and the present Constitution."

Commercial League Association of America v. People ex rel. Needles, Auditor (Sept. 1878)

"The object of the statute, no doubt, was to prevent the corporation from making dividends of profits among the members, as do corporations organized for pecuniary profit; and while the statute might subserve a useful purpose if construed in this manner, we fail to perceive any benefit which would result if a member of the association, who happened to fill an office, should be deprived of receiving compensation for his labor as an officer. Compensation for labor can not be regarded as profit, within the meaning of the law. Springer v. United States (Jan. 24, 1880)

"A warrant for the collection of taxes, authorizing the sale of property thereon, is due process of law."

"If instructions to a jury are asked in a mass, and one of them be wrong, all may be rejected."

"Direct taxes, within the meaning of the Constitution, are only capitation taxes, as expressed in that instrument, and taxes on real estate."

"Mr. William M. Springer, in person for plaintiff in error:

"The tax which was levied upon the plaintiff's income, gains^o and profits, as set forth in the record, and by the pretended virtue of the Acts of Congress and parts of Acts therein mentioned, is a direct tax."

"(i) A tax upon salaries is a direct tax. It falls wholly upon the payer. To call it an indirect tax would do violence to the meaning of words and would simply be ridiculous. It is unnecessary to cite authorities."

"Mr. Justice Swayne, delivered the opinion of the court:

"The tax which was levied on the plaintiff's income, gains and profits, as set forth in the record, and by pretended virtue of the Acts of Congress and parts of Acts therein mentioned, is a direct tax.""

"The prompt payment of taxes is always important to the public welfare. It may be vital to the existence of a government. The idea that every tax payer is entitled to the delays of litigation is unreason. If the laws here in question involved any wrong or unnecessary harshness, it was for Congress or the people who make congresses to see that the evil was corrected. The remedy does not lie with the judicial branch of the Government."

"It is important to look into the legislation of Congress touching the subject since that time. The following summary will suffice for our purpose. We shall refer to the several Acts of Congress, to be examined according to their sequence in dates. In all of them the aggregate amount required to be collected was apportioned among the several States.

"The Act of July 14, 1789, ch. 75, 1 Stat. at L., 597. This Act imposed a tax upon real estate and a capitation tax upon slaves.

"The Act of August 2, 1813, ch. 37, 3 Stat. at L. 53. By this Act the tax was imposed upon real estate and slaves, according to their respective values in money.

"The Act of January 9, 1815, ch. 21, 3 Stat. at L., 164. This Act imposed the tax upon the same descriptions of property, and in like manner as the preceding Act.

"The Act of February 27, 1815, ch. 60, 3 Stat. at L., 216, applied to the District of Columbia the provisions of the Act of January 19, 1815.

"The Act of March 5th, 1816, ch. 24, 3 Stat. at L., 255, repealed the two preceding Acts, and re-enacted their provisions to enforce the collection of the smaller amount of tax thereby prescribed.

"The Act of August 5, 1861, ch. 45, 12 Stat. at L., 294, required the tax to be levied wholly on real estate.

"The Act of June 7, 1862, ch. 98, 12 Stat. at L. 422, and the Act of February 6, 1863, ch. 21, 12 Stat. at L., 640, both relate only to the collection, in insurrectionary districts, of the direct tax imposed by the Act of August 5, 1861, and need not, therefore, be more particularly noticed.

"It will thus be seen that whenever the Government has imposed a tax which it recognized as a direct tax, it has never been applied to any objects but real estate and slaves. The latter application may be accounted for upon two grounds: (1) In some of the States, slaves were regarded as real estate. 1 Hurd. Slavery, 239; Bk. v. Fenno, 8 Wall., 533 [75 U.S., XIX., 482]; and (2) such an extension of the tax lessened the burden upon the real estate where slavery existed, while the result to the national Treasury was the same, whether the slaves were omitted or included."

In Bk. v. Fenno [supra], the tax which came under consideration was one of ten per cent upon the notes of state banks paid out by other banks, state or national. The same conclusions were reached by the court as in the case of the Ins. Co. v. Soule, Chief Justice Chase delivered the opinion of the court. In the course of his elaborate examination of the subject he said: "It may be rightly affirmed that, in the practical construction of the Constitution by Congress, direct taxes have been limited to taxes on land and appurtenances and taxes on polls, or capitation taxes.""

"In Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall., 331 [90 U.S., XXIII., 99], the tax involved was a succession tax, imposed by the Acts of Congress of June, 30, 1864, 13 Stat. at L., 223, and July 13, 1866, 14 Stat. at L. 98. It was held that the tax was not a direct tax, and that it was constitutional and valid. In delivering the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice Clifford, after remarking that the tax there in question was not a direct tax, said: "Instead of that, it is plainly an excise tax or duty, authorized by section 1, article 8, of the Constitution, which vests the power in Congress to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and public welfare."

"He said further: "Taxes on houses, lands and other permanent real estate have always been deemed to be direct taxes and capitation taxes, by the express words of the Constitution, are within the same category; but it has never been decided that any other legal exactions for the support of the Federal Government fall within the condition that unless laid in proportion to numbers the assessment is invalid.""

.. the tax of which the plaintiff in error complains is within the category of an excise or duty." [Brackets original.]

Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (May 20, 1895)

"As heretofore stated, the constitution divided federal taxation into two great classes,--the class of direct taxes, and the class of duties, imposts, and excises, --and prescribed two rules which qualified the grant of power as to each class.

"The power to lay direct taxes, apportioned among the several states in proportion to their representation in the popular branch of congress,--representation based on population as ascertained by the census,--was plenary and absolute, but to lay direct taxes without apportionment was forbidden. The power to lay duties, imposts, and excises was subject to the qualification that the imposition must be uniform throughout the United States."

"The words of the constitution are to be taken in their obvious sense, and to have a reasonable construction. In Gibbons v. Ogden, Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, with his usual felicity, said: "As men whose intentions require no concealment generally employ the words which most directly and aptly express the ideas they intend to convey, the enlightened patriots who framed our constitution, and the people who adopted it, must be understood to have employed words in their natural sense, and to have intended what they have said."

"We know of no reason for holding otherwise than that the words "direct taxes," on the one hand, and "duties, imposts and excises," on the other, were used in the constitution in their natural and obvious sense. Nor, in arriving at what those terms embrace, do we perceive any ground for enlarging them beyond, or narrowing them within, their natural and obvious import at the time the constitution was framed and ratified."

"It is elementary that the same statute may be in part constitutional and in part unconstitutional, and, if the parts are wholly independent of each other, that which is constitutional may stand, while that which is unconstitutional will be rejected. And in the case before us there is no question as to the validity of this act, except sections 27 to 37, inclusive, which relate to the subject which has been under discussion; and, as to them, we think the rule laid down by Chief Justice Shaw in Warren v. Charlestown, 2 Gray, 84, is applicable,--that if the different parts "are so mutually connected with and dependent on each other, as conditions, considerations, or compensations for each other, as to warrant a belief that the legislature intended them as a whole, and that if all could not be carried into effect the legislature would not pass the residue independently, and some parts are unconstitutional, all the provisions which are thus dependent, conditional, or connected must fall with them.""

Knowlton v. Moore (May 14, 1900)

"Direct taxes bear immediately upon persons, upon possessions and enjoyments of rights. Indirect taxes are levied upon the happening of an event or an exchange."

"Certainly, a tax placed upon an inheritance or legacy diminishes, to the extent of the tax, the value of the right to inherit or receive, but this is a burden cast upon the recipient, and not upon the power of the state to regulate. This distinction shows the inapplicability to the case in hand of the statement made by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 431, 4 L.Ed. 607, "That the power to tax involves the power to destroy." This principle is pertinent only when there is no power to tax a particular subject, and has no relation to a case where such right exists. In other words, the power to destroy which may be the consequence of taxation is a reason why the right to tax should be confined to subjects which may be lawfully embraced therein, even although it happens that in some particular instance no great harm may be caused by the exercise of the taxing authority as to a subject which is beyond its scope. But this reasoning has no application to a lawful tax, for if it had there would be an end of all taxation; that is to say, if a lawful tax can be defeated because the power which is manifested by its imposition may when further exercised be destructive, it would follow that every lawful tax would become unlawful, and therefore no taxation whatever could be levied. Under our constitutional system both the national and the state governments, moving in their respective orbits, have a common authority to tax many and diverse objects, but this does not cause the exercise of its lawful attributes by one to be a curtailment of the powers of government of the other, for if it did there would practically be an end of the dual system of government which the Constitution established."

Patton v. Brady (Mar. 17, 1902)

"A case arises under the Constitution of the United States, of which the circuit court has original jurisdiction without diversity of citizenship, where the plaintiffs right of recovery depends upon the unconstitutionality of an act of Congress." [Bold added.]

"Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

"The first contention of the defendant is that the circuit court did not have jurisdiction. The parties, it is true, were both citizens of Virginia, but the question presented in the declaration was the constitutionality of an act of Congress. The plaintiff's right of recovery was rested upon the unconstitutionality of the act, and that was the vital question. The circuit courts of the United States "have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several states, of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity . . . arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States." 25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866."

"Now the gravamen of the plaintiff's complaint is that he was compelled to pay to the defendant the sum of $3,062.28 to protect his property from unlawful seizure for illegal taxes. In such cases, having paid under protest, he can recover in an action of assumpsit the amount thus wrongfully taken from him.

"Appropriate remedy to recover back money paid under protest on account of duties or taxes erroneously or illegally assessed is an action of assumpsit for money had and received. Where the party voluntarily pays the money he is without remedy; but if he pays it by compulsion of law, or under protest, or with notice that he intends to bring suit to test the validity of the claim, he may recover it back, if the assessment was erroneous or illegal, in an action of assump sit for money had and received." Philadelphia v. The Collector, 5 Wall. 720, 731, sub nom. Philadelphia v. Diehl, 18 L.Ed. 614, 616. See also Dooley v. United States, 182 U.S. 222, 45 L.Ed. 1074, 21 Sup.Ct.Rep. 762."

"We pass, therefore, to consider the merits of the case, and here the first question is, What is the nature of the tax: Obviously it was intended by Congress as an excise"

"Ever since the early part of the Civil War there has been a body of legislation, gathered in the statutes under the title Internal Revenue, by which, upon goods intended for consumption, excises have been imposed in different forms at some time intermediate the beginning of manufacture or production and the act of consumption. Among the articles thus subjected to those excises have been liquors and tobacco, appropriately selected therefor on the ground that they are not a part of the essential food supply of the nation, but are among its comforts and luxuries."

"Turning to Blackstone, vol. 1, p. 318, we find an excise defined: "An inland imposition, paid sometimes upon the consumption of the commodity, or frequently upon the retail sale, which is the last stage before the consumption." This definition is accepted by Story in his Constitution of the United States, §953. Cooley in his work on Taxation, page 3, defines it as "an inland impost levied upon articles of manufacture or sale, and also upon licenses to pursue certain trades, or to deal in certain commodities." Bouvier and Black, respectively, in their dictionaries give the same definition. If we turn to the general dictionaries, Webster's International calls it "an inland duty or impost operating as an indirect tax on the consumer, levied upon certain specified articles, as tobacco, ale, spirits, etc., grown or manufactured in the country. It is also levied on licenses to pursue certain trades and deal in certain commodities." The definition in the Century Dictionary is substantially the same, though in addition this is quoted from Andrews on Revenue Law, §133: "Excises is a word generally used in contradistinction to imposts in its restricted sense, and is applied to internal or inland impositions, levied sometimes upon the consumption of a commodity, sometimes upon the retail sale or it, and sometimes upon the manufacture of it."

"It is true other counsel in their brief have advanced a very elaborate and ingenious argument to show that this is a direct tax upon property which must be apportioned according to population within the rule laid down in the Income tax Cases, but, as we have seen, it is not a tax upon property as such, but upon certain kinds of property, having reference to their origin and their intended use. It may be, as Dr. Johnson said, "a hateful tax levied upon commodities;" an opinion evidently shared by Blackstone, who says, after mentioning a number of articles that had been added to the list of those excised, "a list which no friend to his country would wish to see further increased." But these are simply considerations of policy, and to be determined by the legislative branch, and not of power, to be determined by the judiciary. We conclude, therefore, that the tax which is levied by this tax is an excise, properly so called, and we proceed to consider the further propositions presented by counsel."

"Courts may not in this respect revise the action of Congress. That body determines the question of war, and it may therefore rightfully prescribe the means necessary for carrying on that war. Loan or tax is possible. It may adopt either, or divide between the two. If it determines in whole or in part on tax, that means an increase in the existing rate or perhaps in the subjects of taxation, and the judgment of Congress in respect thereto is not subject to judicial challenge. Wisely was it said by Mr. Justice Cooley in his work on Taxation, page 34:

"The legislative makes, the executive executes, and the judiciary construes, the laws.' Chief Justice Marshall, in Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 46, 6 L.Ed. 253, 263. The legislature must therefore determine all questions of state necessity, discretion, or policy involved in ordering a tax and in apportioning it; must make all the necessary rules and regulations which are to be observed in order to produce the desired returns, and must decide upon the agencies by means of which collections shall be made. 'The judicial tribunals of the state have no concern with the policy of legislation. That is a matter resting altogether in the discretion of another coordinate branch of the government. The judicial power cannot legitimately question the policy or refuse to sanction the provisions of any law not inconsistent with the fundamental law of the state.' Chief Justice Redfield, in Re Powers, 25 Vt. 261, 265. . . . But so long as the legislation is not colorable merely it is confined to the enactment of what is in its nature strictly a tax law, and so long as none of the constitutional rights of the citizen are violated in the directions prescribed for enforcing the tax, the legislation is of supreme authority. Taxes may be and often are oppressive to the persons and corporations taxed; they may appear to the judicial mind unjust and even unnecessary, but this can constitute no reason for judicial interference."

"Counsel speaks of the power to impose an excise as an arbitrary, unrestrained power, but the Constitution, art. 1, §8 provides that "all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." The exercise of the power is, therefore, limited by the rule of uniformity. The framers of the Constitution, the people who adopted it, thought that limitation sufficient, and courts may not add thereto. That uniformity has been adjudged to be a geographical uniformity. In the Head Money Cases, 112 U.S. 580, 594, sub nom. Edye v. Robertson, 28 L.Ed. 798, 802, 5 Sup.Ct.Rep. 247, 252, it was said:

"The tax is uniform when it operates with the same force and effect in every place where the subject of it is found. The tax in this case, which, as far as it can be called a tax, is an excise duty on the business of bringing passengers from foreign countries into this, by ocean navigation, is uniform, and operates precisely alike in every port of the United States where such passengers can be landed. . . . Perfect uniformity and perfect equality of taxation, in all the aspects in which the human mind can view it, is a baseless dream, as this court has said more than once. State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U.S. 575, 612, 23 L.Ed. 663, 673. Here there is substantial uniformity within the meaning and purpose of the Constitution."

"So also in the recent case of Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U.S. 41, 106, 44 L.Ed. 969, 995, 20 Sup.Ct.Rep. 747, 772.

"By the result, then, of an analysis of the history of the adoption of the Constitution, it becomes plain that the words 'uniform throughout the United States' do not signify an intrinsic, but simply a geographical uniformity. And it also results that the assertion to which we at the outset referred, that the decision in the Head Money Cases, holding that the word 'uniform' must be interpreted in a geographical sense, was not authoritative, because that case in reality solely involved the clause of the Constitution forbidding preferences between ports, is shown to be unsound, since the preference clause of the Constitution and the uniformity clause were, in effect, in framing the Constitution, treated, as respected their operation, as one and the same thing, and embodied the same conception."

"Geographical uniformity being, therefore, that only which is prescribed by the Constitution, the courts may not add new conditions, and the statute in question fully complies with that requirement. It is not the province of the judiciary to inquire whether the excise is reasonable in amount or in respect to the property to which it is applied. Those are matters in respect to which the legislative determination is final."

Flint v. Stone Tracy Co. (Mar. 13, 1911)

"Excises are taxes laid upon the manufacture, sale or consumption of commodities within the country, upon licenses to pursue certain occupations and upon corporate privileges; the requirement to pay such taxes involves the exercise of a privilege." p. 151.

"The thing taxed is not the mere dealing in merchandise, in which the actual transactions may be the same, whether conducted by individuals or corporations, but the tax is laid upon the privileges which exist in conducting business with the advantages which inhere in the corporate capacity of those taxed, and which are not enjoyed by private firms or individuals. These advantages are obvious, and have led to the formation of such companies in nearly all branches of trade. The continuity of the business, without interruption by death or dissolution, the transfer of property interests by the disposition of shares of stock, the advantages of business controlled and managed by corporate directors, the general absence of individual liability, these and other things inhere in the advantages of business thus conducted, which do not exist when the same business is conducted by private individuals or partnerships. It is this distinctive privilege which is the subject of taxation, not the mere buying or selling or handling of goods, which may be the same, whether done by corporations or individuals." pp. 161-2. [Bold added.]

"It is therefore well settled by the decisions of this court that when the sovereign authority has exercised the right to tax a legitimate subject of taxation as an exercise of a franchise or privilege, it is no objection that the measure of taxation is found in the income produced in part from property which of itself considered is nontaxable" p. 165.

"Conceding the power of Congress to tax the business activities of private corporations, including, as in this case, the privilege of carrying on business in a corporate capacity, the tax must be measured by some standard and none can be chosen which will operate with absolute justice upon all corporations. Some corporations do a large business upon a small amount of capital; others with a small business may have a large capital." p. 165.

"We must not forget that the right to select the measure and objects of taxation devolves upon the Congress, and not upon the courts, and such selections are valid unless constitutional limitations are overstepped. "It is no part of the function of a court to inquire into the reasonableness of the excise, either as respects the amount or the property upon which it is imposed." [Cites omitted.] p. 167.

"Courts cannot substitute their judgment for that of the legislature." p. 174.

Stratton's Independence v. Howbert (Dec. 1, 1913)

As has been repeatedly remarked, the corporation tax act of 1909 was not intended to be and is not, in any proper sense, an income tax law. This court had decided in the Pollock Case that the income tax law of 1894 amounted in effect to a direct tax upon property, and was invalid because not apportioned according to population as prescribed by the Constitution. The act of 1909 avoided this difficulty by imposing not an income tax, but an excise tax upon the conduct of business in a corporate capacity, measuring, however, the amount of tax by the income of the corporation, with certain qualifications prescribed by the act itself. Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U.S. 107, 55 L.Ed. 389, 31 Sup.Ct.Rep. 342, Ann.Cas. 1912 B, 1312; McCoach v. Minehill & S. H. R. Co. 228 U.S. 295, 57 L.Ed. 842, 33 Sup.Ct.Rep. 419; United States v. Whitridge (decided at this term, 231 U.S. 144, 58 L.Ed. --, 34 Sup.Ct.Rep. 24.) [Bold added.]

"And, however the operation shall be described, the transaction is indubitably "business" within the fair meaning of the act of 1909; and the gains derived from it are properly and strictly the income from that business; for "income" may be defined as the gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined." [Bold added.]

"Corporations engaged in such business share in the benefits of the Federal government, and ought as reasonably to contribute to the support of that government as corporations that conduct other kinds of profitable business.

"As to what should be deemed "income" within the meaning of §38, it of course need not be such an income as would have been taxable as such, for at that time (the 16th Amendment not having been as yet ratified) income was not taxable as such by Congress without apportionment according to population, and this tax was not so apportioned. Evidently Congress adopted the income as the measure of the tax to be imposed with respect to the doing of business in corporate form because it desired that the excise should be imposed, approximately at least, with regard to the amount of benefit presumably derived by such corporations from the current operations of the government. In Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U.S. 107, 165, 55 L.Ed. 107 [sic], 31 Sup.Ct.Rep. 342, Ann.Cas. 1912 B, 1312, it was held that Congress, in exercising the right to tax a legitimate subject of taxation as a franchise or privilege, was not debarred by the Constitution from measuring the taxation by the total income, although derived in part from property which, considered by itself, was not taxable. It was reasonable that Congress should fix upon gross income, without distinction as to source, as a convenient and sufficiently accurate index of the importance of the business transacted. And from this point of view, it makes little difference that the income may arise from a business that theoretically or practically involves a wasting of capital."

Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (Jan. 24, 1916)

"We are of opinion, however, that the confusion is not inherent, but rather arises from the conclusion that the 16th Amendment provides for a hitherto unknown power of taxation; that is, a power to levy an income tax which, although direct, should not be subject to the regulation of apportionment applicable to all other direct taxes."

.. the conclusion reached in the Pollock case did not in any degree involve holding that income taxes generically and necessarily came within the class of direct taxes on property, but, on the contrary, recognized the fact that taxation on income was, in its nature, an excise, entitled to be enforced as such...."

Stanton v. Baltic Mining Co. (Feb. 21, 1916)

"Labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations, mutual savings banks, etc., could be excepted from the operation of the income tax provisions of the tariff act of October 3, 1913 (38 Stat. at L. 166, chap. 16), without rendering the tax repugnant to the Federal Constitution."

"The whole purpose of U.S. Const., 16th Amend., giving Congress the power "to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several states, and without regard to any census or enumeration," was to exclude the source from which a taxed income was derived as the criterion by which to determine the applicability of the constitutional requirement as to apportionment of direct taxes."

.. by the previous ruling it was settled that the provisions of the 16th Amendment conferred no new power of taxation, but simply prohibited the previous complete and plenary power of income taxation possessed by Congress from the beginning from being taken out of the category of indirect taxation to which it inherently belonged, and being placed in the category of direct taxation subject to apportionment by a consideration of the sources from which the income was derived, --that is, by testing the tax not by what it was, a tax on income, but by a mistaken theory deduced from the origin or source of the income taxed."

William E. Peck & Co. v. Lowe (May 20, 1918)

"The plaintiff is a domestic corporation chiefly engaged in buying goods in the several states, shipping them to foreign countries and there selling them."

"The tax was levied under the Act of October 3, 1913, c. 16, §11, 38 Stat. 166, 172, which provided for annually subjecting every domestic corporation to the payment of a tax of a specified per centum of its "entire net income arising or accruing from all sources during the preceding calendar year." Certain fraternal and other corporations as also income from certain- enumerated sources, were specifically excepted, but none of the exceptions included the plaintiff or any art of its income. So, tested merely by the terms of the act, the tax collected from the plaintiff was rightly computed on its total net income. But as the act obviously could not impose a tax forbidden by the Constitution, we proceed to consider whether the tax, or rather the part in question, was forbidden by the constitutional provision on which the plaintiff relies."

"The Sixteenth Amendment, although referred to in argument, has no real bearing and may be put out of view. As pointed out in recent decisions, it does not extend the taxing power to new or excepted subjects, but merely removed all occasion, which otherwise might exist, for an apportionment' among the states of taxes laid on income, whether it be derived from one source or another."

Doyle v. Mitchell Bros. Co. (May 20, 1918)

"Whatever difficulty there may be about a precise and scientific definition of "Income," it imports, as used here, something entirely distinct from principal or capital either as a subject of taxation or as a measure of the tax; conveying rather the idea of gain or increase arising from corporate activities."

Southern Pac. Co. v. Lowe (June 3, 1918)

"We must reject in this case, as we have rejected in cases arising under the Corporation Excise Tax Act of 1909 [cites omitted] the broad contention submitted in behalf of the government that all receipts--everything that comes in--are income within the proper definition of the term "gross income," and that the entire proceeds of a conversion of capital assets, in whatever form and under whatever circumstances accomplished, should be treated as gross income."

Eisner v. Macomber (Mar. 8, 1920)

"Income" is the gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined; something of exchangeable value, proceeding from the property severed from the capital, however invested or employed, and received or drawn by the recipient for his separate use, benefit, and disposal."

"The Sixteenth Amendment must be construed in connection with the taxing clauses of the original Constitution and the effect attributed to them before the amendment was adopted. In Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co.,...under the Act of August 27, 1894 (28 Stat. 509, 553, c_ 349, §27), it was held that taxes upon rents and profits of real estate and upon returns from investments of personal property were in effect direct taxes upon the property from which such income arose, imposed by reason of ownership; and that Congress could not impose such taxes without apportioning' them among the states according to population, as required by article 1, §2, cl. 3 and section 9, cl. 4, of the original Constitution.

"Afterwards, and evidently in recognition of the limitation upon the taxing power of Congress thus determined, the Sixteenth Amendment was adopted, in words lucidly expressing the object to be accomplished:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several states, and without regard to any census or enumeration."

"As repeatedly held, this did not extend the taxing power to new subjects, but merely removed the necessity which otherwise might exist for an apportionment among the states of taxes laid on income.

"A proper regard for its genesis, as well as its very clear language, requires also that this amendment shall not be extended by loose construction, so as to repeal or modify, except as applied to income, those provisions of the Constitution that require an apportionment according to population for direct taxes upon property, real and personal. This limitation still has an appropriate and important function, and is not to be overridden by Congress or disregarded by the courts.

"In order, therefore, that the clauses cited from article 1 of the Constitution may have proper force and effect, save only as modified by the amendment, and that the latter also may have proper effect, it becomes essential to distinguish between what is and what is not "income," as the term is there used, and to apply the distinction, as cases arise, according to truth and substance, without regard to form. Congress cannot by any definition it may adopt conclude the matter, since it cannot by legislation alter the Constitution, from which alone it derives its power to legislate, and within whose limitations alone that power can be lawfully exercised.

"The fundamental relation of "capital" to "income" has been much discussed by economists, the former being likened to the tree or the land, the latter to the fruit or the crop; the former depicted as a reservoir supplied from springs, the latter as the outlet stream, to be measured by its flow during a period of time. For the present purpose we require only a clear definition of the term "income," as used in common speech, in order to determine its meaning in the amendment, and, having formed also a correct judgment as to the nature of a stock dividend, we shall find it easy to decide the matter at issue.

"After examining dictionaries in common use, we find little to add to the succinct definition adopted in two cases arising under the Corporation Tax Act of 1909, "Income may be defined as the gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined," provided it be understood to include profit gained through a sale or conversion of capital assets, to which it was applied in the Doyle Case.

"Brief as it is, it indicates the characteristic and distinguishing attribute of income essential for a correct solution of the present controversy. The government, although basing its argument upon the definition as quoted, placed chief emphasis upon the word "gain," which was extended to include a variety of meanings; while the significance of the next three words was either overlooked or misconceived. "Derived--from--capital"; "the gain-derived-from-capital," etc. Here we have the essential matter: not a gain accruing to capital; not a growth or increment of value in the investment; but a gain, a profit, something of exchangeable value, proceeding from the property, severed' from the capital, however invested or employed, and coming in, being "derived"--that is, received or drawn by the recipient (the taxpayer) for his separate use, benefit and disposal--that is income derived from property. Nothing else answers the description.

"The same fundamental conception is clearly set forth in the Sixteenth Amendment--"incomes, from whatever source derived"--the essential thought being expressed with a conciseness and lucidity entirely in harmony with the form and style of the Constitution." [Emphasis original; citations omitted.]

Evans v. Gore (June 1, 1920)

"Act Feb. 24, 1919, §213 (Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1919, §6336ff), so far as it imposes a tax on the income of judges of the courts of the United States, including their salaries, violates Const. art. 3, §1, 1425 providing that the compensation of judges shall not be diminished during their continuance in office, and the fact that the income of other persons is likewise taxed does not validate the tax."

"Const. Amend. 16, authorizing Congress to collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment, among the states, does not extend the taxing power to new or excepted subjects, but merely removes all occasion otherwise existing for an apportionment, and hence does not authorize a tax on the salary of a federal judge, contrary to article 3, §1.

"True, the taxing power is comprehensive and acknowledges few exceptions. But that there are exceptions, besides the one we here recognize and sustain, is well settled. In Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 113, 20 L.Ed. 122, it was held that Congress could not impose an income tax in respect of the salary of a judge of a state court; in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429, 585, 601, 652, 653, 15 Sup.Ct. 673, 39 L.Ed. 759, it was held--the full court agreeing on this point--that Congress was without power to impose such a tax in respect of interest received from bonds issued by a state or any of its counties or municipalities; and in United States v. Railroad Co., 17 Wall. 322, 21 L.Ed. 597, there was a like holding as to municipal revenues derived by the city of Baltimore from its ownership of stock in a railroad company. None of those decisions was put on any express prohibition in the Constitution, for there is none; but all recognize and gave effect to a prohibition implied from the independence of the states within their own spheres."

"Does the Sixteenth Amendment authorize and support this tax and the attendant diminution; that is to say, does it bring within the taxing powers subjects theretofore excepted? The court below answered in the negative; and counsel for the government say:

"It is not, in view of recent decisions, contended that this amendment rendered anything taxable as income that was not so taxable before."

"By the Constitution all direct taxes were required to be apportioned among the several states according to their population, as ascertained by a census or enumeration (Article 1, §2, cl. 3, and section 9, cl. 4) but no such requirement was imposed as to other taxes. And apart from capitation taxes, with which we now are not concerned, no rule was given for determining what taxes were direct and therefore to be apportioned, or what were indirect and not within that requirement. Controversy ensued and ultimately centered around the right classification of income from taxable real estate and from investments in taxable personal property. The matter then came before this court in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429, 15 Sup.Ct. 673, 39 L.Ed. 759; Id., 158 U.S. 601, 15 Sup.Ct. 912, 39 L.Ed. 1108, and the decision when announced disclosed that the same differences in opinion existing elsewhere were shared by the members of the court, five, the controlling number, regarding a tax on such income as in effect a direct tax on the property from which it arose, and therefore as requiring apportionment, and four regarding it as indirect and not to be apportioned. Much of the law then under consideration had been framed according to the latter view, and because of this and the adjudged inseparability of other portions the entire law was held invalid. Afterwards, to enable Congress to reach all taxable income more conveniently and effectively than would be possible as to much of it if an apportionment among the states were essential, the Sixteenth Amendment was proposed and ratified. In other words, the purpose of the amendment was to eliminate all occasion for such an apportionment because of the source from which the income came,--a change in no wise affecting the power to tax but only the mode of exercising it."

"True, Gov. Hughes, of New York, in a message laying the amendment before the Legislature of that state for ratification or rejection, expressed some apprehension lest it might be construed as extending the taxing power to income not taxable before; but his message promptly brought forth from statesmen who participated in proposing the amendment such convincing expositions of its purpose, as here stated, that the apprehension was effectively dispelled and ratification followed."

... we again held, citing the prior cases, that the amendment "did not extend the taxing power to new subjects, but merely removed the necessity which otherwise might exist for an apportionment among the states of taxes laid on income."

"After further consideration, we adhere to that view and accordingly hold that the Sixteenth Amendment does not authorize or support the tax in question." [Bold added.]

Merchants' Loan & Trust Co. v. Smietanka (Mar. 28, 1921)

"There can be no doubt that the word ["income"] must be given the same meaning and content in the Income Tax Acts of 1916 and 1917 that it had in the act of 1913. ... there would seem to be no room to doubt that the word must be given the same meaning in all of the Income Tax Acts of Congress that was given it in the Corporation Excise Tax Act [of 1909], and that what that meaning is has now become definitely settled by decision of the Court."

"In determining the definition of the word "income" thus arrived at, this court has consistently refused to enter into the refinements of lexicographers and economists and has approved, in the definitions quoted, what it believed to be the COMM* understood meaning of the term which must have been in the minds of the people when they adopted the Sixteenth Amendment to the Constitution. ... [W]e continue entirely satisfied with that definition, and, since the fund here taxed was the amount realized from the sale of the stock in 1917, less the capital investment as determined by the trustee as of March 1, 1913, it is palpable that it was a "gain or profit" "produced by" or "derived from" that investment, and that it "proceeded," and was "severed" or rendered severable, from, by the sale for cash, and thereby became that "realized gain" which has been repeatedly declared to be taxable income within the meaning of the constitutional amendment and the acts of Congress." [Cites omitted; brackets added.]

Miles v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. (May 29, 1922)

"The stockholders' right to take a part of new stock issued by the corporation, whose intrinsic value exceeds the issuing price, is essentially analogous to a stock dividend, and constituted no "gain," "profit," or "income" taxable without apportionment under the Sixteenth Amendment."

"Gains and profits derived through sale of capital assets, whether by a dealer or casually by a nontrader, is taxable as income, and such gain includes the profit derived from a sale of a stockholder's right to subscribe for a new issue of stock in the corporation at a fixed price."

Sims v. Ahrens (Jan. 19, 1925)

"License and occupation taxes, which are payable in respect to the privilege of engaging in or carrying on a particular business are not income taxes, although the amount of the tax payable by any individual may be measured by the amount of business which he transacts on his earnings therefrom. And conversely, although a person's entire income may be derived from a particular pursuit or trade, a tax on the income as such is not a license or privilege tax." Black on Income and other Federal Taxes, section 3.

"Thus a tax on sales of a particular commodity, or a tax on the dealer measured by the amount of his sales, is not an income tax. In the same section, the author further said:

"But a franchise tax upon corporations is not an income tax, although it may be called an excise tax. And this is so, whether the tax is laid by the state under whose laws the corporation is organized, and is exacted annually for the privilege of continuing its corporate existence, or is imposed by a different state for the privilege of doing business within its limits, or is imposed by an outside power, such as the United States, upon the franchise of transacting business in a corporate capacity. For this reason, the tax on corporations imposed by Congress in 1909, being laid specifically upon the carrying on or doing of business in a corporate or quasi corporate capacity, was adjudged not to be an income tax, although the amount of the tax in each instance was measured by the net annual income of the corporation, but an excise tax, not direct and therefore not invalid because not apportioned among the several states according to population," citing Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U.S. 107, 31 S.Ct. 342, 55 L.Ed. 389, Ann.Cas. 1912B, 1312." p. 726.

"In the language of Chief Justice White interpreting Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., supra, not quoted by Judge HART in his dissenting opinion, that I now wish to stress, because it shows that an income tax in its essential nature is not a property tax, but an excise tax." p. 731.

"The celebrated case of Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. covers 339 pages of the reports. The opinions therein are models of judicial industry and thoroughness. They show that the judges gave the case the consideration its transcendent importance demanded, and are notable contributions to Anglo Saxon Jurisprudence, on the subject of income tax law. But I wish especially to call attention to the dissenting opinions of Justices White and Harlan. These are the most exhaustive, learned, forceful, and illuminating, judicial pronouncements on the particular subject of income tax to be found in all the realm of the adjudicated law. They show, conclusively, it seems to me, that under our American system--our federal, and state Constitutions and statutes--a tax on incomes cannot properly be classified as a property tax, but falls in the class of excise taxes." Note p. 731.

"An excise tax, using the term in its broad meaning as opposed to a property tax, includes taxes sometimes designated by statute or referred to as privilege taxes, license taxes, occupation taxes, and business taxes. * * * Generally the term 'excise taxes' is used to distinguish such taxes from taxes on property. It is often very important to determine whether a certain tax is a property tax or an excise tax, i. e., whether (1) a property tax or (2) an occupation, license, business, privilege, or franchise tax. Not only are excise taxes governed by many rules entirely different from those which control property taxation, but also there are many constitutional provisions applicable to taxes on property but not to excise taxes. For instance, an excise tax is not within constitutional prohibitions such as those requiring taxation of property by value, uniformity, and equality of taxation. So such a tax is not objectionable as double taxation although the property itself is also taxed." Cooley on Taxation, vol. 1 (4th Ed.) §§45 and 46.

"After stating that it is settled that a federal income tax is an excise tax, he further says:

"In regard to state income taxes, the law is not so clear; generally, however, it has been held that such a tax is not a tax on property, or, at least, is not such a tax as to be included in the constitutional limitations imposed on property taxes." p. 731. [Bold added.]

Bowers v. Kerbaugh-Empire Co. (May 3, 1926)

"Const. Amend. 16, giving Congress power to levy and collect taxes on income, did not bring any new subject within taxing power, but removed necessity for apportionment' among states of taxes on income under article 1, §2, cl. 3, 1 and section 9, cl. 4, and obliterated distinction between taxes on income that are direct taxes and those that are not."

"Income" is gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined, including profit gained through conversion or sale of capital."

"The Sixteenth Amendment declares that Congress shall have power to levy and collect taxes on income, "from whatever source derived" without apportionment among the several states, and without regard to any census or enumeration. It was not the purpose or effect of that amendment to bring any new subject within the taxing power. Congress already had power to tax all incomes. But taxes on incomes from some sources had been held to be "direct taxes" within the meaning of the constitutional requirement as to apportionment. Art. 1 §2, cl. 3, and §9 cl. 4; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 158 U.S. 601, 15 S.Ct. 912, 39 L.Ed. 1108. The Amendment relieved from that requirement and obliterated the distinction in that respect between taxes on income that are direct taxes and those that are not, and so put on the same basis all incomes "from whatever source derived." Brushaber v. Union Pac. R. R. "Income" has been taken to mean the same thing as used in the Corporation Excise Tax Act of 1909 (36 Stat. 112), in the Sixteenth Amendment, and in the various revenue acts subsequently passed. Southern Pacific Co. v. Lowe, Merchants' L. & T. Co. v. Smietanka,.... After full consideration, this court declared that income may be defined as gain derived from capital, from labor or from both combined, including profit gained through sale or conversion of capital. Stratton's Independence v. Howbert,.... Doyle v. Mitchell Brothers Co.,.... Eisner v. Macomber,.... And that definition has been adhered to and applied repeatedly. See, e. g., Merchants' L. & T. Co. v. Smietanka, supra,.... Goodrich v. Edwards,.... United States v. Phellis,.... Miles v. Safe Deposit

Miller v. City of Milwaukee (Jan. 3, 1927)

"State law taxing corporate dividends, in proportion to which corporate income was not assessed, obviously passed for purpose of imposing a tax on United States bonds, held unconstitutional."

"It is a familiar principle that conduct which in usual situations the law protects may become unlawful when part of a scheme to reach a prohibited result. If the avowed purpose or self-evident operation of a statute is to follow the bonds of the United States and to make up for its inability to reach them directly by indirectly achieving the same result, the statute must fail even if but for its purpose or special operation it would be perfectly good. Under the laws of Wisconsin the income from the United States bonds may not be the only item exempted from the income tax on corporations, but it certainly is the most conspicuous instance of exemption at the present time. A result intelligently foreseen and offering the most obvious motive for an act that will bring it about, fairly may be taken to have been a purpose of the act. On that assumption the immunity of the national bonds is too important to allow any narrowing beyond what the Acts of Congress permit. We think it would be going too far to say that they allow an intentional interference that is only prevented from being direct by the artificial distinction between a corporation and its members. A tax very well may be upheld as against any casual effect it may have upon the bonds of the United States when passed with a different intent and not aimed at them, but it becomes a more serious attack upon their immunity when they are its obvious aim. In such a case the Court must consider the public welfare rather than the artifices contrived for private convenience and must look at the facts."

"Under former decisions here the settled doctrine is that the Sixteenth Amendment confers no power upon Congress to define and tax as income without apportionment something which theretofore could not have been properly regarded as income.

"Also, this court has declared: "Income may be defined as the gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined." provided it be understood to include profit gained through a sale or conversion of capital assets." Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189, 207, 40 S.Ct. 189, 193, (64 L.Ed. 521, 9 A.L.R. 1570). The "gain derived from capital," within the definition, is "not a gain accruing to capital, nor a growth or increment of value in the investment, but a gain, a profit, something of exchangeable value proceeding from the property, severed from the capital however invested, and coming in, that is, received or drawn by the claimant for his separate use, benefit and disposal." United States v. Phellis, 257 U.S. 156, 169, 42 S.Ct. 63, 65 (66 L.Ed. 180)."

"In truth the stock represented only a single investment of capital--that made by the donor. And when through sale or conversion the income from that investment in the hands of the recipient subject to taxation according to the very words of the Sixteenth Amendment. By requiring the recipient of the entire increase to pay a part into the public treasury, Congress deprived her of no right and subjected her to no hardship. She accepted the gift with knowledge of the statute and, as to the property received, voluntarily assumed the position of her donor. When she sold the stock she actually got the original sum invested, plus the entire appreciation and out of the latter only was she called on to pay the tax demanded.

"The provision of the statute under consideration seems entirely appropriate for enforcing a general scheme of lawful taxation. To accept the view urged in behalf of petitioner undoubtedly would defeat, to some extent, the purpose of Congress to take part of all gain derived from capital investments. To prevent that result and insure enforcement of its proper policy, Congress had power to require that for purposes of taxation the donee should accept the position of the donor in respect of the thing received. And in so doing, it acted neither unreasonably nor arbitrarily.

"The power of Congress to require a succeeding owner, in respect of taxation, to assume the place of his predecessor is pointed out by United States v. Phellis, 257 U.S. 156, 169, 42 S.Ct. 63, 65 (66 L.Ed. 180):

"Where, as in this case, the dividend constitutes a distribution of profits accumulated during an extended period and bears a large proportion to the par value of the stock, if an investor happened to buy stock shortly before the dividend, paying a price enhanced by an estimate of the capital plus the surplus of the company, and after distribution of the surplus, with corresponding reduction in the intrinsic and market value of the shares, he were called upon to pay a tax upon the dividend received, it might look in his case like a tax upon his capital. But it is only apparently so. In buying at a price that reflected the accumulated profits, he of course acquired as a part of the valuable rights purchased the prospect of a dividend from the accumulations--bought `dividend on, as the phrase goes--and necessarily took subject to the burden of the income proper to be assessed against him by reason of the dividend if and when made. He simply stepped into the shoes, in this as in other respects, of the stockholder whose shares he acquired, and presumably the prospect of a dividend influenced the price paid, and was discounted by the prospect of an income tax to be paid thereon. In short, the question whether a dividend made out of company profits constitutes income of the stockholder is not affected by antecedent transfers of the stock from hand to hand."

United States v. Tyler (July 1, 1929)

"No question is raised as to the general power of Congress under the Constitution to levy an estate tax, and none can be raised. Such a tax is not a direct tax requiring apportionment, but falls within the classification of "imposts, duties and excises" which Congress is authorized to levy by section 8, clause 1, of article 1 of that instrument. It is imposed, not on property, but on the privilege of transferring it, and is measured by the value of the interest transferred or which ceases at death."

"For purpose of taxation, income can be considered property."

"The individual, unlike the corporation, cannot be taxed for the mere privilege of existing. The corporation is an artificial entity which owes its existence and charter powers to the state; but the individuals' rights to live and own property are natural rights for the enjoyment of which an excise cannot be imposed." [Bold added.]

United States v. Butler (Jan. 6, 1936)

"An exaction, by Congress, of money from one group for benefit of another is not a "tax" within Constitution, and is not constitutional except as an integral part of regulation of a matter in which both groups are interested and in respect of which there is vested in Congress a power of legislative regulation; a "tax" both in general understanding and as used in Constitution signifying an exaction for the support of the government (Const. art. 1, §8, cl. 1)." [Bold added.]

"When act of Congress in given case is appropriately challenged as not conforming to Constitution, court's sole power and duty is to determine whether the act is in accordance with the constitutional provisions invoked, and court will not approve or condemn any legislative policy."

"Federal Union has only the powers expressly conferred on it and those reasonably implied from powers granted, while each state has all governmental powers except such as the people, by Constitution, have conferred on United States, denied to the state, or reserved to themselves."

""General welfare" clause of Constitution does not empower Congress to legislate generally for the general welfare, but merely to tax, and appropriate the revenues so raised, for purpose of payment of nation's debts and of making provision for the nation's general welfare; the power to appropriate being as broad as the power to tax (Const. art. 1, §8, cl. 1)."

"The power of Congress to tax, expressly conferred by general welfare clause, and the power to authorize expenditures impliedly conferred by such clause, are not limited by the direct grants of legislative power found in other clauses of Constitution (Const. art. 1, §8, cl. 1)."

"Every presumption must be indulged in favor of validity of act of Congress, and person challenging its validity must show that the act cannot by any reasonable possibility fall within Congress' permitted range of discretion."

"All powers not expressly granted to United States by Constitution, or reasonably to be implied from those expressly conferred, are reserved to the states."

"Congress may not legislate for purpose of regulating agricultural production in the states, since power of such regulation is reserved to states (Const. Amend. 10)."

"Principle that attainment of prohibited ends may not be accomplished by Congress under pretext of exercising granted powers is applicable to federal power to levy taxes, and, while power of taxation may be used by Congress as means to effectuate another power also expressly granted, Congress may not tax for purposes which are within exclusive province of states (Const. art. 1, §8, cl. 1)."

"Agricultural adjustment Act, passed as emergency measure, authorizing Secretary of Agriculture to enter into adjustment agreements with farmers for reduction of acreage or production of "basic agricultural commodities," imposing so-called processing taxes and floor stock taxes, and making proceeds thereof available for payment of benefits under such agreements, held invalid as invading reserved powers of states by regulating agricultural production within the states and as not a valid exercise of federal taxing and spending power under general welfare clause, since act, though providing for agreements voluntary in form, was attempt to coerce through economic pressure, and, even if noncoercive, was at best a scheme for purchasing with federal funds submission to federal regulation of a subject reserved to states (Agricultural Adjustment Act, see 7 U.S.C.A. §601 et seq.; (Const. art. 1, §8, cl. 1), and (Const. Amend. 10))."

"Congress cannot validly provide for reduction of cultivated acreage and the control of production within the states; that being a field reserved to state action (Const. Amend. 10)."

"Congress, having no power to compel compliance by farmers with scheme to regulate agricultural acreage and production, may not indirectly attain its ends by raising funds through taxation and appropriating them for purchasing compliance by farmers by means of production adjustment contracts."

Corn v. Fort (June 13, 1936)

"Term "privilege," within constitutional provision that Legislature shall have power to tax merchants, peddlers, and privileges in such manner as they may from time to time direct, refers to activity or occupation and not to character of person or entity that pursues activity or occupation; tax being upon privilege itself and not upon form in which business is conducted."

"Right to do business in Tennessee in corporate form is a taxable "privilege," since right of a corporation to engage intrastate business within state depends solely upon will of state which, having power to exclude entirely, has power to impose as condition the payment of a license fee."

"Act imposing privilege taxes held unconstitutional in so far as it undertakes to place a tax on partnerships for doing business in that form, as making arbitrary and capricious classification and denying equal protection of the laws."

"That privilege tax imposed upon corporations for right to engage in business was measured by worth of invested capital did not make it a "property tax."

"Legislature in enacting statute imposing privilege taxes on corporations for privilege of doing business within state was within its constitutional rights in measuring amount of tax by percentage on worth of capital invested by entity in state."

"Section 2 of the act is as follows:

"That for the privilege of engaging in business in corporate form in this State which is expressly hereby declared to be a privilege, there is hereby levied upon all domestic corporations an annual privilege tax, the measure of which is hereinafter set forth."

"(b) For the privilege of engaging in business in this State in corporate form, there is hereby imposed upon foreign corporations doing an intrastate business an annual privilege tax to be measured as hereinafter mentioned."

"The elements and considerations sufficient to support the validity of a franchise tax on corporations for the privilege of doing business in that form within a state are wholly absent in the case of an individual, or simple and unlimited partnerships. They hold no franchise or special privilege conferred by the sovereign not belonging to citizens generally of common right. The right of individuals to combine their activities, as partners, is independent and antecedent to governments."

"In Home Insurance Co. v. New York, 134 U.S. 594 10 S.Ct. 593, 595, 33 L.Ed. 1025, the court said: "No constitutional objection lies in the way of a legislative body prescribing any mode of measurement to determine the amount it will charge for the privileges it bestows." The court was dealing with a tax imposed on corporations for the privilege of doing business in the state of New York."

"The literal interpretation of a statute is finding out the true sense by making the statute its own expositor."

[Corn v. Fort, Term., 95 S.W.2d. 620 (1936)]

N.Y. Ex Rel. Cohn v. Graves (Mar. 1, 1937)

"Income from rents. That the receipt of income by a resident of the territory of a taxing sovereignty is a taxable event is universally recognized. Domicile itself affords a basis for such taxation. Enjoyment of the privileges of residence in the state and the attendant right to invoke the protection of its laws are inseparable from responsibility for sharing the costs of government. "Taxes are what we pay for civilized society . . ." See Compañia General de Tabacos de Filipinas v. Collector of Internal Revenue, 275 U.S. 87, 100, 72 L.Ed. 177, 183, 48 S.Ct. 100. A tax measured by the net income of residents is an equitable method of distributing the burdens of government among those who are privileged to enjoy its benefits. The tax, which is apportioned to the ability of the taxpayer to pay it, is founded upon the protection afforded by the state to the recipient of the income in his person, in his right to receive the income and in his enjoyment of it when received."

"Neither analysis of the two types of taxes, nor consideration of the bases upon which the power to impose them rests, supports the contention that a tax on income is a tax on the land which produces it. The incidence of a tax on income differs from that of a tax on property. Neither tax is dependent upon the possession by the taxpayer of the subject of the other. His income may be taxed, though he owns no property, and his property may be taxed although it produces no income. The two taxes are measured by different standards, the one by the amount of income received over a period of time, the other by the value of the property at a particular date."

"Nothing which was said or decided in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co., 157 U.S. 429, 39 L.Ed. 759, 15 S.Ct. 673, calls for a different conclusion. There the question for decision was whether a federal tax on income derived from rents of land is a direct tax requiring apportionment under Art. I, §2, cl. 3 of the Constitution. In holding that the tax was "direct," the Court did not rest its decision upon the ground that the tax was a tax on the land, or that it was subject to every limitation which the Constitution imposes on property taxes. It determined only that for purposes of apportionment there were similarities in the operation of the two kinds of tax which made it appropriate to classify both as direct, and within the constitutional command. See Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co., supra, (157 U.S. pp. 580, 581, 39 L.Ed. 818, 819, 15 S.Ct. 673); Brushaber v. Union P. R. Co., 240 U.S. 1, 16, 60 L.Ed. 493, 501 36 S.Ct. 236 [cites omitted]."

Davis v. Boston & M. R. Co. (Apr. 14, 1937)

"Taxation by Congress is limited to those forms of taxes described in the Constitution, and with respect to them the only limitations are that a direct tax shall be apportioned between the states and that duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform and levied only for the purposes specified. (Const. art. 1 §8)."

"Tax imposed by Social Security Act on employers with respect to having individuals in their employ is not valid as an "excise tax" within the Constitution (Social Security Act §901 et seq., 42 U.S.C.A. §1101 et seq.; Const. art. 1, §8)."

"While the courts will not declare acts of Congress of no effect because some motive outside the powers of Congress may have actuated Congress in passing it, the provisions of an act of Congress must be reasonably adapted to some purpose within the powers vested in Congress and not with a view to accomplishing some other purpose wholly reserved to the states (Const. Amend. 10)."

"Though the court may think an act of Congress embodies a commendable social plan and are in sympathy with its purpose and intended result, if its provisions go beyond the limits of federal power and extend into the field of power reserved to the states, the court must so declare (Const. Amend. 10)."

"The general welfare of some or even of all the states in matters reserved to the states when taken together cannot be held to constitute the general welfare of the United States within constitutional provision authorizing taxes, duties, imposts, and excise taxes to pay debts and provide for the common defense or general welfare (Const. art. 1, §8)."

"... it was stipulated by all the parties that: "the only issue involved in the case, either directly or indirectly, is whether title IX of chapter 531, 49 Stat. 620 [section 901 et seq. (42 U.S.C.A. §1101 et seq.)], approved Aug. 14, 1935, is an Act of Congress within its powers under the Constitution of the United States, or in violation of the Fifth Amendment thereof; and the only way in which that issue is raised is with respect to the payments under that title IX."

"The Social Security Act contains eleven titles, each having separate objects in view, viz.: I. Old Age Assistance (section 1 et seq. [42 U.S.C.A. §301 et seq.]); II. Old Age Benefits (section 201 et seq. [42 U.S.C.A. §401 et seq.]); III. Unemployment Compensation (section 301 et seq. [42 U.S.C.A. §501 et seq.]); N. Aid to Dependent Children (section 401 et seq. [42 U.S.C.A. §601 et seq.]); V. Maternal and Child Welfare (section 501 et seq. [42 U.S.C.A. §701 et seq.]); VI. Public Health Work (section 601 et seq. [42 U.S.C.A. §801 et seq.]); VII. The Creation of a Social Security Board (section 701 et seq. [42 U.S.C.A. §901 et seq.]); VIII. Taxes with respect to Employment (section 801 et seq. [42 U.S.C.A. §1001 et seq.]); IX. Taxes for Benefit of Unemployment (section 901 et seq. [42 U.S.C.A. §1101 et seq.]); X. Grants to State in Aid of the Blind (section 1001 et seq. [42 U.S.C.A. §1201 et seq.]); XI. General Provisions relating to Definitions, Rules and Separability of the Provisions of the Act (section 1101 et seq. [42 U.S.C.A. §1301 et seq.]). On its face the entire act was passed to provide financial aid for the unfortunate, the dependent, and those incapacitated by age, or who for any reason are, temporarily, at least, unable to obtain gainful employment."

"Title IX imposes a tax on employers of eight or more, except an employer of agricultural labor, domestic servants, or where the service is performed as an officer or member of a vessel on the navigable waters of the United States; or performed by an individual in the employ of son, daughter, or spouse; or by a child under 21 years of age in the employ of his father or mother; or performed in the employ of the United States, or of an instrumentality of the United States, or performed in the employ of a state or a political subdivision thereof, or of one or more state; or services performed in behalf of any charitable organization, or any corporation, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual."

"It is sometimes suggested that, since the states are powerless to solve the problem presented by unemployment in an emergency such as was passed through in the last four years, therefore there must by power in the federal government to meet the situation. A similar suggestion was made in the case of State of Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U.S. 46, at page 89, 27 S.Ct. 655, 664, 51 L.Ed. 956:

"All legislative power must be vested in either the state or the national government; no legislative powers belong to a state government other than those which affect solely the internal affairs of that state; consequently all powers which are national in their scope must be found vested in the Congress of the United States."

"But," the court said, "the proposition that there are legislative powers affecting the nation as a whole which belong to, although not expressed in the grant of powers, is in direct conflict with the doctrine that this is a government of enumerated powers. That this is such a government clearly appears from the Constitution, independently of the Amendments, for otherwise there would be an instrument granting certain specified things made operative to grant other and distinct things. This natural construction of the original body of the Constitution is made absolutely certain by the 10th Amendment." "

"Again the Supreme Court very aptly said in Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U.S. 107, 151, 31 S.Ct. 342, 349, 55 L.Ed. 389, Ann.Cas. 1912B, 1312:

""Although there have been from time to time intimations that there might be some tax which was not a direct tax nor included under the words 'duties, imposts, and excises, such a tax for more than one hundred years of national existence has as yet remained undiscovered, notwithstanding the stress of particular circumstances has invited thorough investigation into sources of revenue." Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429, 557, 15 S.Ct. 673, 39 L.Ed. 759; Thomas v. United States, 192 U.S. 363, 370, 24 S.Ct. 305, 48 L.Ed. 481.

"Again in the case of Carter v. Carter Coal Co., supra, 298 U.S. 238, at page 291, 56 S.Ct. 855, 864, 80 L.Ed. 1160, the court said:

" "The proposition, often advanced and as often discredited, that the power of the federal government inherently extends to purposes affecting the Nation as a whole with which the states severally cannot deal or cannot adequately deal, and the related notion that Congress, entirely apart from those powers delegated by the Constitution, may enact laws to promote the general welfare, have never been accepted but always definitely rejected by this court."

"And again on page 292 U.S., 56 S.Ct. 855, 864, 80 L.Ed. 1160:

""In the Framers Convention, the proposal to confer a general power akin to that just discussed was included in Mr. Randolph's resolutions, the sixth of which, among other things, declared that the National Legislature ought to enjoy the legislative rights vested in Congress by the Confederation; and 'moreover to legislate in all cases to which the separate States are incompetent, or in which the harmony of the United States may be interrupted by the exercise of individual Legislation.' The convention, however, declined to confer upon Congress power in such general terms; instead of which it carefully limited the powers which it thought wise to intrust to Congress by specifying them, thereby denying all others not granted expressly or by necessary implication. It made no grant of authority to Congress to legislate substantively for the general welfare, United States v. Butler, supra, 297 U.S. 1 at page 64, 56 S.Ct. 312, 80 L.Ed. 477, 102 A.L.R. 914; and no such authority exists, save as the general welfare may be promoted by the exercise of the powers which are granted."

"It is well settled that taxation by Congress is limited to those forms of taxes described in section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution, and with respect to these the only limitations are, that a direct tax shall be apportioned between the states and that duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform and be levied only for the purposes named therein."

"Is the tax imposed on employers under section 901 of title IX (42 U.S.C.A. §1101) an excise tax within the meaning of section 8 of article 1 of the Federal Constitution? If it is not, it is not a tax that Congress is authorized to levy. No other provisions of the Constitution than section 8 of article 1 give any powers to Congress to levy taxes and the kind of taxes it might levy are expressly defined therein as direct taxes, duties, imposts, and excise taxes, and these can only be levied to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

"At the time of the adoption of the Constitution the term 'excise tax' was used only in connection with a tax on goods, merchandise, and commodities.

"Blackstone in his Commentaries, 1 Blackstone, p. 308, in speaking of the different forms of taxation said:

""Directly opposite in its nature to this (direct tax) is the excise duty; which is an inland imposition, paid sometimes upon the consumption of the commodity, or frequently upon the retail sale, which is the last stage before the consumption."

"Adam Smith in 1776 in his 'The Wealth of Nations,' said:

""The duties of excise are imposed chiefly upon goods of home produce destined for home consumption. They are imposed only upon a few sorts of goods of the more general use. * * * They fall almost altogether upon what I call luxuries."

"The tax imposed by the British Act of 1777 and cited by the government in support of its contention was clearly a luxury tax on male servants. It did not apply to any servant employed for the purpose of husbandry or manufacture, or of any trade or calling by which the employer of such servant earned a profit.

"Hamilton in the Federalist, No. 21, speaking of excises, describes them as "Taxes on articles of consumption."

"Gallatin speaks of an excise tax as an excise on "consumable commodities."

"As defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Rawle's Third Revision, p. 551, commodity is a broader term than merchandise and "may mean almost any description of articles called movable or personal estate. Labor is not a commodity. [Rohlf v. Kasemeier, 140 Iowa, 182, 118 N.W. 276, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1285 [132 Am.St.Rep. 261, 17 Ann.Cas. 750]]. "

"In the discussions in the several state conventions, both as to the adoption of the Federal Constitution and with reference to the adoption of the respective state constitutions, it seems apparent that the understanding of the term "excise tax" was a tax laid upon articles of use or consumption, not according to their value, but an arbitrary amount fixed by the Legislature; and the term "commodity" appears to have been used in its ordinary sense as including goods, wares, merchandise, produce of the land and manufacture.

"Massachusetts in framing its Constitution in 1780, in addition to the ordinary direct taxes, authorized the Legislature to impose "reasonable duties and excises upon any produce, goods, wares merchandise and commodities whatsoever."

"Notwithstanding the definition of the word "commodities" found in the dictionaries, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts gave to the word a broader meaning than the lexicographers in the case of Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 252, 256:

-This last word [commodities] will perhaps embrace everything, which may be a subject of taxation, and has been applied by our legislature, from the earliest practice under the constitution, to the privilege of using particular branches of business or employment, as the business of an auctioneer, of an attorney, of a tavern keeper, of a retailer of spirituous liquors, etc.

"It must have been under this general term commodity, which signifies convenience, privilege, profit and gains, as well as goods and wares, which are only its vulgar signification, that the legislature assumed the right which has been uniformly and without complaint exercised for thirty years, of exacting a sum of money from attorneys, and barristers at law, vendue masters, tavern keepers and retailers."

"It is not necessary in the present case to determine the meaning of the word 'commodities, in reference to every possible application of it, but we are of opinion that it is not broad enough to include every occupation which one may follow, in the exercise of a natural right, without aid from the government, and without affecting the rights or interests of others in such a way as properly to call for governmental regulation. Whatever may be done by the Congress of the United States under its general power to levy excise taxes (see Thomas v. United States, 192 U.S. 363, 24 S.Ct. 305, 48 L.Ed. 481), we are of opinion that, under the limitation to commodities, the general court of Massachusetts cannot levy an excise tax upon the business of a husbandman or an ordinary mechanic. If this is not the necessary effect of the decision in Gleason v. McKay [134 Mass. 419], ubi supra, it certainly is intimated by the language of the court in the opinion." [Brackets original.]

"While the Federal Constitution does not contain the word "commodities" as a basis for levying excise taxes, there appears to be little, if any, difference in the limits imposed upon the interpretation of section 8 of article 1 by the Supreme Court of the United States and the interpretation placed on the constitutional provision of Massachusetts by the Massachusetts Supreme Court.

"Mr. Justice Story in his work on the Constitution, §§907, 908, says of section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution:

"Before proceeding to consider the nature and extent of the power conferred by this clause, and the reasons on which it is founded, it seems necessary to settle the grammatical construction of the clause, and to ascertain its true reading. Do the words, 'to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, constitute a distinct substantial power; and the words, 'to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States, constitute another distinct and substantial power? Or are the latter words connected with the former so as to constitute a qualification upon them? This has been a topic of political controversy, and has furnished abundant material for popular declamation and alarm. If the former be the true interpretation, then it is obvious that under color of the generality of the words "and provide for the common defense and general welfare, [sic] the government of the United States is, in reality, a government of general and unlimited powers, notwithstanding the subsequent enumeration of specific powers. If the latter be the true construction, then the power of taxation only is given by the clause, and it is limited to objects of a national character, 'to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and the general welfare.' §908. The former opinion has been maintained by some minds of great ingenuity and liberality of views. The latter has been the generally received sense of the nation, and seems supported by reasoning at once solid and impregnable. * * * In this sense, Congress has not an unlimited power of taxation; but it is limited to specific objects,--the payment of the public debts, and providing for the common defense and general welfare. A tax, therefore, laid by Congress for neither of these objects, would be unconstitutional, as an excess of its legislative authority."

"Excise taxes were defined in Patton v. Brady, 184 U.S. 608, 617. 22 S.Ct. 493, 496, 46 L.Ed. 713, as:

"An inland imposition, paid sometimes upon the consumption of the commodity, or frequently upon the retail sale, which is the last stage before the consumption." And on page 618 of 184 U.S., 22 S.Ct. 493, 497, 46 L.Ed. 713: "To determine, then, what excise means, we have for our guidance, first, an enumeration of the articles that it fell on in Great Britain in 1787. We have, second, the nature of the tax as judicially determined; and we have, third, the definition of it, or the common understanding of men about it, as given by the Encyclopedia Britannica [sic] and the Century Dictionary. Taking these three sources of information and combining them, it would seem that the leading idea of excise is that it is a tax, laid without rule or principle, upon consumable articles, upon the process of their manufacture and upon licenses to sell them."

"The court in Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U.S. 107, 151, 31 S.Ct. 342, 349, 55 L.Ed. 389, Ann.Cas. 1912B, 1312, adopted the definition of excise taxes found in Cooley on Constitutional Law (7th Ed.) p. 680:

"Excises are 'taxes laid upon the manufacture, sale, or consumption of commodities within the country, upon licenses to pursue certain occupations, and upon corporate privileges, which appears to cover the entire ground.

"A somewhat broader definition of excise taxes is found in Thomas v. United States, 192 U.S. 363, 370, 24 S.Ct. 305, 306, 48 L.Ed. 481:

""There is no occasion to attempt to confine the words duties, imposts, and excises to the limits of precise definition. We think that they were used comprehensively to cover customs and excise duties imposed on importation, consumption, manufacture, and sale of certain commodities, and privileges, particular business transactions, vocations, occupations, and the like." (Italics supplied.)

"Section 901 of title IX (42 U.S.C.A. §1101) under consideration declares the tax imposed on all employers to be an excise tax, but as the Supreme Court said in Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., supra, 220 U.S. 107, at page 145, 31 S.Ct. 342, 346, 55 L.Ed. 389, Ann.Cas. 1912B, 1312:

""While the mere declaration contained in a statute that it shall be regarded as a tax of a particular character does not make it such if it is apparent that it cannot be so designated consistently with the meaning and effect of the act," although such a declaration may "be entitled to some weight."

"It was also held in Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., supra, that the corporation tax imposed under the Tariff Law of 1909 was valid as an excise tax; but in Gleason v. McKay, 134 Mass. 419, 424, where the court was considering a tax laid on firms, copartnerships, and other associations, it was said:

""It will not be seriously contended that the privileges or rights which are taxed by this statute can be properly described as either produce, goods, wares or merchandise. Do they fairly come within the term 'commodities, in the sense in which it is used in the Constitution? Ever since the adoption of the Constitution, the Legislature in its practice, and this court in its adjudications, have given a very broad and extensive meaning to this term. It has been repeatedly held that corporate franchises enjoyed by grant from the government are commodities, and subject to an excise. So with corporate franchises granted by a foreign government, which by comity are permitted to be exercised within this Commonwealth. So where the Legislature has thought, upon considerations of public policy, that certain occupations or callings, of a public or quasi public character, should be carried on under governmental regulation, it has been usual to impose a reasonable fee for a license."

"The defendant in the above case not being a corporation, but a common-law partnership "It enjoyed no franchise or special privilege conferred upon it by the Legislature, but was exercising a common right." Opinion of Justices, 266 Mass. 590, 592, 593, 165 N.E. 904, 63 A.L.R. 952.

"In contrasting these two propositions, the Justices in their opinion in 247 Mass. 589, 593, 143 N.E. 808, 810, said:

""The right to set up and maintain theatres and other places of public amusement is not natural and inherent. Working by an artisan at his trade, carrying on an ordinary business, or engaging in a common occupation or calling cannot be subjected to a license fee or excise."" These plainly are not affected with a public interest"--citing Gleason v. McKay, supra; O'Keeffe v. Somerville, supra.

"And on page 597 of 247 Mass., 143 N.E. 808, 811:

""The rights to labor and to do ordinary business are natural, essential and inalienable, partaking of the nature both of personal liberty and of private property." [Bold added.]

Wallace*," 259 U.S. 44, 42 S.Ct. 453, 66 L.Ed. 822, are cases where so-called excise taxes have been held not to be within the powers vested in Congress as involving matters reserved to the states.

"But nowhere do we find that an excise tax has ever been imposed in this country on the natural right to employ labor in manufacturing, or in any trade or calling for profit.

"It is urged that the tax imposed under section 901 of title IX (42 U.S.C.A. §1101) is imposed on the privilege of doing business. If Congress had so intended, we think it would have said so. Section 901 does not impose a tax on any business in which any employer may be engaged, nor on the manufacture of any goods, wares, merchandise, or commodity, but solely with respect to having in one's employ eight or more employees, the amount of the tax being based on the amount of the total pay roll."

""The Constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States'. Every journey to a forbidden end begins with the first step; and the real danger of such a step by the federal government in the direction of taking over the powers of the states is that the end of the journey may find the states so despoiled of their powers, or--what may amount to the same thing--so relieved of the responsibilities which possession of the powers necessarily enjoins, as to reduce them to little more than geographical subdivisions of the national domain. It is safe to say that if, when the Constitution was under consideration, it had been thought that any such danger lurked behind its plain words, it would never have been ratified." (Italics supplied.) Carter v. Carter Coal Co., supra, 298 U.S. 238, at 295, 56 S.Ct. 855, 866, 80 L.Ed. 1160."

"It is said that a state is not obligated to pass an unemployment act, and many states have not done so. Neither were employers obligated to comply with the Child Labor Law (40 Stat. 1138, 42 Stat. 306)--they could have paid the tax or penalty--or farmers to reduce their acreage in accordance with the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C.A. §601 et seq.)--they could have refused the aid--but the consequences of failure to do so were such that they could not afford to do otherwise. So in this case, if a state does not pass an unemployment compensation act complying with the requirement of Congress, or of the proper federal bureau, the entire tax assessed on employers under section 901 goes into the United States Treasury. Such a state must itself bear whatever financial burdens result to it from unemployment in its industries. No payments for unemployment assistance are made from the Federal Treasury. A state may not comply at once, but, if the act is held valid, the disadvantages resulting to the state and its employers and the consequent dissatisfaction of its employees, it is quite obvious, will sooner or later compel all the states to enact such legislation, and in such form as will receive the approval of the Social Security Board created by the act. That this amounts to coercion of the states and control by Congress of a matter clearly within the province of the states cannot be denied. If valid, it marks the end of responsible state government in any field in which the United States chooses to take control by the use of its taxing power. If the United States can take control of unemployment insurance and old age assistance by the coercive use of taxation, it can equally take control of education and local health conditions by levying a heavy tax and remitting it in the states which conform their educational system or their health laws to the dictates of a federal board. It is a significant fact that many of the acts in the states provide that the state law shall not remain in effect if title IX is declared unconstitutional, which indicates beyond a doubt that the states in self-defense consider themselves compelled by the act of Congress to enact a state law. It is plainly the duty of the courts to uphold and support the present Constitution until it has been changed in the legal way.

"While courts will not declare acts of Congress of no effect because some other motive outside the powers of Congress may have actuated Congress in passing it, though not shown on the face of the act, the provisions of an act of Congress must be reasonably adapted to some purpose within the powers vested in Congress and not with a view to accomplishing some other purpose wholly reserved to the states. Linder v. United States, 268 U.S. 5, 17, 45 S.Ct. 446, 448, 69 L.Ed. 819, 39 A.L.R. 229.

"As to the wisdom, as a social aim, of providing for the unfortunate, the dependent, or those permanently or temporarily unable to earn a livelihood, we are in sympathy; but, even though we may think an act of Congress embodies a commendable social plan and are in sympathy with its purpose and intended results, if its provisions go beyond the limits of federal power and extend into the field of power reserved to the states, we must so declare. Railroad Retirement Board v. Alton R. R. Co., 295 U.S. 330, 347, 55 S.Ct. 758, 761, 79 L.Ed. 1468.

"However general such social needs may be in the states as sovereign units, they are not necessarily a part of the general welfare of the United States. Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, supra; Railroad Retirement Board v. Alton R. R. Co., supra; Carter v. Carter Coal Co., supra, 298 U.S. 238, at pages 290, 291, 56 S.Ct. 855, 863, 864, 80 L.Ed. 1160. If the dual form of our government is to be maintained as conceived by the framers of the Federal Constitution, the general welfare of some or even of all the states in matters reserved to the states, when taken together, cannot be held to constitute the general welfare of the United States within the meaning of section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution.

"Therefore, to provide unemployment benefits regardless of need, to persons who have worked in local employments in local trade and manufacturing within a state, not related to interstate commerce, or in any calling not related to the matters subject to the control of the Congress, is not to provide for the general welfare of the United States.

"There is no warrant for taking the property or money of an employer and transferring it to his employees without compensation, not even by taxation, Citizens' Savings & Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L.Ed. 455, whether the purpose is a commendable one or not. Title IX, coupled with title III, is an attempt by Congress to impose a tax on employers of eight or more as a means of assuring certain employees, deprived of employment for any reason, of a certain amount of compensation during their period of unemployment, and to regulate the condition under which such employees shall be entitled to aid.

"A tax, in the general understanding of the term, and as used in the Constitution, signifies an exaction for the support of the government. The word has never been thought to connote the expropriation of money from one group for the benefit of another. * * * The exaction cannot be wrested out of its setting, denominated an excise for raising revenue and legalized by ignoring its purpose as a mere instrumentality for bringing about a desired end. To do this would be to shut our eyes to what all others than we can see and understand." United States v. Butler, supra, 297 U.S. 1, at page 61, 56 S.Ct. 312, 317,

"If the act is carried out as planned by Congress, and a tax is imposed on every employer which is credited against a tax imposed by the state, and, under the conditions imposed by section 302 and 303 of title I[1 and section 903 of title IX (42 U.S.C.A. §§502, 503, 1103), is paid to employees found to be eligible, it amounts, in effect, to taking the property of every employer for the benefit of a certain class of employees. The entire plan, viewed as a whole, is an attempt to do indirectly what Congress cannot do directly, and to assume national control over a subject clearly within the jurisdiction of the states.

"Congress by the provisions of section 903 not only takes charge of the funds raised by the states, but has undertaken to dictate the terms of state legislation in relation to the conditions under which a person is entitled to receive unemployment compensation under a state act.

"The federal government has no power, granted or inherent, in respect to the internal affairs of the states. Carter v. Carter Coal Co., supra, 298 U.S. 238, at pages 295, 56 S.Ct. 855, 856, 80 L.Ed. 1160. It has no right to say to the several states that, in order to obtain aid for the unemployed in its industries, they must enact statutes which shall provide that: "(1) All unemployment compensation must be paid ..."

"Instances are cited of appropriations by Congress for the aid of states in caring for relief of its citizens and in aid of those unable to earn a livelihood, for flood relief in the states, for relief from drought in certain agricultural states, or to relieve losses from earthquakes, here or abroad, or from disastrous fires, and particularly to aid or relieve suffering in other countries, but no special tax was imposed for these. Here the national government is undertaking to impose its will on the several states in regard to one of the oldest and most universal problems in human life: The care of children, of old people, and in aid of the unemployed. In this country it has always been done locally or by the states. Numerous cases can be cited of appropriations made for purposes not within the connotation of the term "general welfare of the United States," but they have never been questioned, and there is no process to prevent an appropriation for such purposes by Congress, as was decided in Massachusetts v. Mellon (Frothingham v. Mellon), 262 U.S. 447, 486, 487, 43 S.Ct. 597, 600, 601, 67 L.Ed. 1078, and in State of Florida v. Mellon, 273 U.S. 12, 18, 47 S.Ct. 265, 266, 71 L.Ed. 511; United States v. Butler, supra, 297 U.S. 1, at page 73, 56 S.Ct. 312, 322, 80 L.Ed. 477, 102 A.L.R. 914. The remedy, if one is necessary, is with the people who select their representatives.

"President Cleveland, in 1887, vetoed an attempted act of Congress to aid counties in Texas injured"" by drought, saying in his veto message:

""I can find no warrant for such an appropriation in the Constitution. The lesson should be constantly enforced that, though the people should support the government, the government should not support the people."

" "The government also makes the point that efforts to enact state legislation establishing high labor standards have been impeded by the belief that, unless similar action is taken generally, commerce will be diverted from the states adopting such standards, and that this fear of diversion has led to demands for federal legislation on the subject of wages and hours. The apparent implication is that the federal authority under the commerce clause should be deemed to extend to the establishment of rules to govern wages and hours in intrastate trade and industry generally throughout the country, thus overriding the authority of the states to deal with domestic problems arising from labor conditions in their internal commerce.

""It is not the province of the Court to consider the economic advantages or disadvantages of such a centralized system. It is sufficient to say that the Federal Constitution does not provide for it."

"As stated above, the issue is not what powers Congress ought to have to meet conditions as viewed by the executive and legislative branches of the government, but what powers are vested in Congress under the Constitution. The Supreme Court through a long series of opinions has defined those powers and the limitations upon them. If the Constitution, as construed through the years, requires amendments to meet new conditions, the way is provided therein."

"It seems to be generally agreed the regulation of employment in the states is a matter solely within their jurisdiction. This, we understand, was the basis of the court's decision in the recent minimum wage law of the state of Washington for women; and only in matters where Congress has control, as in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, may Congress regulate the wages and hours of labor." [Bold added.]

"A tax levied upon property because of its ownership is a direct tax, whereas one levied upon property because of its use is an excise, duty or impost."

[Manufacturers Trust Co. v. United States, 32 F.Supp. 289 (1940)]

Bach v. Rothensies (Jan. 17, 1941)

"That which is not in fact the taxpayer's income cannot be made such for tax purposes by calling it "income". Revenue Act of 1934, §§42, 161, 162, 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Code, §§42 161, 162."

"That which is not in fact the taxpayer's income, cannot be made such by calling it income. Hoeper v. Commission, 284 U.S. 206, 215, 52 S.Ct. 120, 76 L.Ed. 248, 78 A.L.R. 346."

"Where a taxpayer is a beneficiary of a trust estate with the right to receive a share of the income therefrom, and he dies leaving the trust estate as a continuing taxable entity from which the taxes on his share of the accrued income may be collected on the basis of cash returns, the provisions of Section 42 relating to accrued income do not apply to his income for his life period. Applying the provision would work an inequality that is avoidable, and it must be the policy of the law to seek an equitable application of all statutory provisions." [Bold added.]

Shuster v. Helvering (July 16, 1941)

"Contracts should not be treated as "property" for income tax purposes."

"A corporation president's drafts on corporation in excess of his credit for quarterly payments, agreed to be made to him from corporation's net earnings in consideration of release of his claims against corporation, were not "advances" on such payments, but "loans", so that avails thereof were not taxable income of president for years in which paid, and credits allowed to pay them were income in years wherein made."

Helvering v. Edison Bros. Stores (Feb. 3, 1943)

"Treasury Department cannot, by interpretative regulations, make income of that which is not income within meaning of Revenue Act."

"Congress cannot, without apportionment, tax as income that which is not income within meaning of the Sixteenth Amendment."

"Congress in defining gross income in Revenue Act manifested intention to use to its fullest extent the power granted it by the Sixteenth Amendment."

"The meaning of the word "income" in the Sixteenth Amendment and in Revenue Acts adopted pursuant thereto is that given to it in common speech and everyday usage, but what is or is not income must be determined in each case according to substance without regard to form."

"The meaning of the word "income" in the language of accountancy and economics was not controlling in determining construction of Revenue Acts defining income, and of administrative regulations interpreting the Revenue Acts."

"The ruling of one administrative department of government concerning income accounting could not control that of another department made for an entirely different purpose under another act of Congress."

"A Treasury Regulation interpreting Revenue Acts of 1934 and 1936 defining "income" were valid and applicable to corporate taxpayer's sales of its stock in 1935 and 1927, notwithstanding substantially identical definition of income in prior Revenue Acts had been given a more restricted administrative interpretation."

"The provisions of Internal Revenue Code that "income" includes dividends and that distribution to shareholders in stock or right to acquire stock shall not be treated as "dividend" to the extent that it does not constitute income within Sixteenth Amendment, and administrative regulations thereunder, do not make stock dividends taxable as "income" in contravention of prior decision of Supreme Court that stock dividends were not income within Sixteenth Amendment."

"Under literal reading of provision of Internal Revenue Code that distribution in stock or right to acquire stock shall not be treated as dividends to the extent that it "does not constitute income", within Sixteenth Amendment, use of "does" instead of some word of futurity indicates that time of enactment or at the latest the time of receipt of dividend is critical for determining taxability."

treated as dividend to the extent that it does not constitute income within Sixteenth Amendment, court refused to impute to Congress intent to hold meaning of the provision in suspense, in departure from usual policy of providing practical basis for timely settlement of fact questions, until termination of litigation challenging previous decision of the Supreme Court that stock dividends were not income."

"The Supreme Court can reconsider a matter only when it is again properly brought before court in a case or controversy, and if the case requires statutory basis, as a tax case does, the new case must have sufficient statutory support."

"Speculation upon political factors which may have motivated choice of language has no place in construction of acts of Congress."

Congressional Record for the 78' Congress (Mar. 27, 1943)

"Historically, our Federal income-tax law goes back to a bill signed by President Lincoln on August 5, 1861. It was first announced as a war-revenue measure and even at that early date one provision of the act provided for collections by withholding at the source. The act was carried on the statute books for several years. In its early stages it was definitely an excise tax or a duty and so construed by the courts. A most informative statement in regard to the early history of the income-tax law was recently written by Mr. F. Morse Hubbard, formerly of the legislative drafting research fund of Columbia University, and a former legislative draftsman in the Treasury Department. This compilation of information concerning our income-tax law is so well written that I am making it a part of my statement and the record:

"I. THE INCOME TAX IS AN EXCISE TAX, AND INCOME IS MERELY THE BASIS FOR DETERMINING ITS AMOUNT

"The first Federal income tax law was approved by President Lincoln on August 5, 1861, a little less than 4 months after the bombardment of Fort Sumter and the President's call for 75,000 volunteers, and less than a month after the disaster at Bull Run. It was distinctly a war-revenue measure. The act of 1861 (12 Stat. 292) provided for a tax to be levied, assessed, and collected in the year 1862, the tax to be based on income for the "preceding" year, that is, the year 1861. This tax, which was due and payable on or before June 30, 1862, was levied only for that 1 year.

"In 1862, in order to meet the need for continued war revenues, Congress passed the second income-tax law. This act took effect on July 1, 1862, the day after the tax under the act of 1861 expired. The act of 1862 (12 Stat. 432) which used the word "duty" instead of "tax," provided that this duty should be levied, collected, and paid in the year 1863 and in each year thereafter until and including the year 1866 "and no longer" (sec. 92). Like the act of 1861 it provided that the tax (or duty) collected in each year should be based on the income for the "preceding" year (sec. 91). At the same time it contained a provision for withholding at the source, which will be referred to later on."

"In sustaining the Civil War income tax laws, the Supreme Court held that the tax based on income was not a direct tax but was an excise or duty and as such did not require apportionment among the States. Springer v. United States ((1880) 102 U.S. 586). This decision rendered after the income tax had been thoroughly tested for a period of 10 years, represents a deliberate determination as to the fundamental nature of the tax.

"The true character of the income tax was at the outset so firmly fixed in the minds of those charged with its administration that for 6 years the Treasury Department held that if a person died at any time between January 1 of one year and the date when his return was due in the following year the income for such period was not subject to tax, even though he may have made a return of income before his death in advance of the due date (T.D. June 9, 1865, 2 Internal Revenue Record 54). This rule was not changed until 1867, when it was held that such income was subject to the tax and should be returned by the executor or administrator (T.D. Apr. 6, 1867, 5 Internal Revenue Record 109; T.D. Jan. 1, 1868, 7 Internal Revenue Record 59). See also Mandell v. Pierce (C.C.D.Mass. 1868, 16 Fed.Cas.576). The change was doubtless prompted by two important considerations; first, the taxes expired by definite limitation within a very few years; and, second, persons whose tax had been withheld at the source would already have paid their tax up to the date of death. At any rate, the change did not involve any modification in the concept of the income tax as an excise tax based on income.

"After a lapse of about a quarter of a century Congress again passed an income-tax law. The act of 1894 (28 Stat. 509, 553; Aug. 27, 1894) provided for a tax to be levied, collected, and paid "from and after" January 1, 1895, "and until the 1st day of January 1900" (sec. 27). Like the Civil War acts it provided that the tax should be based on the "income received in the preceding calendar year." Although the Supreme Court held this portion of the act to be unconstitutional, it still recognized that the income tax was in essence an excise tax. The Court said that a tax on income from business, privileges, or employments, standing by itself, would be valid as an excise tax; but the tax on investment income was held to be invalid because the Court regarded a tax based on income from property as a tax on the property itself and therefore a direct tax which must be apportioned among the states (Pollock v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co., (1895), 157 U.S. 429, 158 U.S. 601). The Court said that to sustain a portion of the tax while declaring the rest invalid, "would leave the burden of the tax to be borne by professions, trades, employments, or vocations; and in that way what was intended as a tax on capital would remain, in substance, a tax on occupations and labor. We cannot believe that such was the intention of Congress" (158 U.S. 601, 637). So the entire portion of the act relating to income tax was declared invalid.

"There are still those who think that in this case the Court went further than necessary in treating a tax based on income from property as a tax on property itself, and that in any event the excise-tax principle should have been applied to rents and other investment income, as was done under the Civil War acts. In other words, the making and holding of investments, while perhaps not technically a business, is, at least, a kind of activity or privilege which can properly be subjected to an excise tax measured by reference to the income derived therefrom.

"That investment income may be included as a part of the basis for measuring an excise tax was recognized by Congress in the act of August 5, 1909 (36 Stat. 11, 112). This act provided "That every corporation * * * shall be subject to pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business by such corporation, * * * equivalent to 1 percent upon the entire net income over and above $5,000 received by it from all sources during such year, exclusive of amounts received by it as dividends upon stock of other corporations * * * subject to the tax hereby imposed; * * *." Certain corporations, such as religious, charitable, and educational organizations, etc., were specifically exempted from the tax.

"The tax imposed by this act was really an income tax in that it was based on net income, but was given the correct designation of "excise tax." It was imposed with respect to carrying on or doing business; and it should be noted that the basis was net income from all sources, except dividends from other corporations subject to the tax. Such dividends were excepted not because they constituted investment income but because they represented income which had already been taxed. The sole test of taxability under this act was whether a corporation was engaged in business. If it was so engaged, then all the income (except dividends), including investment income as well as strictly business income, was used in measuring the tax. The Supreme Court held that the fact that the tax was measured by net income, and that income from nontaxable property or property not used in business was included in computing net income, did not prevent the tax from being construed as an excise tax which did not require apportionment. Flint v. Stone Tract Co. et al. ((1911) 220 U.S. 107."

"The sixteenth amendment authorizes the taxation of income "from whatever source derived--thus taking in investment income--"without apportionment among the several States." "The Supreme Court has held that the sixteenth amendment did not extend the taxing power of the United States to new or excepted subjects but merely removed the necessity which might otherwise exist for an apportionment among the States of taxes laid on income whether it be derived from one source or another. So the amendment made it possible to bring investment income within the scope of a general income-tax law, but did not change the character of the tax. It is still fundamentally an excise or duty with respect to the privilege of carrying on any activity or owning any property which produces income.

"The income tax is, therefore, not a tax on income as such. It is an excise tax with respect to certain activities and privileges which is measured by reference to the income which they produce. The income is not the subject of the tax: it is the basis for determining the amount of tax."

"The purpose of the income tax is to raise revenue in the year of its levy. It is a method by which some of us make annual payments on account of the governmental expenses and the public debt of all of us--contributions to a common fund to preserve the blessings of liberty." [Bold added.]

"The applicable law is to be found principally in sections 21, 22 and 23 of 26 U.S.C.A., Internal Revenue Code. Under section 21 the net income is defined as gross income computed under section 22 less the deductions allowed by section 23. Gross income is defined by section 22 (in relevant part) as follows: "Gross income' includes gains, profits, and income derived from * * * businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal * * * also from * * * transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever." "It is to be noted that it is only profits and income from business which constitutes gross income."

C.I.R. v. Minzer (June 3, 1960)

"It is argued that the doctrine urged by the Commissioner represents an unprecedented extension of the concept of income as is found in Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189, 40 S.Ct. 189, 190, 64 L.Ed. 521. There taxable income was characterized as "the gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined." We cannot see that our decision in any way expands the Eisner v. Macomber principle. On the contrary we think our determination is within it. But if the Eisner v. Macomber statement is regarded as a deterrent to the decision we have reached, we are taken from under its interdict by a later case from the Supreme Court where it is said that the phrase in Eisner v. Macomber "was not meant to provide a touchstone to all future gross income questions". Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Glenshaw Glass Co., 348 U.S. 426, 75 S.Ct. 473, 477, 99 L.Ed. 483. See Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. LeBue [sic], 351 U.S. 243, 76 S.Ct. 800, 100 L.Ed. 1142."

[Commissioner Internal Revenue v. Minzer, 279 F.2d. 338 (1960)]

Conner v. United States (Apr. 18, 1969)

"There must be gain before there is "income" within Sixteenth Amendment."

"Under Internal Revenue Code of 1954, if there is no gain, there is no "income." 26 U.S.C.A. (I.R.C.1954) §61(a)."

"Plainly, the amendment was not a grant of power to Congress to tax incomes, for such a power is one which Congress always had. It was adopted to meet the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429, 15 S.Ct. 673, 39 L.Ed. 759 (1895) which declared the Income Tax Act of 1894 unconstitutional on the ground that it was an unapportioned direct tax. See Bowers v. Kerbaugh-Empire Co., 271 U.S. 170, 173-174, 46 S.Ct. 449, 70 L.Ed. 886 (1926)."

"No attempt has ever been made by Congress to define with specificity the term "income" as it is used in the sixteenth amendment. In earlier taxing acts, it instead provided that "gross income" includes "gains, profits, and income" from various designated sources "or from any source whatsoever," leaving to administrative and judicial determination the inclusion or exclusion of certain items."

"The judiciary accepted this responsibility and in Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189, 207, 40 S.Ct. 189, 193, 64 L.Ed. 521 (1919), the Supreme Court, referring to two cases arising under the Corporation Tax Act of 1909, endorsed the following definition of income:

"Income may be defined as the gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined, provided it be understood to include profit gained through a sale or conversion of capital assets." (Emphasis Added.)"

"The language of section 61(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, set forth above, might at first glance appear to have broadened the definition of gross income by the omission of any reference to gain. This, however, is not so, because the Supreme Court had before it the then recently enacted 1954 Code of Internal Revenue when it decided Commissioner v. Glenshaw Glass Co., supra. It noted that, although the definition of gross income had been simplified, "no effect on its present broad scope was intended." 348 U.S. 432, 75 S.Ct. 477. In addition, the Court in General American Investors Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 348 U.S. 434, 75 S.Ct. 478, 99 L.Ed. 504 (1955), decided the same day as Glenshaw Glass Company, supra, held that "insider profits" under the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 were includable [sic] in the recipient corporation's gross income."

McComber, supra*, did not repudiate the concept that there must be gain before there is income within the meaning of the sixteenth amendment. 1 Mertens, section 5.02, p. 4. This is verified by the fact that in Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Lo Bue, 351 U.S. 243, 76 S.Ct. 800, 100 L.Ed. 1142 (1956), a year after the decisions in Glenshaw Glass Company, supra, and General American Investors v. Commissioner, supra, it was said:

"We have repeatedly held that in defining 'gross income' as broadly as it did in §22(a) Congress intended to 'tax all gains except those specifically exempted.'" 351 U.S. 246, 76 S.Ct. 803 (Emphasis Added.)"

"To the same effect, see Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Minzer, 279 F.2d. 338 (5th Cir. 1960).

"Accountants and economists may differ greatly as to what is or is not income. It is not, however, their theories that have guided the courts throughout the years. Instead, the courts have chosen to use the meaning given the term "income" by its everyday use in common speech. Helvering v. Edison Bros. Stores, 133 F.2d. 575 (8th Cir. 1943); 1 Mertens, supra, n. 5, p. 2. And the meaning of income in its everyday sense is "a gain or recurrent benefit usually measured in money that derives from capital or labor; also: the amount of such gain recovered by an individual in a given period of time." Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary, p. 425 (1965--emphasis Added). Income is nothing more nor less than realized gain. Shuster v. Helvering, 121 F.2d. 643 (2nd Cir. 1941). It is not synonymous with receipts. 47 C.J.S. Internal Revenue §98, p. 226."

"Whatever may constitute income, therefore, must have the essential feature of gain to the recipient. This was true when the sixteenth amendment became effective, it was true at the time of the decision in Eisner v. McComber [sic], supra, it was true under section 22(a) of the Internal Revenue code of 1939, and it is likewise true under section 61(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. If there is no gain, there is no income."

Income, including gross income, must be distinguished from gross receipts which can cover returns of capital. *Doyle v. Mitchell Bros. "A failure to file an income tax return does not violate IRC §7203 (which prohibits willful failure to file) if failure resulted from good faith misunderstanding of the law. United States v. Matosky, 421 F.2d. 410, 413 (7th Cir.); United States v. Ross, 626 F.2d. 77, 80 (9th Cir.1980)."

"Buras contends that district court erroneously instructed the jury that wages constitute income. In addition to arguing that only gain or profit can constitute income, Buras argues that the income tax is essentially an excise tax. He argues that he can be subject to an excise tax only if he benefits from "any sort of privilege extended by a government agency." Since he is only a wage earner, he argues that he cannot be subject to an excise tax.

"Treas. Reg. §1.61-2(a)(1) clearly includes wages within the definition of income. Buras, however, argues that this regulation is invalid because it is inconsistent with the constitutional definition of income. According to Buras, income must be derived from some source. Wages cannot be taxed because the wage earner enjoys no gain from that source. Since the wage earner exchanges his labor and personal time for its equivalent in money, he derives no gain and therefore cannot be taxed.

"Appellant's argument is refuted by one of the cases he cites. In Stratton's Independence, Ltd. v. Howbert, 231 U.S. 399, 415, 34 S.Ct. 136, 140, 58 L.Ed. 285 (1913), the Court did define income as gain derived from labor. The Court went on to explain, however, that "the earnings of the human brain and hand when unaided by capital" are commonly treated as income. Id.

"As for Buras' argument that he may not be taxed because he is a wage earner, the Sixteenth Amendment is broad enough to grant Congress the power to collect income tax regardless of the source of the taxpayer's income."

New Neighborhoods v. W.Va. Workers' Comp. Fund (Oct. 2, 1989)

"An excise tax is an indirect tax, one not directly imposed upon persons or property, see In re Beaman, 9 B.R. at 541, and is one that is "imposed on the performance of an act, the engaging in any occupation, or the enjoyment or [sic] privilege." In re Tri-Manufacturing and Sales Co., 82 B.R. at 60. Several courts, in concluding that workers' compensation premiums are excise taxes within the meaning of section 507(a)(7)(E), have focused upon the definition of "excise tax" set forth in Feiring, namely, that an excise tax is a pecuniary obligation imposed by a government to defray expenses of an authorized undertaking, see In re Tri-Manufacturing and Sales Co., and have concluded that the Congress in using the term "excise tax" intended for that category to "include all indirect taxes not otherwise included in section 507(a)(6)." 8.2 Authority for Taxation

Constitution for the United States of America, Article I, Section 2, Clause 3 (Sept. 17, 1787)

"Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service to a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons."

Constitution for the United States of America, Article I, Section 7 (Sept. 17, 1787)

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives; but the senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

"Every bill which shall have passed the house of representatives and the senate, shall, before it become a law, be presented to the president of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it, but if he shall return it, with his objections to that house in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that house, it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the journal of each house respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the President within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

"Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or, being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill."

"The Congress shall have power

"To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;" cl. 1.

"To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes;" cl. 3.

"To establish an uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States;" cl. 4.

"To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures;" cl. 5.

"To constitute tribunals inferior to the supreme court;" cl. 9.

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the state in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings;" cl. 17.

"Powers, Duties and Liabilities of Officials and Employees

"Internal Revenue Service officials and employees can act only in accordance with applicable statutory and regulatory provisions and are immune from civil damage suits arising out of acts committed within the scope of their authority"

"Officials and employees of the Internal Revenue Service can act only in accordance with applicable statutory and regulatory provisions. The procedural steps established by Congress must be followed by such officials and employees in enforcing the Internal Revenue Code. However, an Internal Revenue Service manual does not have to be followed since it is an internal document issued to instruct IRS personnel in performing their duties and does not create any enforceable rights for taxpayer."

"Internal Revenue Service personnel have the responsibility of making a tax return where none has been made by the taxpayer, as well as verifying such returns as have been filed. However, Internal Revenue employees have no duty to answer taxpayers' questions with regard to the requirements of the Code, or to warn taxpayers not to take illegal deductions."

"Federal tax officials and employees are immune from civil damage suits arising out of acts committed within the scope of their authority. However, it has been held that IRS agents have only qualified immunity, that is, they are immune when, and only when, they act in good faith, with reason to believe that they are acting lawfully.

"Under provisions of the Code imposing criminal sanctions, damages may be awarded to a person injured' by an unlawful act of a federal officer or employee acting in connection with any revenue law of the United States. However, there is authority to the contrary.

"Generally, no direct constitutional action for damages is available against federal tax officials and employees. However, such an action has been held proper under some circumstances. Following IRS procedures does not subject an IRS agent to liability for constitutional violations absent allegations of bad faith on the part of the IRS.

"A civil action against the United States is the exclusive remedy for recovering damages for reckless or intentional disregard of Code provisions in connection with collection of federal tax with respect to a taxpayer."

"The secretary is authorized to repay any officer or employee the amount recovered against him in any court for any taxes collected by him, and to repay to such officer or employee all damages and costs recovered against him by reason of anything done in the due performance of his official duty."

Cummings v. Missouri (Jan. 14, 1866)

"We admit the propositions of the counsel of Missouri, that the States which existed previous to the adoption of the Federal Constitution possessed originally all the attributes of sovereignty; and they still retain those attributes, except as they have been surrendered by the formation of the Constitution, and the amendments thereto; that the new States, upon their admission into the Union, became invested with equal rights, and were thereafter subject only to similar restrictions, and that among the rights reserved to the States is the right of each State to determine the qualifications of office, and the conditions upon which its citizens may exercise their various callings and pursuits within its jurisdiction.

"These are general propositions, and involve principles of the highest moment. But it by no means follows that, under the form of creating a qualification or attaching a condition, the States can, in effect, inflict a punishment for a past act which was not punishable at the time it was committed."

"The oath could not, therefore, have been required as a means of ascertaining whether parties were qualified or not for their respective callings or the trusts with which they were charged. It was required in order to reach the person, not the calling. It was exacted, not from any notion that the several acts designated indicated unfitness for the callings, but because it was thought that the several acts deserved punishment, and that for many of them there was no way to inflict punishment except by depriving the parties who had committed them of some of the rights and privileges of the citizen.

"The disabilities created by the Constitution of Missouri must be regarded as penalties--they constitute punishment. We do not agree with the counsel of Missouri that "to punish one is to deprive him of life, liberty' or property, and that to take from him anything less than these is no punishment at all." The learned counsel does not use these terms--life, liberty, and property--as comprehending every right known to the law. He does not include under liberty freedom from outrage on the feelings as well as restraints on the person. He does not include under property those estates which one may acquire in professions, though they are often the source of the highest emoluments and honors. The deprivation of any rights, civil or political, previously enjoyed, may be punishment; the circumstances attending and the causes of the deprivation determining this fact. Disqualification from office may be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment."

"The theory upon which our political institutions rest is, that all men have certain inalienable rights--that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and that in the pursuit of happiness all avocations, all honors, all positions, are alike open to everyone, and that in the protection of these rights all are equal before the law. Any deprivation or suspension of any of these rights for past conduct is punishment, and can be in no otherwise defined."

"A bill of attainder is a legislative Act, which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial

"If the punishment be less than death, the Act is termed a bill of pains and penalties. Within the meaning of the Constitution, bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties. In these cases the legislative body, in addition to its legitimate functions, exercises the powers and office of judge; it assumes; in the language of text books, judicial magistracy; it pronounces upon the guilt of the party, without any of the forms or safeguards of trial; it determines the sufficiency of the proofs produced, whether conformable to the rules of evidence or otherwise; and it fixes the degree of punishment in accordance with its own notions of the enormity of the offense."

"These bills are generally directed against individuals by name; but they may be directed against a whole class."

""A British Act of Parliament," to cite the language of the Supreme Court of Kentucky, "might declare, that if certain individuals, or a class of individuals, failed to do a given act by a named day, they should be deemed to be, and treated as convicted felons or traitors. Such an Act comes precisely within the definition of a bill of attainder," and the English courts would enforce it without indictment or trial by jury." Gaines v. Buford, 1 Dana, 510."

"The existing clauses presume the guilt of the priests and clergymen, and adjudge the deprivation of their right to preach or teach unless the presumption be first removed by their expurgatory oath--in other words, they assume the guilt and adjudge the punishment conditionally. The clauses supposed differ only in that they declare the guilt instead of assuming it. The deprivation is effected with equal certainty in the one case as it would be in the other, but not with equal directness. The purpose of the law maker in the case supposed would be openly avowed; in the case existing it is only disguised. The legal result must be the same, for what cannot be done directly cannot be done indirectly. The Constitution deals with substance, not shadows. Its inhibition was leveled at the thing, not the name. It intended that the rights of the citizen should be secure against deprivation for past conduct by legislative enactment, under any form, however disguised. If the inhibition can be evaded by the form of the enactment, its insertion in the fundamental law was a vain and futile proceeding."

"By an ex post facto law is meant one which imposes a punishment for an act which is not punishable at the time it was committed; or imposes additional punishment to that then prescribed; or changes the rules of evidence by which less or different testimony is sufficient to convict than was then required."

"In Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 137, Mr. Chief Justice Marshall defined an ex post facto law to be one "which renders an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when it was committed." "Such a law," said that eminent judge, "may inflict penalties on the person, or may inflict pecuniary penalties which swell the public Treasury. The Legislature is then prohibited from passing a law by which a man's estate, or any part of it, shall be seized for a crime, which was not declared by some previous law to render him liable to that punishment. Why, then, should violence be done to the natural meaning of words for the purpose of leaving to the Legislature the power of seizing for public use the estate of an individual, in the form of a law annulling the title by which he holds the estate? The court can perceive no sufficient grounds for making this distinction. This rescinding Act would have the effect of an ex post facto law."

"The clauses in the Missouri Constitution, which are the subject of consideration, do not, in terms, define any crimes, or declare that any punishment shall be inflicted; but they produce the same result upon the parties against whom they are directed, as though the crimes were defined and the punishment was declared."

"To make the enjoyment of a right dependent upon an impossible condition is equivalent to an absolute denial of the right under any condition, and such denial, enforced for a past act, is nothing less than punishment imposed for that act. It is a misapplication of terms to call it anything else."

"The clauses in question subvert the presumptions of innocence, and alter the rules of evidence, which heretofore, under the universally recognized principles of the common law, have been supposed to be fundamental and unchangeable. They assume that the parties are guilty; they call upon the parties to establish their innocence; and they declare that such innocence can be shown only in one way--by an inquisition, in the form of an expurgatory oath, into the consciences of the parties."

"The provision of the Federal Constitution, intended to secure the liberty of the citizen, cannot be evaded by the form in which the power of the State is exerted. If this were not so; if that which cannot be accomplished by means looking directly to the end, can be accomplished by indirect means, the inhibition may be evaded at pleasure."

"Under this form of legislation the most flagrant invasion of private rights, in periods of excitement, may be enacted; and individuals, and even whole classes, may be deprived of political and civil rights."

"A question arose in New York, soon after the Treaty of Peace of 1783, upon a statute of that State, which involved a discussion of the nature and character of these expurgatory oaths, when used as a means of inflicting punishment for past conduct. The subject was regarded as so important, and the requirement of the oath such a violation of the fundamental principles of civil liberty, and the rights of the citizen, that it engaged the attention of eminent lawyers and distinguished statesmen of the time, and among others of Alexander Hamilton. We will cite some passages of a paper left by him on the subject, in which, with his characteristic fullness and ability, he examines the oath, and demonstrates that it is not only a mode of inflicting punishment, but a mode in violation of all the constitutional guarantees, secured by the Revolution, of the rights and liberties of the people."

"Let us not forget that the Constitution declares that trial by jury, in all cases in which it has been formerly used, should remain inviolate forever, and that the Legislature should at no time erect any new jurisdiction which should not proceed according to the course of the common law. Nothing can be more repugnant to the true genius of the common law than such an inquisition as has been mentioned, into the consciences of men * * *. If any oath with respect to past conduct were to be made the condition on which individuals, who have resided within the British lines, should hold their estates, we should immediately see that this proceeding would be tyrannical, and a violation of the Treaty; and yet, when the same mode is employed to divest that right, which ought to be deemed still more sacred, many of us are so infuriated as to overlook the mischief."

Hammett v. City of Philadelphia (Tan. 1870)

"It is well remarked by Chief Justice ROBERTSON, of Kentucky, under a constitution without restraint on the legislative power of taxation: "An exact equalization of the burden of taxation is unattainable and utopian. But, still, there are well-defined limits within which the practical equality of the constitution may be preserved, and which, therefore, should be deemed impassable barriers to legislative powers. * * The legislature in the plenitude of its taxing power, cannot have constitutional authority to exact from one citizen, or even one county, the entire revenue of the whole commonwealth. Such an exaction, by whatever name the legislature might choose to call it, would not be a tax, but would undoubtedly be the taking of private property for public use, and which could not be done constitutionally without the consent of the owner or owners, and without retribution of the value in money." Lexington v. McQuillan's Heirs, 9 Dana, 513. "A legislative act," says Chief Justice BEASLEY, of New Jersey, "authorizing the building of a public bridge and directing the expenses to be assessed on A., B. and C., such persons not being in any way peculiarly benefited by such structure, would not be an act of taxation, but a condemnation of so much of the money of the person designated to a public use." The Tide-water Company v. Carter, 3 C.E. Green, 518. . . . It is said that the line of distinction between the right of taxation and the right of eminent domain is clear and well defined. Taxation exacts money or services from individuals, as and for their respective shares of contribution to any public burden. Private property, taken for public use by right of eminent domain is taken, not as the owner's share or contribution to a public burden, but as so much beyond his share. The People ex rel. Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 Comst. 419. It has been said by Judge FIELD, of California, now on the bench of the supreme court of the United States, that "money is not that species of property which the sovereign authority can authorize to be taken in the exercise of its right of eminent domain. That right can be exercised only with reference to other property that money, for the property taken is to be the subject of compensation in money itself; and the general doctrine of the authorities of the present day is, that the compensation must be made, or a fund provided for it, in advance." Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 76.

"The obligation of compensation is not immediate. It is required only that provision should be made for compensation in the future. Judge RUGGLES confines the right to exact money by virtue of the eminent domain, to the case where it is for the use of the State at large in time of war. The People ex rel. Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 Comst. 419. I cannot see that there is any necessary limitation. The public necessity which gives rise to it prevents its being restrained by any limitations as to either subject or occasion. In truth it matters not whether an assessment upon an individual or a class of individuals for a general, and not a mere local purpose, be regarded as an act of confiscation--a judicial sentence or rescript, or a taking of private property for public use without compensation-- in any aspect it transcends the power of the legislature, and is void. I regard it as a forced contribution. If the sovereign breaks open the strong-box of an individual or corporation and takes out money, or, if not being paid on demand, he seizes and sells the lands or goods of the subject, it looks to me very much like a direct taking of private property for public use. It certainly cannot alter the case to call it taxation. Whenever a local assessment upon an individual is not grounded upon, and measured by, the extent of his particular benefit, it is pro tanto, a taking of his private property for public use without any provision for compensation. That clause in the Declaration of Rights is, indeed, the sheet-anchor of private property, the security of which against the government, as well as all others, is intended in the first section of the ninth article: "All men have certain inherent and inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, of acquiring, possessing and protecting property and reputation, and of pursuing their own happiness." The dollar which the poor man has earned by the sweat of his brow--the fortune which a rich man has inherited from his ancestors--stand on the same rock, and are surrounded and protected by the same barrier. Invested for comfort and assurance against want in sickness or old age, or cherished as a provision for widow or orphan after he has gone, it is a right which it is despotism to take from him, except for the necessary purposes of government by equal and just taxation. It is none the less so if it be the act of the hydra-headed monster, a municipal majority, or that of a single autocrat. It is the solemn duty of the judiciary, under our constitution, to guard and protect this right of property, as well from indirect attacks under any specious pretext, as from open and palpable invasion. "There being," says Chief Justice MARSHALL, of Kentucky, "no express constitutional declaration or prohibition directly applicable to the powers or subject of taxation, and none which, in terms, secure equality or uniformity in the distribution of public burdens, either general or local, there is no clause to which the citizen can, with certainty, appeal for protection against an oppressive and ruinous discrimination, under color of the taxing power, unless it be that which prohibits the taking of private property for public use without compensation. * * This is the great conservative principle of the constitution, by which the rights of private property are to be preserved from violation under public authority; and we should feel bound to give it, as has heretofore been done, a liberal construction for the attainment of so important and valuable an object." Cheany v. Houser, 9 B.Mon. 341"

"WAITE, C.J. This judgment is reversed on the authority" of Railroad Co. v. Collector, 100 U.S. 595, and the cause is remanded with instructions to enter a judgment in favor of the United States, for the equivalent in lawful money of the United States of the tax of £9,300, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the several-times when the same became due and payable, according to the agreed statement of facts on which the submission was made below."

BRADLEY, J. I concur in the judgment of the court in this case, but not for the reasons given in the case of the Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Collector, 100 U.S. 595. [* * *] As to the interest payable on bonds, it was not a tax upon the property represented thereby. The property obtained by the proceeds of the loans represented by the bonds was taxable (if not taxed) in another form. That property consisted of the railroad tracks, or canal, and other specific property of the companies respectively. If this property was not taxed directly it was taxed indirectly by means of the duty of 2 1/2 per cent. which was laid on their gross earnings. The tax laid upon their bonds was intended to affect the owners of the bonds, and while the companies were directed to pay it, they were authorized to retain the amount from the installments due to the bondholders, whether citizens or aliens. The objection that congress had no power to tax non-resident aliens is met by the fact that the tax was not assessed against them personally, but against the rem, the credit, the debt due to them. Congress has the right to tax all property within the jurisdiction of the United States, with certain exceptions not necessary to be noted. The money due to non-resident bondholders in this case was in the United States,--in the hands of the company,--before it could be transmitted to London, or other place where the bondholders resided. While here it was liable to taxation. Congress, by the internal-revenue law, by way of tax, stopped a part of the money before its transmission, namely, 5 per cent. of it."

"There is nothing in the constitution which authorizes this court, or any other court, to disaffirm the power of congress to lay the tax. Congress is its own judge of the propriety or expediency of laying it." [Bold added.]

"The inhibition of section 3224 applies to all assessments of taxes, made under color of their offices, by internal revenue officers charged with general jurisdiction of the subject of assessing taxes against tobacco manufacturers. [* * *] In Cheatham v. U.S., 92 U.S. 85, 88, and again in State Railroad Tax Case, Id. 575, 613, it was said by this court that the system prescribed by the United States in regard to both customs duties and internal revenue taxes, of stringent measures, not judicial, to collect them, with appeals to specified tribunals, and suits to recover back moneys illegally exacted, was a system of corrective justice intended to be complete, and enacted under the right belonging to the government to prescribe the conditions on which it would subject itself to the judgment of the courts in the collection of its revenues. In the exercise of that right it declares, by section 3224, that its officers shall not be enjoined from collecting a tax claimed to have been unjustly assessed, when those officers, in the course of general jurisdiction over the subject-matter in question, have made the assessment and claim that it is valid." "An action to recover back duties illegally exacted and paid under protest upon imports into Porto Rico [sic] from New York is within the jurisdiction of the circuit court as a court of claims, whether the exactions were tortious or not, since the importer can waive the tort and sue upon an implied contract of the United States to refund the money, and the case is founded upon an act of Congress within the meaning of the Tucker Act (24 Stat. at L. 505, chap. 359), namely a revenue law."

"Porto Rico [sic] and the United States were foreign countries with respect to each other, within the meaning of the revenue laws, while the island was in the military occupation of the United States before its cession to the United States by treaty."

"Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

"1. The jurisdiction of the court in this case is attacked by the government upon the ground that the circuit court, as a court of claims, cannot take cognizance of actions for the recovery of duties illegally exacted."

"By an act passed March 3, 1887, to provide for the bringing of suits against the government, known as the Tucker Act (24 Stat. at L. 505, chap. 359), the court of claims was vested with jurisdiction over, "first, all claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, except for pensions, or upon any regulation of an executive department, or upon any contract, express or implied, with the government of the United States, or for damages liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty, if the United States were suable;" and by §2 the district and circuit court were given concurrent jurisdiction to a certain amount.

"The 1st section evidently contemplates four distinct classes of cases: (1) Those founded upon the Constitution or any law of Congress, with an exception of pension cases; (2) cases founded upon a regulation of an executive department; (3) cases of contract, express or implied, with the government; (4) actions for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort. The words "not sounding in tort" are in terms referable only to the fourth class of cases."

"In New Orleans v. New York Mail S. S. Co., 20 Wall. 387, 393, 22 L.Ed. 354, it was said, with respect to the powers of the military government over the city of New Orleans after its conquest, that it had "the same power and rights in territory held by conquest as if the territory had belonged to a foreign country and had been subjugated in a foreign war. In such cases the conquering power has the right to displace the preexisting authority, and to assume to such extent as it may deem proper to exercise by itself of all the powers and functions of government. It may appoint all the necessary officers and clothe them with designated powers, larger or smaller, according to its pleasure. It may prescribe the revenues to be paid, and apply them to its own use or otherwise. It may do anything necessary to strengthen itself and weaken the enemy.

There is no limit to the powers that may be exerted in such cases, save those which are found in the laws and usages of war. Those principles have the sanction of all publicists who have considered the subject."

"Though no right of appeal from a judgment in favor of a taxpayer against a tax assessment is given by statute, the Supreme Court, by reason of its general jurisdiction to examine and correct all errors of the lower courts, will treat an appeal as a certiorari, and correct any error on the face of the record."

"All taxation is statutory, and, while it is the duty of every citizen to bear his just proportion of public expense, he cannot be compelled to do so except as provided by statute."

"Liability to pay taxes arises from no contractual relation between the taxable and the taxing power, and cannot be enforced by common-law proceedings, unless the statute so provides."

"The taxing authorities cannot assess a taxpayer who has neglected to make a return for a particular year after the expiration of that year."

47 C.J.S., Incomes Taxable in General §98

"Nature and Necessity of Income in General

"Generally, the income tax statutes tax all species of income from whatever source derived, which the taxpayer has received under a claim of right and without restriction as to disposition."

"While the question of what constitutes "income" within the meaning of the Sixteenth Amendment' to the Constitution cannot be concluded by any definition which congress may adopt, in general the term "income" has been taken to have the same meaning as the term as used in the Constitution, and in the various revenue acts enacted by congress, and with few exceptions, if any, it is used therein in the same sense in which it is used in common speech. Thus "income" has been defined as gain derived from capital, or labor, or both combined, and includes profit gained through a sale or conversion of capital assets. It is not limited to cash income, and may include property, rights or privileges that are merely indicia of ownership, or anything of exchangeable value proceeding from property. The gain "derived from capital" within the definition is not a gain accruing to capital, or a growth or increment of value in the investment, but a gain or profit, something of exchangeable value proceeding from the property, severed from the capital however invested, and received or drawn by the claimant for his separate use, benefit, and disposal. It is fruit born of capital, and not the potency of fruition. A mere expectancy, or contingent right to receive money or property, especially a contested one, does not constitute income."

47 C.J.S., Incomes Taxable in General §99 "Realization of Income in General

"While income must be realized before it is taxable, realization need not take the form of receipt of cash or property by the taxpayer; it may occur when the last step is taken by which he obtains the fruition of an economic gain which has already accrued to him."

"The gains with which the income tax law is concerned are only such as have been realized; the realization of income, rather than the acquisition of the right to receive it, is the taxable event." [Bold added in last sentence.] 47 Corpus Juris Secundum, §99.

26 R.C.L., Taxation (1920)

"2. Tax Defined.--A tax is an enforced contribution of money or other property, assessed in accordance with some reasonable rule of apportionment by authority of a sovereign state on persons or property within its jurisdiction, for the purpose of defraying the public expenses. The exercise of the power of taxation consists of two distinct processes--the one relating to the levying or imposition of the taxes on persons or property; the other to the collection of the taxes levied. The first is constituted of the provisions of law which determine or work out the determination of the persons or property to be taxed, the sum or sums to be thus raised, the rate thereof and the time and manner of levying and receiving and collecting the taxes. It definitely and conclusively establishes the sum to be paid by each person taxed, or to be borne by each property specifically assessed, and creates a fixed and certain demand in favor of the state or a subordinate governmental agency, and a definite and positive obligation on the part of those taxed. The second is constituted of the provisions of law which prescribe the manner of enforcing the obligation on the part of those taxed to pay the demand thus created. It is often very important to determine whether a particular pecuniary imposition is a tax or not, because the power of taxation is restricted by constitutional limitations different from those applicable to other governmental powers, and the constitutionality of a statute imposing a pecuniary charge may depend on whether such charge is a tax or not.

"4. Taxation Distinguished from Regulation.--Some governments derive a considerable revenue from a judicious exercise of the power of regulation; but since a tax is a charge imposed for the purpose of raising revenue, a charge primarily imposed for the purpose of regulation is not a tax, and is not subject to the constitutional limitations upon the power of taxation. Thus when the legislature desires to place some limit upon the number of people who will engage in a particular occupation which if carried on without restraint as to numbers will be injurious to the public welfare, or wishes to restrict the frequency with which some act will be performed, without prohibiting it altogether, it often imposes a charge or fee upon those engaging in the occupation or performing the act. If the primary purpose of the legislature in imposing such a charge is to regulate the occupation or the act, the charge is not a tax, even if it produces revenue for the public. If, however, the primary purpose of such a charge is revenue it is a tax, and is subject to the limitations upon the power of taxation, and not to the limitations upon the power of regulation. [* * *] Another distinction between a tax and a license fee imposed under the police power is said to be that the former is exacted by reason of the fact that the business is carried on or the property is held within the jurisdiction of the taxing power, and the latter is required as a condition precedent to the right to carry on such business or to hold such property within the jurisdiction."

"5. Legislation Intended for Both Revenue and Regulation.--If a legislative body which imposes a charge on an occupation, an act or a privilege has power both to regulate and to tax the subject matter, it is immaterial whether the charge was intended as a regulation or as a tax, and it may constitutionally be intended to fulfil the double function of regulating and of producing revenue."

"11. Tax as Debt.--It is generally considered that a tax is not a debt, and that the municipality to which the tax is payable is not a creditor of the person assessed. A debt is a sum of money due by certain and express agreement. It originates in, and is founded upon, contract express or implied. Taxes, on the other hand, do not rest upon contract, express or implied. They are obligations imposed upon citizens to pay the expenses of government. They are forced contributions, and in no way dependent upon the will or contract, express or implied, of the persons taxed. The power to tax is wholly statutory. A tax roll is not a judgment roll, and a tax thereon does not partake of the nature of a judgment, except as to its validity and amount and the manner in which it can be proven. The authority for the tax and its binding effect upon the person taxed rest upon the authority given to the taxing officers by the legislature."

"12. Power of Taxation Inherent in Sovereignty.--The power of taxation is inherent in a sovereign state. The right to tax is not granted by the constitution but of necessity underlies it, because government could not exist or perform its functions without it. While it may be regulated and limited by the constitution, it exists without express authority in the fundamental law as a necessary attribute of sovereignty. The provisions of the constitution which relate to the power of taxation do not operate as grants of the power of taxation to the governments thus set up, but constitute limitations upon a power which would otherwise be without limit.""

"15. Delegation of Power of Taxation Generally.--The power of taxation cannot be delegated' by the legislature except to municipal corporations for municipal purposes. The legislature of the state is the only authority that can levy taxes for state purposes, and administrative officers cannot be given authority to fix, reduce, increase or in any manner establish or alter the taxes to be levied for state purposes."

"16. Delegation of Power to Local Boards.--It is well settled that the power to levy taxes for municipal purposes may be delegated to municipal corporations by the legislature, to be exercised by them through the voters of the municipality directly, or through municipal councils elected by the people of the municipality, and this power includes the determination of the subjects on which an excise shall be levied and the amount of the excise. This is an exception to the principle that the power of taxation cannot be delegated, based upon long and unquestioned practice; but since the power when exercised for the state at large must be exercised by the legislature itself, similarly when exercised for a section of the state it must be exercised by a local legislative body, chosen by and responsible to the people of the district taxed. Accordingly the power to determine what sums shall be levied by taxation for municipal purposes can be exercised only by municipal councils elected by and responsible to the people, and cannot be delegated to a subdivision of the state having no such representative body, or to a board of local officials not elected by the people."

"17. Power to Tax as Power to Destroy.--One of the principles first laid down by the supreme court of the United States with respect to the power of taxation was that the power to tax involves the power to destroy, and the maxim is one that the court have frequently invoked. This principle, however, has often been misunderstood and misapplied. It is pertinent only when there is no power to tax a particular subject, and has no relation to a case where such right exists. In other words, the power to destroy, which may be the consequence of taxation, is a reason why the right to tax should be confined to subjects which may be lawfully embraced therein, even though it happens that in some particular instance no great harm may be caused by the exercise of the taxing authority as to a subject which is beyond its scope. But this reasoning has no application to a lawful tax, for if it had there would be an end of all taxation; that is to say, if a lawful tax can be defeated because the power which is manifested by its imposition may, when further exercised, be destructive, it would follow that every lawful tax would become unlawful, and therefore no taxation whatever could be levied. When a legislative body having power to tax a certain subject matter actually imposes such a burdensome tax as effectually to destroy the right to perform the act or to use the property subject to the tax, the validity of the enactment depends upon the nature and character of the right destroyed. If so great an abuse is manifested as to destroy natural and fundamental rights which no free government could consistently violate, it is the duty of the judiciary to hold such an act unconstitutional."

"25. Excises Classified.--Excises are divided naturally into two classes, namely, those laid on the importation of foreign goods and those laid on domestic goods, privileges and transactions. Excises of both classes were laid by the various colonies in America, and by the states after the Declaration of Independence, but on the adoption of the United States constitution the exclusive power of laying duties on imports was vested in Congress; leaving in the states the power concurrently with Congress of laying excises on domestic transactions. The principal excises on domestic transactions which have been laid by Congress consist of the so called internal revenue taxes on the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors and tobacco, stamp taxes on legal instruments of various descriptions, taxes on the income of trades, professions and employments, and inheritance taxes. The principal excises imposed by the states have been on the franchises of corporations, domestic and foreign, and occupations of a more or less harmful or dangerous character; the sale of intoxicating liquor; on inheritances, and, in recent years, on automobiles."

"26. Taxes as Leviable Only for Public Use.--It is a well settled principle of constitutional law that no tax can be levied except for the purpose of raising money which is to be expended for the public use. The power to levy taxes is founded on the right, duty and responsibility to maintain and administer all the governmental functions of the state, and to provide for the public welfare. To justify any exercise of this power the expenditure which it is intended to meet must be for some public service, or some object which concerns the public welfare. This principle is fundamental, and underlies all government that is based on reason rather than force. To lay with one hand the power of the government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes, is none the less robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation. This is not legislation. It is a decree under legislative forms. Nor is such a levy taxation, since a tax is an impost assessed for the purpose of raising money for the public use, and an assessment for any other purpose is not a tax."

"28. Application of Principle to All Public Expenditures.--The application of the principle that taxes can be levied only for the public use extends far beyond the mere denial of the right to collect a tax which has been levied for a private purpose. The right to tax depends upon the ultimate use, purpose, and object for which the fund is raised. This principle may accordingly be invoked by a taxpayer to prevent the expenditure of funds which have been or are to be raised by taxation for purposed not public. Obviously appropriations of money out of the treasury must be measured by the same test as that by which it is raised by taxation and put into the treasure. If taxes could not be imposed for a purpose, money already in the treasury could not be appropriated to that purpose. A gift of the public funds to an individual when no public purpose is directly or indirectly subserved is beyond the power of the legislature. The principle that taxes can be levied only for public purposes also makes it unlawful for the state or a municipal corporation to embark in any enterprise which may involve the expenditure of money, unless the enterprise is a public one, even if no tax has been levied, debt incurred or appropriation made, or expected to be made, for if the enterprise should prove unprofitable the debts incurred can be met only by taxation. The principle is involved in determining the validity of every debt incurred by the state or by a municipal corporation. The proposition is a very broad one, that debts contracted by public corporations must be paid, if paid at all, out of taxes which they may lawfully levy, and that all contracts creating debts to be paid in future, not limited to payment from some other source, imply an obligation to pay by taxation. It follows that in this class of cases the right to contract must be limited by the right to tax, and if in the given case no tax can lawfully be levied to pay the debt, the contract itself is void for want of authority to make it. The legislature cannot authorize the state to borrow money in order to lend it to private individuals when no public purpose is involved, for if the individuals should be unable to repay the loan the state would be obliged to raise money by taxation to pay the debt which it had incurred. The same principle prevents the state or a municipal corporation from undertaking a work even of a public character in such a way as to incur additional expense over what would be reasonably necessary, when such additional expense is incurred in order to benefit a particular class in the community. It is even held that this principle prevents a state from devoting to a use not public funds raised from sources other than taxation, since the use of such funds for a private purpose will necessarily increase the burden of taxation in order to raise the money necessary for public purposes to which these funds should have been applied.

"29. What Constitutes Public Use.--[* * *] Perhaps the best test of rightful taxation is that the proceeds of the tax must be used for the support of government, or for some of the recognized objects of government, or directly to promote the welfare of the community. It may also be conceded that that is a public purpose from the attainment of which will flow some benefit or convenience to the public. In this latter case, however, the benefit or convenience must be direct and immediate from the purpose, and not collateral, remote or consequential. It must be a benefit or convenience which each citizen of the community affected may lay his own hand to in his own right, and take unto his own use at his own option, upon the same reasonable terms and conditions as any other citizen thereof. He may not be made to depend for it on the spontaneous actions of others or to receive it in uncertain degree or manner or roundabout way or hampered with discriminating distinctions and conditions. To constitute a public use, the benefit must be bestowed upon those who will enjoy it as members of the public, and not as individuals. The promotion of the interests of individuals, either in respect to property or business, although it may result incidentally in the advancement of the public welfare, is, in its essential character, a private and not a public object. However certain and great the resulting good to the general public, it does not, by reason of its comparative importance, cease to be incidental. The incidental advantage to the public, or to the state, which results from the promotion of private interests, and the prosperity of private enterprises or business, does not justify their aid by the use of public money raised by taxation, or for which taxation may become necessary."

"30. Consideration of Ultimate Effect of Expenditure.--[* * *] So also the legislature may provide for the payment of private claims against the state which are not legal but which are founded on justice and supported by moral obligation."

"31. Comparison with Other Governmental Powers.--The power of the government to affect the individual in his private rights of property is confined to the purposes and objects which the government was established to promote, namely, the public use, whether by exacting contributions to the general means or by sequestration of specific property. The power when exercised in one form is taxation; in the other is designated as the right of eminent domain. The two are diverse in respect to the occasion and mode of exercise, but identical in their source, to wit, the necessities of organized society, and in the end by which alone the exercise of either can be justified, to wit, mere public use of service or use. So far as it concerns the question what constitutes public use or service that will justify the exercise of those sovereign powers over private rights of property, this identity renders it unnecessary to distinguish between the two forms of exercise, as the same tests must apply to and control in each."

"34. Relief of the Poor Generally.--The power of the state to expend the public funds for the relief of the poor and needy is unquestioned, and indeed was one of the principal objects for which taxes were levied in many of the colonial settlements. The duty of the state to make provision for the care and maintenance of those who, through misfortune or disease, are unable to take care of themselves, has been too long recognized and established by the legislation of this country to admit of question. The indigent poor and infirm, the insane, orphaned and dependent children, and all destitute and helpless persons within its sovereignty, have ever been recognized as legitimate recipients of its bounty, and their welfare as a proper subject of its solicitude and care. [* * *] Something more than poverty is, however, essential to charge the state with the duty of support. It is, strictly speaking, the pauper and not the poor man who has claims on public charity. It is not one who is in want merely, but one who, being in want, is unable to prevent or remove such want. There is the idea of helplessness as well as of destitution. We speak of those whom society must aid as the dependent classes, not simply because they do depend on society, but because they cannot do otherwise than thus depend. Cold and harsh as the statement may seem, it is nevertheless true, that the obligation of the state to help is limited to those who are unable to help themselves."

"Use of District Taxed

"51. In General.--It is not sufficient that a tax be levied for a public use; it must be levied for the use of the public of the district taxed. An act of the legislature authorizing-contributions to be levied for a purpose which, though it be public, is one in which the people from whom they are exacted have no interest, is not a tax law but a sentence commanding the periodical payment of a certain sum by one set of people to another in the nature of an indemnity or tribute. [* * *] It is clear that one taxing district, whether it be state, county, municipality or district established for the particular purpose, cannot be taxed for the benefit of another district. Thus a state cannot raise money by taxation to be expended for the benefit of the people of another state. Nor can the people of one municipality be taxed for the benefit of the people of another municipality, as when a tax is levied to provide a public improvement outside the limits of the municipality and primarily for the benefit of nonresidents, or when an unorganized county is attached to an organized county for taxing purposes and is taxed for the purposes of the organized county."

"53. Purposes for Which United States May Levy Taxes.--[* * *] Having power to raise money to pay the debts of the United States, it of course follows that it has power when the money is raised to appropriate it to the same object. The debts of the United States are not limited to those which are evidenced by some written obligation or to those which are otherwise of a strictly legal character. The term "debt" as used in the constitution includes those claims which rest upon a merely equitable or honorable obligation, and which would not be recoverable in a court at law if existing against an individual.. Upon these principles an appropriation has been sustained to pay bounties on sugar produced before the statute granting such bounties had been repealed, but upon which no bounty had been paid at the time of such repeal. For like reasons appropriations to pay for injury to American ships and cargoes by French vessels during the Napoleonic wars have been sustained, and American shipowners have been reimbursed for insurance premiums paid against depredations by Confederate cruisers.

"54. Limitation of Federal Taxing Power.--Congress cannot tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment, and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity. Subject to these limitations its constitutional power of taxation reaches every subject and may be exercised at discretion."

"56. Direct Taxes.--The constitution of the United States provides that direct taxes must be apportioned among the states in accordance with population. To levy a direct tax, Congress must first fix an amount to be raised, and this sum must be divided up among the states in proportion to their respective numbers of inhabitants and assessed in each state at a rate to be determined by dividing the total value of the property within the state subject to the tax by the amount apportioned to the state--a rate which will necessarily be very different in different states even though they have the same number of inhabitants, since the less property subject to the tax there is in the state the higher will be the rate. There is thus a sharp contrast between direct taxes, and imposts, duties and excises, which must be levied at a uniform rate throughout the United States. Direct taxes were imposed by Congress in 1798, 1813, 1815, 1816 and during the Civil War. In the earlier years the subjects of the tax were lands, improvements, dwelling houses and slaves; in 1861 the tax was levied on lands, improvements and dwelling houses. For obvious reasons direct taxes are not looked upon with favor in a majority of the states; and most of the revenue of the federal government has been raised by duties and excises. The direct tax of 1861 was assessed on the property of individuals within the several states, and not on the states themselves, and provision was made for the collection of the tax by federal officials. The statute, however, allowed the states to assume the amounts apportioned to them respectively and to collect the same in their own way through their own officers. Many of the states voluntarily assumed the burden and thus became debtors to the United States, but unless such assumption was made no liability attached to any state in its political and corporate character. [* * *] The power of Congress, acting as a local legislature for the District of Columbia, to levy taxes, for district purposes only, in the same manner as the legislature of a state may tax the people of a state for state purposes is unquestioned, and in the exercise of this power Congress, like any state legislature unrestricted by constitutional provisions, may at its discretion wholly exempt certain classes of property from taxation, or may tax them at a lower rate than other property. An act of Congress laying a direct tax for national purposes throughout the United States in proportion to the census may comprehend the District of Columbia and the territories, although Congress is not required to extend a direct tax beyond the limits of the states. "

"57. Duties, Imposts and Excises.--The United States government has raised the great part of its revenues by duties, imposts and excises. Of these the most important, until recent years at least, have been the duties on imports, and the internal revenue taxes on certain articles of domestic production, such as intoxicating liquors and tobacco. The foregoing taxes have concededly fallen in the class of duties, imposts and excises, but the uncertainty as to just what was meant by "direct taxes" in the requirement that direct taxes should be apportioned among the states in proportion to population has led to much litigation over many of the other taxes levied by Congress without apportionment, the contention being made in each case that the tax in controversy was in reality a direct tax. This contention has, however, rarely been upheld by the supreme court. Among the federal taxes which have been sustained as constituting duties or excises rather than direct taxes are included a tax on carriages; a tax on the circulating notes of state banks; a tax on the devolution of real estate by will or descent; a tax on each sale of or agreement to sell any products or merchandise at an exchange or board of trade; a tax on the passing of property real or personal by will or the laws regulating intestate succession; a tax on agreements to sell shares of stock, known as "calls" by stockbrokers; a tax on tobacco prepared for consumption or sale; a stamp tax on contracts for the sale of certificates of stock; a tax on the gross receipts of companies engaged in refining sugar; a tax on the manufacture of cheese; a tax on artificially colored oleomargarine, and a tax on the doing of business in a corporate capacity measured by income." The greatest contention has, however, been over taxes on income. It was at first held that such a tax was a duty or excise, and while this principle was continued in force in respect to income from trades, professions and employments, it was subsequently held that a tax on the income of property was a direct tax on the property and would not be valid unless apportioned among the states in accordance with population. Finally, by the adoption of the sixteenth constitutional amendment taxes on income, from whatever source derived, were restored to the class of taxes which might be levied without apportionment."

"59. Territory to Which Requirement Applicable.--Just what constitutes the United States within the meaning of the constitutional requirement that all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States is a question on which there has been much discussion, especially at the time of the acquisition of our insular possessions at the close of the Spanish war. On the one hand it is of course clear that the provision applies to the states themselves, and it is generally conceded that it applied to the whole of the contiguous area generally known as the United States even while a portion of it was divided into territories governed directly by Congress and did not constitute any part of a sovereign state. So also it has been intimated by the court that it applies to a detached territory of the United States, such as Alaska, and that Congress could not impose upon such territories special excises differing from those applicable throughout the United States generally, for the support of the home government, such as brought about the Revolution when imposed by England upon the American colonies."

"61. Taxation of Instrumentalities of State.--The taxing power of the federal government is impliedly limited by the fact that the constitution contemplates the perpetual maintenance of the states with their recognized powers unembarrassed and unimpaired by any action of the United States. The taxing power of the United States does not therefore extend to the means or agencies through which the states perform the functions allotted to them by the constitution. Thus Congress cannot tax the issuance of writs and other processes of the state courts or require as a condition to their validity that such papers bear a federal revenue stamp; nor can it impose a stamp tax on bonds required by a state of holders of liquor licenses, or on the official bonds of state officers, or on certificates of the sale of land for nonpayment of taxes; nor can it subject the salary of an officer of a state to an income tax. Even with respect to instruments executed by private parties, it is held that Congress has no power to prevent the recording of such instruments, or the introduction thereof in evidence in the state courts unless they bear the federal stamp, but that such provisions apply only to the United States courts."

"V. TAXING POWER OF STATES

"63. In General.--The power of taxation of each of the states over all persons and property within its jurisdiction is an inherent and not a delegated power, and knows no limits except those imposed expressly or by plain implication in the constitution of the United States."

"80. Private Corporations Having Charter or Franchise from United States.--The United States has the power to establish and charter a corporation or to grant a franchise to an existing corporation in order to carry into effect the powers vested in that government by the constitution, and the corporation to which such charter or franchise has been granted is, in a sense, an agency of the United States. Corporations of this character operating within the limits of the several states fall into three classes, namely (1) national banks; (2) transcontinental railroads, which were actually chartered by Congress; (3) telegraph companies, which were chartered by the states but which were given a franchise by Congress to operate on post roads throughout the country. Corporations of all three classes are agencies of the United States. Such corporations are not, however, on that account entirely exempt from taxation by the states in which they are established."

"114. Franchises, Licenses and Privileges.--In most jurisdictions franchises, licenses and privileges, if subject to taxation at all, are reached by means of an excise, and are not also taxed as property, though a franchise, license or privilege which may be made the subject of sale or mortgage, which may be sold on execution and which passes as an asset to the owner's trustee in bankruptcy or to his executor or administrator is generally considered property for the purposes of taxation, even if it cannot be transferred without the consent of the legislature or of some other governmental body."

"IX. TAXES ON INCOME

"116. Nature and Classification of Income Taxes.--An income tax is a tax levied directly upon income, or upon a person in accordance with his income, or upon property in proportion to the income derived therefrom. An excise upon those engaged in a particular occupation though graded in accordance with income is a tax on the occupation and not an income tax. Such taxes may be either general or special; they may tax income from all sources, with certain definite exceptions, or they may be imposed only on income of certain specified classes, leaving income producing property of other classes to be reached by a tax on the property itself. A distinction may also be drawn between a tax on the income of property and a tax on the income of a trade, profession or employment. Income of the former class is sometimes called unearned income, and is taxed at a higher rate than income of the latter class, which is earned by the taxpayer's own labor."

"117. Constitutionality of Income Taxes.--That it lies within the power of a state to levy a tax on the income of persons resident within its limits unless the constitution of the state contains some specific limitation to the contrary is unquestioned. Probably almost every state legislature has the power to levy a tax on income derived from profession, trades, occupations and employments, since such a tax is undoubtedly an excise, and so not subject to the requirement of equality and uniformity found in so many of the state constitutions. The income of a business is by no means the income from the capital invested in the business or from the property used in connection with the business. It is the net result of the combined influence of the use of the capital invested, the personal labor and services of the persons carrying on the business, and their energy, ability and foresight. [* * *] The power of a state to levy a tax on income is limited by the federal constitution in the same manner as is its power to levy a property tax. The subject matter of the tax must be within its jurisdiction, and the tax must not interfere with the lawful operations of the United States government or with activities the control of which is delegated to the United States by the constitution. Thus a state has no power to tax income derived from United States bonds, or from the salaries of federal office holders."

"119. Income Taxes under Federal Constitution.--During the Civil War Congress laid several taxes on the incomes both of individuals and corporations. In none of these statutes was there any attempt at apportionment, and under some of them the incomes of individuals from whatever source derived were made subject to the tax. [* * *] In 1894 Congress again imposed a general income tax, without apportionment. It was held, however, by the supreme court of the United States that a tax on the rents or income of real estate was a direct tax and that a tax on the income derived from municipal bonds was an unconstitutional interference with the government of the states; but upon the question whether a tax on the income of personal property was a direct tax, and whether the tax was invalid on account of various exemptions, and whether the unconstitutionality of part invalidated the whole statute, the court was evenly divided. On rehearing the court sustained its earlier position, and going further held that a tax on the income of personal property was a direct tax, which to be valid must be apportioned, and that, such an essential part of the statute being unconstitutional, the entire scheme was invalid." In the foregoing decisions the court expressly refrained from commenting on so much of the statute as bore on gains and profits from business, privileges or employments, and in a case arising under a statute enacted at the time of the Spanish-American war it was held that a tax on the receipts of certain kinds of business was an excise and not a direct tax and need not be apportioned. So also a tax imposed in 1909 upon the doing of business in a corporate capacity, measured by the income from all sources, was sustained as a valid excise. In 1913 the sixteenth amendment was adopted providing that "the Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several states, and without regard to any census or enumeration. It has been held by the supreme court of the United States that this amendment conferred no new power of taxation upon Congress, but simply prohibited the previous complete and plenary power of income taxation possessed by Congress from the beginning from being taken out of the category of indirect taxation to which it inherently belonged and being placed in the category of direct taxation subject to apportionment by a consideration of the sources from which the income was derived, that is, by testing the tax, not by what it was but by a mistaken theory deduced from the origin or source of the income taxed. The sixteenth amendment does not extend the federal taxing power to new or excepted subjects, such as exports, or interest on state or municipal bonds, or the like, but merely removes all occasion which otherwise might exist for an apportionment among" the states of taxes laid on income."

"122. What Constitutes Net Income: Deduction.--The word "income" appears to have been used in the reported cases as meaning gross receipts, net earnings, gains or profits," depending on the context. In constitutional and statutory provisions in regard to taxation, however, income appears to be uniformly construed as meaning net income, as opposed to gross receipts, which are also in some cases a measure of taxation. Income means the balance of gain over loss and where there is no such balance of gain there is no income which is capable of being assessed. The gross returns which an owner receives from his property do not denote his income, which means what he has for himself, what he can spend after satisfying all just outgoings in respect of the property which yields the return. The net income of a profession, employment, trade or business during a year is ascertained by deducting from the gross receipts of the year the expenses incurred in carrying on the business, such as rent, wages, cost of goods and other current expenses."

"123. Taxation of Salaries of Public Officers, Ministers and College Professors.--It is well settled that a state cannot tax the salary of a federal officer, and it was held before the adoption of the sixteenth amendment that the United States could not tax the salaries of state officers or the salaries of officers of municipal corporations within the several states or of any other territorial subdivision established by a state for governmental purposes. The reason for this rule was that the constitution contemplated the existence of both the United States and the states as sovereignties independent within their respective spheres, and neither could interfere with the exercise of the governmental functions of the other by taking over part of the salary of the latter's officers the amount of which has been duly established by law. A state may, however, tax income received from the United States as compensation for services by one who is not an officer of the United States, and it may tax as property money on deposit in a bank which was derived from the salary of an officer of the United States, and conversely the United States may tax income received from the state or from municipal corporations as compensation for services performed by persons who are not public officers."

"126. Filing of Returns by Taxpayers; Deduction of Taxes Paid at Source.--The income received by a man during the year is peculiarly a matter within his own knowledge and it is essential to the administration of an income tax that every person liable to taxation file a return of his income, set out in sufficient detail so that the taxing authorities" can see that it is computed correctly and can verify the accuracy of the statements contained therein."

"127. When Liability to Taxation Arises.-Liability to taxation arises, and in some sense it may be said that the taxes accrue, at the time the gains, profits, and income pass into the hands of the recipient. Return is required in every case before the day of levy, so that it is clear that the tax is due, that is, the recipient of the gains, profits, and income is liable for it before it is assessed, as the return is only to ascertain whether the liability exists, and its extent."

"Tax on Franchise

"130. In General.--A franchise is a special privilege conferred by government upon individuals, and which does not belong to the citizens of a country generally, of common right. The word franchise does not mean only the right to be a corporation. The word is generic, covering all the rights which may be granted by the legislature. The privilege or right to be a corporation is a franchise entirely distinct from the privilege of operating a public service and charging tolls, or from exercising eminent domain, or from erecting and maintaining structures in the public streets. Private corporations may be taxed by the state for the support of the state government. Their privileges and franchises, unless exempted in terms which amount to a contract, are legitimate subjects of taxation,--as much so as any other property of the citizen which enjoys the protection and is within the control of the sovereign power of the state. The state power to tax such franchises and privileges is independent of the federal government. And the taxation of corporate franchises and privileges rests in the discretion of the legislature of the taxing state, which may decide whether the sum to be levied be a fixed amount, and, if not, in what manner and by what means the amount shall be determined. The grant of a franchise by the state carries with it no implication that the franchise thus granted is to be exempt from taxation."

"131. What Constitutes Taxable Corporate Franchises.--A tax on the franchise of corporations is not limited to business corporations, but unless an express exemption is contained in the statute applies to public service corporations as well. A franchise tax which is applicable to corporations and associations having a capital divided into shares transferable by the holder to whomsoever he chooses, although such an association may be in reality a partnership or a trust, provided it acquired the right to organize in quasi corporate form from the statute law of the state of its origin. Such an association is, however, not taxable under a statute the application of which is expressly confined to corporations. The fact that a corporation has never earned or declared a dividend will not exonerate it from a franchise tax. A state may impose an excise upon the franchise of corporations engaging in a business which every private citizen has a right to engage in freely. The privilege taxed is the right to engage in such business with the special advantages which are incident to corporate existence. A right common to every citizen such as the right to own property or to engage in business of a character not requiring regulation cannot, however, be taxed as a special franchise by first prohibiting its exercise and then permitting its enjoyment upon the payment of a certain sum of money."

"132. Power to Tax Franchise of Domestic Corporation.--The power of a state to tax the franchises of domestic corporations is practically without a limit. No constitutional objection prevents the legislature of a state from prescribing any mode of measurement it may choose in order to determine how much it will charge for the privilege which it bestows. If the grantee accepts the boon it must also bear the burden. A state may lawfully require as a condition of the grant of a franchise to be a corporation or to do business as such, and also for the continued exercise of such right or privilege, payment of a specific sum to the state each year or month, or a specific portion of the gross receipts or of the profits of the corporation, or of a sum to be ascertained in any convenient mode which the legislature may prescribe."

Goodrich v. Edwards (Mar. 29, 1921)

"And the definition of "income" approved by this Court is: "The gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined," provided it be understood to include profit gained through a sale or conversion of capital assets. ... It is thus very plain that the statute imposes the income tax on the proceeds of the sale of personal property to the extent only that gains are derived therefrom by the vendor...." [Bold added.]

Long v. Rasmussen (May 29, 1922)

"The revenue laws are a code or system in regulation of tax assessment and collection. They relate to taxpayers, and not to nontaxpayers. The latter are without their scope. No procedure is prescribed for nontaxpayers, and no attempt is made to annul any of their rights and remedies in due course of law. With them Congress does not assume to deal, and they are neither of the subject nor of the object of the revenue laws...."

Regal Drug Co. v. Wardell (Dec. 11, 1922)

"The distinction between a tax and a penalty was emphasized. The function of a tax, it was said, "is to provide for the support of the government"; the function of a penalty clearly involves the "idea of punishment for infringement of the law," and that a condition of its imposition is notice and hearing. O'Sullivan v. Felix, 233 U.S. 318, 324, 34 Sup.Ct. 596, 58 L.Ed. 980. And even if the imposition may be considered a tax, if it have punitive purposes, it must be preceded by opportunity to contest its validity. Central of Georgia Railway v. Wright, 207 U.S. 127, 28 Sup.Ct. 47, 52 L.Ed. 134, 12 Ann.Cas. 463.
"We took pains to say that "evidence of crime (section 29 tit. 2) is essential to assessment under section 35," and that we could not "concede, in the absence of language admitting of no other construction, that Congress intended that penalties for crime should be enforced through the secret findings and summary action of executive officers. The guaranties of due process of law and trial by jury are not to be forgotten or disregarded. See Fontenot v. Accardo (C. C. A.) 278 Fed. 871. A preliminary injunction should have been granted."

"ART. 71. Exclusions from gross income.--The term "gross income" as used in the Act does not include those items of income exempted by statute or by fundamental law. The exemption of such income should not be confused with the reduction of taxable income by the application of allowable deductions." p. 769.

"ART. 92. Gross income of nonresident alien individuals.--In the case of nonresident alien individuals "gross income" means only the gross income from sources within the United States.... The items of gross income from sources without the United States and therefore not taxable to nonresident aliens or foreign corporations are described in section 217 (c) and article 323." p. 781.

"ART. 311. Definition.--A "nonresident alien individual" means an individual (a) whose residence is not within the United States and (b) who is not a citizen of the United States. An alien actually present in the United States who is not a mere transient or sojourner is a resident of the United States for purposes of the income tax. Whether he is a transient or not is determined by his intentions with regard to the length and nature of his stay. A mere floating intention, indefinite as to time, to return to another country is not sufficient to constitute him a transient. If he lives in the United States and has no definite intention as to his stay, he is a resident. One who comes to the United States for a definite purpose which in its nature may be promptly accomplished is a transient; but if his purpose is of such a nature that an extended stay may be necessary for its accomplishment, and to that end the alien makes his home temporarily in the United States, he becomes a resident, though it may be his intention at all times to return to his domicile abroad when the purpose for which he came has been consummated or abandoned. A foreign corporation is one which is not domestic." p. 841.

Lewellyn v. Frick (May 11, 1925)

"This is a suit by the executors of Henry C. Frick to recover the amount of taxes collected by duress under the supposed authority of the Revenue Act of February 24, 1919, c. 18, 40 Stat. 1057, on the ground that the Act is unconstitutional so far as it purports to tax the matters here concerned."

"By section 409 (section 6336), a personal liability is imposed upon the beneficiaries if the tax is not paid when due. The defendants in error say that if these policies are covered by the statute these sections show that the beneficiaries are taxed upon their own property, under the guise of a tax upon the transfer of his estate by Mr. Frick, and that this is taking their property without due process of law, citing Matter of Pell, 171 N.Y. 48, 63 N.E. 789, 57 L.R.A. 540, 89 Am. St. Rep. 791, and other cases. In view of their liability the objection cannot be escaped by calling the reference to their receipts a mere measure of the transfer tax. The interest of the beneficiaries is established by statutes of the states controlling the insurance and is not disputed. It also is strongly urged that the tax would be a direct tax. In view of our conclusion it is not necessary to state the position of the defendants in error more in detail."

"We do not propose to discuss the limits of the powers of Congress in cases like the present. It is enough to point out that at least there would be a very serious question to be answered before Mrs. Frick and Miss Frick could be made to pay a tax on the transfer of his estate by Mr. Frick. There would be another if the provisions for the liability of beneficiaries were held to be separable and it was proposed to make the estate pay a transfer tax for property that Mr. Frick did not transfer. Acts of Congress are to be construed if possible in such a way as to avoid grave doubts of this kind. [Cite omitted.] Not only are such doubts avoided by construing the statute as referring only to transactions taking place after it was passed, but the general principle "that laws are not to be considered as applying to cases which arose before their passage" is preserved, when to disregard it would be to impose an unexpected liability that if known might have induced those concerned to avoid it and to use their money in other ways. [Cite omitted.] This case and the following ones, [cites omitted] go far toward deciding the one now before us. They also indicate that the Revenue Act of 1924, c. 234, §302(h); 43 Stat. 253, 305, making (g) (the equivalent of (f) above) apply to past transactions, does not help but if anything hinders the Collector's construction of the present law."

Frick v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania (June 1, 1925)

"The Pennsylvania statute is a tax law, not an escheat law. This is made plain by its terms and by the opinion of the state court. The tax which it imposes is not a property tax but one laid on the transfer of property on the death of the owner. This distinction is stressed by counsel for the state. But to impose either tax the state must have jurisdiction over the thing that is taxed, and to impose either without such jurisdiction is mere extortion and in contravention of due process of law. Here the tax was imposed on the transfer of tangible personalty having an actual situs in the other states-- New York and Massachusetts. This property, by reason of its character and situs, was wholly under the jurisdiction of those states and in no way under the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania. True, its owner was domiciled in Pennsylvania, but this neither brought it under the jurisdiction of that state nor subtracted anything from the jurisdiction of New York and Massachusetts. In these respects the situation was the same as if the property had been immovable realty."

"Of course, this was but the equivalent of saying that it was admissible to measure the tax by a standard which took no account of the distinction between what the state had power to tax and what it had no power to tax, and which necessarily operated to make the amount of the tax just what it would have been had the state's power included what was excluded by the Constitution. This ground, in our opinion, is not tenable. It would open the way for easily doing indirectly what is forbidden to be done directly, and would render important constitutional limitations of no avail. If Pennsylvania could tax according to such a standard, other states could. It would mean, as applied to the Frick estate, that Pennsylvania, New York, and Massachusetts could each impose a tax based on the value of the entire estate, although severally having jurisdiction of only parts of it. Without question each state had power to tax the transfer of so much of the estate as was under its jurisdiction, and also had some discretion in respect of the rate; but none could use that power and discretion in accomplishing an unconstitutional end, such as indirectly taxing the transfer of the part of the estate which was under the exclusive jurisdiction of others." [Cites omitted.]

"The state court cited in support of its view Maxwell v. Bugbee, 250 U.S. 525, 539, 40 S.Ct. 2, 63 L.Ed. 1124. The case is on the border line, as is evidenced by the dissent of four member of the court. [* * *] Thus, if the entire estate had a value which put it within the class for which the rate was three per cent, the rate was to be applied to the value of the property within the state in computing the tax on its transfer, although its value separately taken would put it within the class for which the rate was 2 per cent. There was no attempt, as here, to compute the tax in respect of the part within the state on the value of the whole. The court sustained the tax, but distinctly recognized that the state's power was subject to constitutional limitations, including the due process of law clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and also that it would be a violation of that clause for a state to impose a tax on a thing within its jurisdiction "in such a way as to really amount to taxing that which is beyond its authority."

"For the reasons which have been stated, it must be held that the Pennsylvania statute, in so far as it attempts to tax the transfer of tangible personalty having an actual situs in other states, contravenes the due process of law clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and is invalid.

"The next question relates to the provision which requires that, in computing the value of the estate for the purpose of fixing the amount of the tax, stocks in corporations of other states shall be included at their full value without any deduction for transfer taxes paid to those states in respect of the same stocks.

"The decedent owned many stocks in corporations of states, other than Pennsylvania, which subjected their transfer on death to a tax and prescribed means of enforcement which practically gave those states the status of lienors in possession. As those states had created the corporations issuing the stocks, they had power to impose the tax and to enforce it by such means, irrespective of the decedent's domicile, and the actual situs of the stock certificates. Pennsylvania's jurisdiction over the stocks necessarily was subordinate to that power. Therefore to bring them into the administration in that state it was essential that the tax be paid. The executors paid it out of moneys forming part of the estate in Pennsylvania and the stocks were thereby brought into the administration there. We think it plain that such value as the stocks had in excess of the tax is all that could be regarded as within the range of Pennsylvania's taxing power."

"While the federal tax is called an estate tax and the state tax is called a transfer tax, both are imposed as excises on the transfer of property from a decedent and both take effect at the instant of transfer. Thus both are laid on the same subject, and neither has priority in time over the other." [Bold added.]

Bente v. Bugbee (May 16, 1927)

""Tax" is legal imposition, exclusively of statutory origin, and liability to taxation must be read in statute, or it does not exist." [Bold added.]

"A tax is a legal imposition exclusively of statutory origin (37 Cyc. 724, 725), and, naturally, liability to taxation must be read in the statute, or it does not exist."

Nichols v. Coolidge (May 31, 1927)

"The mere desire to equalize taxation cannot justify a burden on something not within congressional power." p. 540.

"Certainly Congress may lay an excise upon the transfer of property by death reckoned upon the value of the interest which passes thereby. But under the mere guise of reaching something within its powers Congress may not lay a charge upon what is beyond them. Taxes are very real things and statutes imposing them are estimated by practical results." p. 541.

"The statute requires the executors to pay an excise ostensibly laid upon transfer of property by death from Mrs. Coolidge to them but reckoned upon its value plus the value of other property conveyed before the enactment in entire good faith and without contemplation of death. Is the statute, thus construed, within the power of Congress?

"Undoubtedly, Congress may require that property subsequently transferred in contemplation of death be treated as part of the estate for purposes of taxation. This is necessary to prevent evasion and give practical effect to the exercise of admitted power, but the right is limited by the necessity.

"Under the theory advanced for the United States, the arbitrary, whimsical and burdensome character of the challenged tax is plain enough. An excise is prescribed, but the amount of it is made to depend upon past lawful transactions, not testamentary in character and beyond recall." p. 542.

"This court has recognized that a statute purporting to tax may be so arbitrary and capricious as to amount to confiscation and offend the Fifth Amendment. Brushaber v. Union Pacific R.R., 240 U.S. 1, 24, 36 S.Ct. 236, 60 L.Ed. 493, L.R.A. 1917D, 414, Ann.Cas. 1917B, 713; Barclay & Co. v. Edwards, 267 U.S. 442, 450, 45 S.Ct. 135, 348, 69 L.Ed. 703. See, also, Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U.S. 41, 77, 20 S.Ct. 747, 44 L.Ed. 969. And we must conclude that section 402(c) of the statute here under consideration, in so far as it requires that there shall be included in the gross estate the value of property transferred by a decedent prior to its passage merely because the conveyance was intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death, is arbitrary, capricious and amounts to confiscation." pp. 542-543. "Tax on articles sold by manufacturer, producer, or importer, based on percentage of sales price, held tax on sale alone (Revenue Act 1924, §600 [26 U.S.C.A. §§881 note, 882])." [Brackets original.]

"Instrumentalities whereby United States exercises governmental powers are exempt from state taxation, and likewise instrumentalities whereby states exert governmental powers are exempt from taxation by United States."

"Principle exempting instrumentalities of state or federal government from taxation does not extend to anything outside governmental functions."

"It is an established principle of our constitutional system of dual government that the instrumentalities, means and operations whereby the United States exercises its governmental powers are exempt from taxation by the states, and that the instrumentalities, means and operations whereby the states exert the governmental powers belonging to them are equally exempt from taxation by the United States. This principle is implied from the independence of the national and state governments within their respective spheres and from the provisions of the Constitution which look to the maintenance of the dual system. Where the principle applies it is not affected by the amount of the particular tax or the extent of the resulting interference, but is absolute.

.. the salary of an officer of the United States is immune from state taxation because the salary is the "means by which his services are procured and retained" and its taxation by a state would burden the exertion by the United States of powers belonging to the latter. And "for like reasons" it has been held that the salary of a state officer is immune from federal taxation."

"The court there held that while a state may impose a tax on a dealer "for the privilege of carrying on trade that is subject to the power of the State," she may not lay any tax on sales to the United States by which it "secures the things desired for its governmental purposes," and further: "It is immaterial that the seller and not the purchaser is required to report and make payment to the State. Sale and purchase constitute a transaction by which the tax is measured and on which the burden rests."

"We think it follows from these decisions, particularly from the one last cited, that the sale of motorcycles to a state agency, such as a municipal corporation, for use in its police service is not subject to taxation by the United States."

"Under the constitutional principle the exertion of such a function by a state or a state agency has the same immunity from federal taxation that like exertions by the United States or its agencies have from state taxation. Here the tax is laid directly on the sale to a governmental state agency of an article purchased for governmental purposes. ... Thus, the transaction falls within the class which the United States cannot tax consistently with the constitutional principle." [Cites omitted.]

"The right to sue a tax collector to recover back taxes illegally exacted is derived from the common-law and does not depend upon statute. The rule is this. If the payment is made voluntarily, there can be no recovery. But if the payment is made under compulsion and with protest, sufficient to notify the collector that he will be sued to recover it back, he is personally liable whether he has covered the money into the treasury or not."

"There is no statute of the United States expressly giving the right to sue a tax collector to recover back taxes illegally exacted, but the common law has been greatly modified by various statutes in this respect. "We have no doubt that, because of the fundamental conceptions which underlie our system, any attempt by a state to measure the tax on one person's property or income by reference to the property or income of another is contrary to due process of law as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. That which is not in fact the taxpayer's income cannot be made such by calling it income. Compare Nichols v. Coolidge, 274 U.S. 531, 47 S.Ct. 710, 71 L.Ed. 1184, 52 A.L.R. 1081."

"It is incorrect to say that the provision of the Wisconsin income tax statute retains or re-establishes what was formerly an incident of the marriage relation. Wisconsin has not made the property of the wife that of her husband nor has it made the income . from her property the income of her husband. Nor has it established joint ownership. The effort to tax B for A's property or income does not make B the owner of that property or income, and whether the state has power to effect such a change of ownership in a particular case is wholly irrelevant when no such effort has been made. Under the law of Wisconsin, the income of the wife does not at any moment or to any extent become the property of the husband. He never has any title to it, or controls any part of it. That income remains hers until the tax is paid, and what is left continues to be hers after that payment. The state merely levies a tax upon it. What Wisconsin has done is to tax as a joint income that which under its law is owned separately, and thus to secure a higher tax than would be the sum of the taxes on the separate incomes Court case."

[Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, p. 1750]

Black's Law Dictionary: Labor

"LABOR. Work; toil; service.

"Physical exertion."

"Continued exertion, of the more onerous and inferior kind, usually and chiefly consisting in protracted expenditure of muscular force. It is used in this sense in several legal phrases, such as "a count for work and labor," "wages of labor," etc., and is commonly construed as having such meaning when used in statutes giving liens to laborers, [cites omitted]; and in the Immigration Act excluding aliens coming to the United States under contract, "to perform labor." [Cites omitted.]

"The word is sometimes construed to mean service rendered or part played in production of wealth, [cites omitted]; or superintendence or supervision of work."

Black's Law Dictionary: Laborer

"LABORER. The word ordinarily denotes one who subsists by physical labor. [Cite omitted.] One who, as a means of livelihood, performs work and labor for another. [Cites omitted.] One who furnishes his personal service, of a grade commonly performed by persons working by the day. [Cite omitted.] A person without particular training employed at manual labor under a contract terminable at will." [Cites omitted.]

[Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, pp. 1015-1016]

Black's Law Dictionary: Security

"SECURITY. Protection; assurance; indemnification. The term is usually applied to an obligation, pledge, mortgage, deposit, lien, etc., given by a debtor in order to make sure the payment or performance of his debt, by furnishing the creditor with a resource to be used in case of failure in the principal obligation. The name is also sometimes given to one who becomes surety or guarantor for another. Bissinger & Co. v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co., 83 Or. 288, 163 P. 592, 593."

Black's Law Dictionary: Wager

"WAGER. A contract by which two or more parties agree that a certain sum of money or other thing shall be paid or delivered to one of them or that they shall gain or lose on the happening of an uncertain event or upon the ascertainment of a fact in dispute, where the parties have no interest in the event except that arising from the possibility of such gain or loss. H. Seay & Co. v. Moore, Tex.Com.App., 261 S.W. 1013, 1014; Young v. Stephenson, 82 Old. 239, 200 P. 225, 228, 24 A.L.R. 978; Odle v. State, 139 Tex.Cr.R. 288, 139 S.W.2d. 595, 597. See, also, Bet.

"It was said that contract giving one party or the other an option to carry out the transaction or not at pleasure is not invalid as a "wager." Palmer v. Love, 18 Tenn.App. 579, 80 S.W.2d. 100, 105; but if, under guise of contract of sale, real intent of both parties is merely to speculate in rise or fall of prices and property is not to be delivered, but at time fixed for delivery one party is to pay difference between contract price and market price, transaction is invalid as "wager." Baucum & Kimball v. Garrett Mercantile Co., 188 La. 728, 178 So. 256, 259, 260."

State of California v. Anglim (March 6, 1941)

"The operation of ports and harbors constitutes a "governmental function" as respects immunity from federal taxation of instrumentalities used by state in connection with port and harbor.

"Before immunity from federal taxation is extended to activity in which a state is engaged, it must appear that such activity is essentially and traditionally governmental in nature."

United States*, 199 U.S. 437, 26 S.Ct. 110, 114, 50 L.Ed. 261, 4 Ann.Cas. 737]: "There is something of a conflict between the full power of the nation in respect to taxation and the exemption of the state from Federal taxation in respect to its property and a discharge of all its functions. Where and how shall the line between them be drawn?"

"The Court then concluded that the only consistent course to follow is to limit the exemption of state agencies and instrumentalities from national taxation to those which are of a strictly governmental character, and not to extend such immunity to those state activities which are of a private nature, normally carried on in private ownership." Mitsukiyo Yoshimura v. Alsup (Mar. 30, 1948)

"We have no doubt that such coercive and fraudulent threats of internment constitute the exceptional circumstance recognized in Hill v. Wallace, 259 U.S. 44, 42 S.Ct. 453, 66 L.Ed. 822, where the injunction was granted because, as stated at page 66 of 259 U.S., at page 457 of 42 S.Ct., the taxing act in question "is in essence and on its face a complete regulation of Boards of Trade, with a penalty of 20 cents a bushel on all 'futures' to coerce Boards of Trade and their members into compliance. When this purpose is declared in the title to the bill, and is so clear from the effect of the provisions of the bill itself, it leaves no ground upon which the provisions we have been considering can be sustained as a valid exercise of the taxing power.""

United States v. Kahriger (Mar. 9, 1953)

"It is axiomatic that the power of Congress to tax is extensive and sometimes falls with crushing effect on businesses deemed unessential or inimical to the public welfare, or where, as in dealings with narcotics, the collection of the tax also is difficult. As is well known, the constitutional restraints on taxing are few. "Congress cannot tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment, and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity." License Tax Cases, supra, 5 Wall. 471. The remedy for excessive taxation is in the hands of Congress, not the courts. [Cite omitted.] Speaking of the creation of the Bank of the United States, as an instrument for carrying out federal fiscal policies, this Court said in McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 423, 4 L.Ed. 579.

"Should Congress, in the execution of its powers, adopt measures which are prohibited by the constitution; or should Congress, under the pretext of executing its powers, pass laws for the accomplishment of objects not entrusted to the government; it would become the painful duty of this tribunal, should a case requiring such a decision come before it, to say that such an act was not the law of the land."

"The difficulty of saying when the power to lay uniform taxes is curtailed, because its use brings a result beyond the direct legislative power of Congress, has given rise to diverse decisions. In that area of abstract ideas, a final definition of the line between state and federal power has baffled judges and legislators."

C.I.R. v. Glenshaw Glass Co. (Mar. 28, 1955)

"Compensation received in a fraud or antitrust case for damages actually incurred is taxable income."

"Punitive damages cannot be considered a restoration of capital for income tax purposes."

"Simplification of definition of gross income in Internal Revenue Code of 1954 was not intended to affect the broad scope of the definition."

"Punitive damages cannot be classified, for income tax purposes, as a "gift"."

"Money received, by settlement, as exemplary damages for fraud and antitrust violations and as the punitive two-thirds portion of a treble damage antitrust suit recovery was taxable "gross income"."

"But Congress applied no limitations as to the source of taxable receipts, nor restrictive labels as to their nature. And the Court has given a liberal construction to this broad phraseology in recognition of the intention of Congress to tax all gains except those specifically exempted."

"It is urged that re-enactment of §22(a) without change since the Board of Tax Appeals held punitive damages nontaxable in Highland Farms Corp., 42 B.T.A. 1314, indicates congressional satisfaction with that holding. Re-enactment--particularly without the slightest affirmative indication that Congress ever had the Highland Farms decision before it--is an unreliable indicium at best."

"Certainly punitive damages cannot reasonably be classified as gifts, cf. Commissioner v. Jacobson, 336 U.S. 28, 47-52, 69 S.Ct. 358, 368-370, 93 L.Ed. 477, nor do they come under any other exemption provision in the Code. We would do violence to the plain meaning of the statute and restrict a clear legislative attempt to bring the taxing power to bear upon all receipts constitutionally taxable were we to say that the payments in question here are not gross income." General American Investors Co. v. C.I.R. (Mar. 28, 1955)

"We have this day decided that the recovery of punitive damages for fraud or antitrust violation is reportable as gross income within the meaning of §22(a). Commissioner v. Glenshaw Glass Co., 349 [sic] U.S. 426, 75 S.Ct. 473. The reasons which dictated that result are equally compelling here. We see no significant difference in the nature of these receipts which might make that ruling inapplicable. As in Glenshaw, the taxpayer realized the money in question free of any restrictions as to use. The payments in controversy were neither capital contributions nor gifts. Cf. Texas & Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 286 U.S. 285, 52 S.Ct. 528, 76 L.Ed. 1108. There is no indication that Congress intended to exempt them from coverage. In accordance with the legislative design to reach all gain constitutionally taxable" unless specifically excluded, we conclude that the petitioner is liable for the tax and the judgment is affirmed."

C.I.R. v. Lo Bue (May 28, 1956)

"Where it was possible that Tax Court and Court of Appeals had given too narrow an interpretation to income tax statute defining gross income, Supreme Court granted certiorari."

"Where stock options were given by employer to employees to provide them with an incentive to promote growth of company by permitting them to participate in its success, transfer of such options was not a "gift" within gift exemption from income taxation."

"When assets are transferred by an employer to an employee to secure better services, they are "compensation" within income tax statute defining gross income, and it makes no difference if the compensation is paid in stock rather than in money."

"Where employee received very substantial economic and financial benefit, consisting of stock options, from his employer because of employer's desire to get better work from employee, this was "compensation for personal service" within income tax statute defining gross income."

"Where employer, to provide incentive to employee," transferred to him option to buy stock at substantially less than market value, employee realized taxable gain when he purchased the stock."

"It is possible for recipient of stock option to realize immediate taxable gain."

"Where stock options given by employer to employee as an incentive were not transferable and his right to buy stock under them was contingent upon his remaining an employee of company until they were exercised, and where options were to buy at less than market value, taxable gain to employee was to be measured at time options were exercised and not at the time they were granted."

Botta v. Scanlon (Mar. 6, 1961)

"An assessment of penalty for willful failure to collect or to pay over a tax against one who is not obligated to collect or pay over the tax would be inconsistent with equity, due process, or justice. 26 U.S.C.A. (I.R.C.1954) §§6671(b), 6672."

"Tax officials are not vested with absolute power of assessment against individuals not specified in statutes as persons liable for tax without opportunity for judicial review of status before persons' property- is seized and sold, and same is true where liability is asserted as penalty for willful act. 26 U.S.C.A. (I.R.C.1954) §§6671(b), 6672."

.. in Adler v. Nicholas, 10 Cir., 1948, 166 F.2d. 674, 678.... "It is equally well settled that the Revenue laws relate only to taxpayers. No procedure is prescribed for a nontaxpayer where the Government seeks to levy on property belonging to him for the collection of another's tax, and no attempt has been made to annul the ordinary rights or remedies of a non-taxpayer in such cases. If the Government sought to levy on the property of A for a tax liability owing by B, A could not and would not be required to pay the tax under protest and then institute an action to recover the amount so paid. His remedy would be to go into a court of competent jurisdiction and enjoin the Government from proceeding against his property." [Brackets original.]

"Plaintiffs may or may not be able to allege facts showing that Section 7421 is inapplicable to them. However, a reasonable construction of the taxing statutes does not include vesting any tax official with absolute power of assessment against individuals not specified in the statutes as persons liable for the tax without an opportunity for judicial review of this status before the appellation of "taxpayer is bestowed upon them and their property is seized and sold."

"The starting point in all cases dealing with the question of the scope of what is included in "gross income" begins with the basic premise that the purpose of Congress was "to use the full measure of its taxing power." Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U.S. 331. 334. 60 S.Ct. 554. 556, 84 L.Ed. 788. And the Court has given a liberal construction to the broad phraseology of the "gross income" definition statutes in recognition of the intention of Congress to tax all gains except those specifically exempted. [Cites omitted.] The language of §22(a) of the 1939 Code, "gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever," and the more simplified language of §61(a) of the 1954 Code, "all income from whatever source derived, have been held to encompass all "accessions to wealth, clearly realized, and over which the taxpayers have complete dominion." Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Glenshaw Glass Co., 348 U.S. 426, 431, 75 S.Ct. 473, 477, 99 L.Ed. 483. "Plaintiff, an insurance company with its home office in Washington, D.C., sells life, accident, and health insurance."

"It has been held that where an employer holds contests among its salesmen to stimulate sales, with the winners receiving prizes in cash or property, the cash value of the awards constitutes additional wages to the salesmen for Federal employment and withholding tax purposes. Rev. Ruling 55-232, 1955-1 Cum. Bull. 115." [Bold added.]

"It should be noted in this connection that defendant does not dispute the propriety of plaintiff's deducting, in the computation of its own income tax, the convention costs as ordinary and necessary expenses in the conduct of its business. As "wages," the expenses would, of course, also be deductible. What it merely seeks to do is to shift the convention costs from the "Agency Conferences" expense category on plaintiff's books to the "wages" category, for the sole purpose, obviously, of imposing a withholding tax liability with respect thereto and a corresponding income tax liability on the employees. Thus, there is no direct question here involved of the proper amount of plaintiff's own income tax liability.

The basic purpose of the withholding of income taxes at the source on wages, first adopted by the Current Tax Payment Act of 1943, appear to have been the establishment of a system of placing individual taxpayers on a pay-as-you-go basis, thus alleviating the burden of making large payments at one time, as well as "to guard the Treasury against deaths, disappearances, and insolvencies, and to catch the itinerants who were moving from place to place with incomes taxable in the aggregate but with whom the Treasury could not keep pace," 8A Mertens, Law of Federal Income Taxation, §47A.01, rather than as a device, as defendant is here using it, to determine the basic tax liability of the employee, who is not even a party to the case."

"Based on all of the facts and considerations hereinabove set forth, it is concluded that the convention expenses herein involved did not constitute "wages" or "remuneration" within the meaning of the withholding tax provisions of section 3401, and that they are, instead, to be considered as following within the provisions of section 31.3401(a)-1(b) (2), "Traveling and other expenses," and subsection 1(b) 10, "Facilities or privileges," of the regulations issued under such section."

National Bellas Hess, Inc. v. Department of Revenue (May 8, 1967)

"For the test whether a particular state exaction is such as to invade the exclusive authority of Congress to regulate trade between the States, and the test for a State's compliance with the requirements of due process in this area are similar. [Cites omitted.] As to the former, the Court has held that "State taxation falling on interstate commerce * * * can only be justified as designed to make such commerce bear a fair share of the cost of the local government whose protection it enjoys." [Cites omitted.] And in determining whether a state tax falls within the confines of the Due Process Clause, the Court has said that the "simple but controlling question is whether the state has given anything for which it can ask return." [Cites omitted.] The same principles have been held applicable in determining the power of a State to impose the burdens of collecting use taxes upon interstate sales. Here, too, the Constitution requires "some definite link, some minimum connection, between a state and the person, property or transaction it seeks to tax.""

"In applying these principles the Court has upheld the power of a State to impose liability upon an out-of-state seller to collect a local use tax in a variety of circumstances. Where the sales were arranged by local agents in the taxing State, we have upheld such power. [Cites omitted.] We have reached the same result where the mail order seller maintained local retail stores."

"But the Court has never held that a State may impose the duty of use tax collection and payment upon a seller whose only connection with customers in the State is by common carrier or the United States mail. Indeed, in the Sears, Roebuck case the Court sharply differentiated such a situation from one where the seller had local retail outlets, pointing out that "those other concerns * * * are not receiving benefits from Iowa for which it has the power to exact a price."

"Defendant could not be guilty of concealment to defeat collection of taxes which had not yet been assessed when alleged concealment took place, and as to which, at such time, there had been no neglect or refusal to pay after notice and demand."

"Section 6331, as the emphasized portions indicate, authorizes levy only after one "liable to pay" a tax "neglects or refuses" to do so after "notice and demand" by the government's agent. Bershad v. Wood, 290 F.2d. 714 (9th Cir. 1961); Mrizek v. Long, 187 F.Supp. 830 (N.D.Ill.1960); Code Commentary, J. Mertens, Law of Federal Income Taxation §6331:1 (1969)."

"The legislative history of section 7206 (4) indicates that this provision resulted from amendment of §3321(a) of the Int. Rev. Code of 1939. The previous provision related only to concealment of goods or commodities. It was amended in the Int.Rev.Code of 1954 to cover "offenses committed in order to avoid levy." H.R.Rep.No. 1337 in 3 U.S.C.Cong. & Ad. News, p. 4573 (1954). If in amending this sentence Congress had intended to make it an offense to conceal property before levy was authorized- (i. e. before assessment), it knew how to do so. Congress was careful to authorize prospective effect in relation to concealing to avoid assessment or collection of taxes on "goods or commodities" by making the modifying clause as to them read "for or in respect whereof any tax is or shall be imposed." Thus Congress could have made the critical language involved in this section (and therefore, this indictment) read "or any property upon which levy is or shall be authorized by section 6331."

Chicago Bridge and Iron Company v. Wheatley (July 13, 1970)

"Delaware corporation was entitled to use Western Hemisphere trade corporation deduction to reduce its income x945-971 liability to Virgin Islands."

"The Virgin Islands are considered to be a "country * * * in the West Indies" and a source of income "without the United States" in the administration of this special provision. Rev.Rul. 55-105, 1955-1 Cum.Bull. 94; I.T. 4067, 1951-2 Cum.Bull.55-56. In addition, section 7701(a) (4) of the 1954 Code defines a "domestic" corporation as one "created or organized in the United States or under the law of the United States or of any State or Territory." But Virgin Islands corporations are not "domestic" under the definition in section 7701(a) (4) because the term "Territory" in that section includes only incorporated territories, such as Alaska and Hawaii before they were admitted to the Union. See Treas. Reg. §301.7701-5 (1960). The Virgin Islands are an unincorporated territory, 48 U.S.C. §1541(a) (1964), and a Virgin Islands corporation is treated as "foreign" for purposes of the United States income tax. See Rev.Rul. 56-616, 1956-2 Cum.Bull. 589-90."

"Both the federal tax administrators and the Congress have recognized that implementation of the Internal Revenue Code as a separate taxing statute in the Virgin Islands requires some substitution of language. In a ruling published in 1935, the Bureau of Internal Revenue noted that in construing the taxing statute applicable in the Virgin Islands, "it will, of course, be necessary in some sections of the law to substitute the words 'Virgin Islands' for the words 'United States, in order to give the law proper effect in those islands." I.T. 2946, X1V-2 Cum.Bull. 109, 110 (1935).

"The Internal Revenue Code was enacted as the income tax law of Guam by section 31 of the Organic Act of Guam in language identical in all relevant respects to the statute that had established what has come to be called the "mirror system" of taxation in the Virgin Islands. The equivalent mirror system of taxation in Guam has been the subject of congressional and judicial interpretations that indicate the extent to which the Internal Revenue Code should be modified in its application as a separate territorial income tax. The decisions construing the original Guamanian tax statute agreed that "[t]he tax to be paid ordinarily is measured by the amount of income tax the taxpayer' would be required to pay to the United States of America if the taxpayer were residing in the continental United States," and that the literal terms of the Internal Revenue Code should be modified only by "those nonsubstantive changes in nomenclature as are necessary to avoid confusion as to the taxing jurisdiction involved."

Royster Co. v. United States (June 4, 1973)

"The Term 'wages,' as used in Internal Revenue Code provisions on federal insurance contributions, federal unemployment taxes and income tax withholding, is narrower than the term 'income' as used in income tax provisions relating to how an individual must treat payments to him; wages are merely one form of income."

"Where amounts paid by taxpayer to its salesmen to reimburse them for cost of meals eaten in sales territory was not attributable to any service on part of salesmen, who were not on call during their lunch break, who got free lunch whether they made any sales on day in question or not and who performed no services during the lunch hour, such payments did not constitute 'wages' subject to Federal Insurance Contributions Act, Federal Unemployment Tax Act and income tax withholding."

"The government contends that in determining whether the amounts at issue in this litigation are wages, the question is whether the amounts paid are 'attributable to the employment relationship.' Such a sweeping theory is too broad. Carried to its logical conclusion, the government's argument might require that every payment or other economic gain flowing from an employer to an employee constituted wages upon which withholding of income and FICA tax is required and FUTA tax payable. See Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. United States, 194 Ct.Cl. 920, 442 F.2d. 1362 (1971). This, of course, is not the law. There are numerous instances in which the government has been of opinion that benefits flowing from the employer to the employee do not constitute wages within the purview of the statutes at issue herein. For example, in Revenue Ruling 59-227, 1959-2 C.B. 13, it was held that a lump sum payment to an employee for his relinquishment of a seniority right and the vacation of a particular position, while ordinary income to the employee, did not constitute compensation for services performed and hence withholding was not required. And, in Revenue Ruling 55-520, 1955-2 C.B. 393, payment to an employee in settlement of litigation over his employment contract, while held to be income to the employee, was held not to constitute a payment for services on which withholding was required. See also Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. United States, 194 Ct.Cl. 920, 442 F.2d. 1362 (1971). We cannot agree that any payment made to the employee which is 'attributable to the employment relationship' constitutes wages subject to FICA, withholding and FUTA."

"We believe that the question here is whether the payments at issue were made to the employees of Royster as remuneration for services performed. Such is the literal wording of the statutes involved, and the government advances no reason to support the expanded construction contended for."

Moorman Mfg. Co. v. Bair (June 15, 1978)

"Under the due process clause, no tax may be imposed unless there is some minimal connection between those activities and taxing state, and income attributed to state for tax purposes must be rationally related to values connected with the taxing state."

"The Due Process Clause places two restrictions on a State's power to tax income generated by the activities of an interstate business. First, no tax may be imposed, unless there is some minimal connection between those activities and the taxing State. National Bellas Hess, Inc. v. Department of Revenue, 386 U.S. 753, 756, 87 S.Ct. 1389, 1390, 18 L.Ed.2d. 505. This requirement was plainly satisfied here. Second, the income attributed to the State for tax purposes must be rationally related to "values connected with the taxing State."

Lonsdale v. C.I.R. (Nov. 12, 1981)

"On appeal from adverse judgment rendered by tax court in suit contesting deficiencies determined by Commissioner in taxpayers income tax payments for years 1976 and 1977, pro se arguments which were partly theological were beyond special competence or jurisdiction of Court of Appeals."

"Constitution does not forbid taxation of compensation received by taxpayers for personal services, since Constitution grants Congress power to tax incomes, from whatever source derived."

"Definition of income in Internal Revenue Code as all 'accessions to wealth' is clearly within power to tax 'income' granted by Sixteenth Amendment."

"It is not necessary to apportion' income tax among the several states."

"Suit contesting deficiencies determined by Commissioner in taxpayers' income tax payments for years 1976 and 1977 is not 'suit at common law * * * ' in which taxpayers were entitled to jury trial."

United States v. Slater (July 8, 1982)

" 'Tax exemptions' are items which taxpayer is entitled to excuse from operation of a tax and, as such, are to be strictly construed against taxpayer while 'tax exclusions' are items which were not intended to be taxed in the first place and thus, to extent there is any doubt about meaning of statutory language, exclusionary provisions are to be construed strictly against taxing body."

"Initially, it is important to bear in mind the distinction between a tax exclusion and a tax exemption. Tax exemptions are items which the tax payer is entitled to excuse from the operation of a tax and, as such, are to be strictly construed against the tax payer. Tax exclusions, on the other hand, are items which were not intended to be taxed in the first place and, thus, to the extent there is any doubt about the meaning of the statutory language, exclusionary provisions are to be strictly construed against the taxing body. In fact, tax laws in general (with the exception of exemption clauses) are construed in favor of the tax payer and against imposition of the tax unless the legislative intent is clear and unambiguous."

Lively v. C.I.R. (May 2, 1983)

"Tax Court did not err in upholding Commissioner of Internal Revenue's disallowance of taxpayers deductions, even though taxpayers, who filed wage and tax statements with their return, did not claim any deductions but reported their income on the line for 'business income,' which they calculated according to Schedule C, clearly including impermissible deductions for personal expenses."

"Taxpayers' appeal of Tax Court's decision affirming Internal Revenue Commissioner's disallowance of their deductions was frivolous, and, therefore, they were required to pay double the costs of the Commissioner."

26 U.S.C. §874(a)

"A nonresident alien individual shall receive the benefit of the deductions and credit allowed to him in this subtitle only by filing or causing to be filed with the Secretary a true and accurate return, in the manner prescribed in subtitle F (sec. 6001 and following, relating to procedure and administration), including therein all the information which the Secretary may deem necessary for calculation of such deductions and credits."

Parker v. C.I.R. (Feb. 6, 1984)

"Authority conferred upon Congress by Constitution 'to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises' is exhaustive and embraces every conceivable power of taxation, and Sixteenth Amendment' merely eliminates requirement that direct income tax be apportioned among the states."

"Constitution as amended empowers Congress to levy income tax against any source of income, without need to apportion tax equally among states, or to classify it as excise tax applicable to specific categories of activities."

Granzow v. C.I.R. (July 13, 1984)

"Wages received by taxpayers constitute gross income subject to taxation."

"Where taxpayers acted in disregard of tax laws by excluding their wages from taxable income, imposition of addition to tax on taxpayers whose underpayment of tax is caused by negligence or intentional disregard of rules or regulations was proper. 26 U.S.C.A. §6653(a)."

"Party claiming exemption from income taxation bears burden of proof of entitlement."

"Tax Court's determination that taxpayer was not a tax-exempt religious organization was supported by evidence that taxpayer was located in its members' family residence, had no members other than the family, and did not conduct regular services or support typical church programs and that family members refused to provide any financial information about it."

"Taxpayer's contention that he was exempt from taxation because he had taken a vow of poverty was untimely raised where, despite having several years to do so, taxpayer did not amend his petition to incorporate facts sufficient to support the assertion until the eve of trial."

"Because abusers of tax system have no license to make irresponsible demands on courts of appeals to consider fanciful arguments put forward in bad faith, taxpayers filing frivolous appeals would be required to pay costs and reasonable attorney fees to Internal Revenue Commissioner."

Johnson v. Quinn (Aug. 3, 1984)

"As stated in Revenue Ruling 73-315, 1973-2 C.B. 225, "[T]he United States and Virgin Islands are separate and distinct taxing jurisdictions although their income tax laws arise from an identical statute applicable to each."

"Congress has provided that inhabitants of the Virgin Islands must file a return with and pay taxes to the Virgin Islands on income derived from both within and outside the Virgin Islands. [Cite omitted.] However, United States citizens not residing permanently in the Virgin Islands, but deriving some income in the Virgin Islands, must file two tax returns, one reporting and paying taxes to the Virgin Islands on Virgin Island income, and the other reporting and paying taxes to the United States on income from all sources. [Cite omitted.] Hence United States citizens not residing in the Virgin Islands but with Virgin Islands income would face the possibility of double taxation. To avoid that result, Congress granted a section 901 tax credit for taxes paid to the Virgin Islands for those persons with the dual tax obligation. Virgin Islands residents, however, do not face the possibility of double taxation since they pay no income tax to the United States and, therefore, have no need of the credit. Petitioners, having been taxed by a state of the United States, contend that they are entitled to a foreign tax credit for taxes paid to that state. But such a result would not only distort the purpose of the credit, it would result in petitioners being able to claim a credit where no such credit would be available to a taxpayer residing in the United States. This is precisely the type of result to be discouraged under the equality principles enunciated in the cases construing the mirror tax theory; the literal terms of the Internal Revenue Code should be modified (mirrored) only to the extent of such nonsubstantive changes in nomenclature as are necessary to avoid confusion as to the taxing jurisdiction involved."

"Whether to impose sanctions for frivolous appeal is for the appellate court's discretion."

Welch v. United States (Jan. 4, 1985)

"Tax deductions and credits are a matter of legislative grace, and unless Congress provides for a deduction or a credit in the law, it is not allowable."

"Taxpayers who were assessed penalties for claiming "war tax" credits were not penalized for expressing their political, moral or religious beliefs on their returns, or for attaching letters to their returns stating their opposition to military spending but, rather, were penalized simply because they filed returns containing substantially incorrect selfassessments based on clearly unallowable credits."

"Noncompliance with federal tax laws is conduct that is afforded no protection under the First Amendment."

"Frivolous return provision of the Internal Revenue Code was not unconstitutionally vague."

"Section 6702 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, applicable with respect to returns filed after September 3, 1982, was enacted as part of the Tax Equity' and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 ("TEFRA"), Pub.L. No. 97-248, 96 Stat. 324, in order to improve compliance with the federal tax laws. See, S.Rep. No. 494, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 74, 277, reprinted in 1982 U.S.Code Cong. & Ad.News 781, 1023-25. The provision was enacted in response to the "rapid growth in deliberate defiance of the tax laws by tax protestors." As the Senate Finance Committee explained:

"[t]he committee is concerned with the rapid growth in deliberate defiance of the tax laws by tax protestors. The Internal Revenue Service had 13,600 illegal protest returns under examination as of June 30, 1981. Many of these protestors are induced to file protest returns through the criminal conduct of others. These advisors frequently emphasize the lack of any penalty when sufficient tax has been withheld from wages and encourage others to play the "audit lottery." The committee believes that an immediately assessable penalty on the filing of protest returns will help deter the filing of such returns, and will demonstrate the determination of the Congress to maintain the integrity of the income tax system."

"Moreover, even if taxpayers' attempts to reduce their taxes were treated as expressive activity protected by the First Amendment, it is clear that the necessities of maintaining a sound revenue system raise a compelling governmental interest adequate to override this fundamental right."

 "Common goal of aid to families with dependent children statute, food stamp program, and poverty guidelines of Department of Health and Human Services to define who was needy did not establish that 'income' as used in statute governing aid to families with dependent children excluded personal injury awards."
 "Legislative and administrative history of statute governing aid to families with dependent children established that Department of Health and Human Services had permitted states to define income to include personal injury awards."
 "Legislation using word that has been given administrative interpretation does not freeze administrative interpretation in place."
 "Healthy body is not 'resource' within meaning of statute governing aid to families with dependent children."

"Note: Individuals who are not citizens of the United States but who are residents of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, or American Samoa are not considered to be nonresident aliens for purposes of the self-employment tax. Nonresident aliens who are the subject of agreements under §233 of the Social Security Act are not considered to be nonresident aliens for purposes of the self-employment tax."

"c. Net Earnings From Self-Employment "(1) In General

"Net earnings from self-employment is the gross income derived by an individual from any trade or business carried on by the individual, reduced by income tax deductions attributable to the trade or business. Net earnings from self-employment also includes the individual's distributive share of nonseparately stated partnership income or loss...."

"d. Trade or Business

"(1) In General

"A trade or business, in the context of the self-employment tax, has the same meaning it has for purposes of determining whether the individual is allowed to deduct expenses under §162.

"(2) Exceptions

"(a) Public Officials

"A trade or business does not include the performance of the functions of a public office. This exception does not apply to performance of the functions of a public office of a state or political subdivision of a state with respect to fees received in any period in which the functions are performed in a position compensated solely on a fee basis and in which the functions are not covered under an agreement under §218 of the Social Security Act between the state and the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(b) Employees

"A trade or business does not include the performance of services as an employee. An individual is an employee if the individual is an employee for purposes of the FICA Tax. This exception does not apply to the following types of employment:

"(a) Services as a newspaper carried by an individual who has not attained the age of 18, to the extent the rendition of the services are not treated as employment for FICA tax purposes;"

"I. Introduction

"There are three particular trades or businesses, those of being an employee, a farmer, and a timber and mineral extractor [...]."

"II. Trade or Business Deductions Generally "B. Trade or Business

"1. In General

"Because there is no statutory or regulatory definition of a trade or business, the task of establishing parameters for determining the existence of a trade or business has fallen to the courts. The courts have developed two definitional elements, one in relation to profit motive and the other in relation to the scope of the activities.

"2. Profit Motive

"a. In General

"There can be no trade or business unless the taxpayer enters into and carries on the activity with a good faith purpose of making a profit or in the belief that a profit can be made from the activity.

"A trade or business can exist even if there are no profits in the initial years provided there is profit potential.

"b. Generation of Tax Benefits

"No trade or business exists if the primary purpose of the activity is to generate tax deductions or other tax benefits.

"3. Scope of the Activity

"Note: As a practical matter, most activities that are determined to be trades or businesses are so treated because the taxpayer offers goods or services to the public. The Groetzinger decision, however, expands the group of activities that are treated as trades or businesses by bringing within the ambit of the definition the activities of a taxpayer who does not offer goods or services to the public, but which are the sources of the taxpayer's livelihood. "

"6. Employment as Trade or Business

"a. In General

"The performance of services as an employee constitutes a trade or business. In order for an expenditure to be deductible, the employee must show the relationship between the expenditure and the employment. However, the performance of services for which compensation is not sought nor received does not constitute a trade or business because of the lack of a profit motive.

"b. Corporate Officers and Directors

"Generally, being employed as a corporate officer constitutes a trade or business.

"7. Activities of Corporations

"a. In General

"Generally, a for-profit corporation's activities constitute a trade or business because the corporation's existence is predicated solely on engaging in transactions with third parties in a manner intended to generate a profit."

"If you are required to report employment taxes or give tax statements to employees or annuitants, you need an EIN."

"Generally, employees are defined either under common law or under special statutes for special purposes."

"Employment status under common law.--Anyone who performs services is an employee if you, as an employer, can control what will be done and how it will be done. This is so even when you give the employee freedom of action. What matters is that you have the legal right to control the method and result of the services."

"Generally, people in business for themselves are not employees. For example, doctors, lawyers, veterinarians, construction contractors, and others in an independent trade in which they offer their services to the public are usually not employees."

"If an employer-employee relationship exists, it does not matter what it is called. The employee may be called an agent or independent contractor. It also does not matter how payments are measured or paid, what they are called, or if the employee works full or part time."

"Statutory employees.--If someone who works for you is not an employee under the common law rules discussed above, do not withhold Federal income tax from his or her pay."

"Statutory nonemployees.--Direct sellers and qualified real estate agents are by law considered nonemployees. They are instead treated as self-employed for income tax and employment tax purposes. See Pub. 15-A for details."

"Treating employees as nonemployees.--You will be liable for income tax and employee social security and Medicare taxes if you don't deduct and withhold them because you treat an employee as a nonemployee. See Internal Revenue Code section 3509 for details."

"If you want the IRS to determine whether a worker is an employee, file Form SS-8, Determination of Employee Work Status for Purposes of Federal Employment Taxes and Income Tax Withholding."

"Child employed by parents.--Payments for the services of a child under the age of 18 who works for his or her parent (or a partnership in which each partner is a parent of the child) in a trade or business are not subject to social security and Medicare taxes. If these services are for work other than in a trade or business, such as domestic work in the parent's private home, they are not subject to social security and Medicare taxes until the child reaches 21."

"Payments for the services of a child under the age of 21 who works for his or her parent whether or not in a trade or business are not subject to Federal unemployment taxes."

"The above rules apply even if the child is paid regular wages. The wages for these services are not subject to social security, Medicare, and Federal unemployment taxes. But they may still be subject to income tax withholding."

"You must get each employee's name and SSN because you must enter them on Form W-2. (This requirement also applies to resident and nonresident alien employees.) If you do not provide the correct name and SSN, you may owe a penalty."

Any employee without a social security card can get one by completing Form SS-5, Application for a Social Security Card. You can get this form at Social Security Administration (SSA) offices or by calling 1-800-772-1213. If your employee applied for an SSN but does not have it when you must file form W-2, enter "Applied For" on the form. When the employee receives the SSN, file Form W-2c, Statement of Corrected Income and Tax Amounts, to show the employee's SSN."

"Wages subject to Federal employment taxes include all pay you give an employee for services performed. The pay may be in cash or in other forms. It includes salaries, vacation allowances, bonuses, commissions, and fringe benefits. It does not matter how you measure or make the payments. See section 6 for a discussion of tips and section 7 for supplemental wages. Also see section 15 for exceptions to the general rules for wages."

8.3 Territoriality of Income Taxation

Territoriality of income taxation means that it is limited to the territory over which the U.S. government enjoys exclusive legislative jurisdiction under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 and Article 4 of the Constitution. TERRITORY. Apart of a country, separated from the rest, and subject to a particular jurisdiction. The word is derived from terreo, and is so called because the magistrate within his jurisdiction has the power of inspiring a salutary fear. Dictum cat ab eo quod magistratus intra fines ejus terrendi jus habet. Henrion de Pansy, Auth. Judiciare, 98. In speaking of the ecclesiastical jurisdictions, Francis Duaren observes, that the ecclesiastics are said not to have territory, nor the power of arrest or removal, and are not unlike the Roman magistrates of whom Gellius says vocationem habebant non prehensionem. De Sacris Eccl. Minist. lib. 1, cap. 4. In the sense it is used in the constitution of the United States, it signifies a portion of the country subject to and belonging to the United States, which is not within the boundary of any of them. 2. The constitution of the United States, art. 4, s. 3, provides, that "the congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States; and nothing in this constitution shall be construed, so as to preclude the claims of the United States or of any state." 3. Congress possesses the power to erect territorial governments within the territory of the United States; the power of congress over such territory is exclusive and universal, and their legislation is subject to no control, unless in the case of ceded territory, as far as it may be affected

86 Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), Territories, §1 (2003)

"§1. Definitions, Nature, and Distinctions

"The word 'territory,' when used to designate a political organization has a distinctive, fixed, and legal meaning under the political institutions of the United States, and does not necessarily include all the territorial possessions of the United States, but may include only the portions thereof which are organized and exercise governmental functions under act of congress."

"While the term 'territory' is often loosely used, and has even been construed to include municipal subdivisions of a territory, and 'territories of the' United States is sometimes used to refer to the entire domain over which the United States exercises dominion, the word 'territory,' when used to designate a political organization, has a distinctive, fixed, and legal meaning under the political institutions of the United States, and the term 'territory' or 'territories' does not necessarily include only a portion or the portions thereof which are organized and exercise government functions under acts of congress. The term 'territories' has been defined to be political subdivisions of the outlying dominion of the United States, and in this sense the term 'territory' is not a description of a definite area of land but of a political unit governing and being governed as such. The question whether a particular subdivision or entity is a territory is not determined by the particular form of government with which it is, more or less temporarily, invested.

"Territories' or 'territory' as including 'state' or 'states.'" While the term 'territories of the' United States may, under certain circumstances, include the states of the Union, as used in the federal Constitution and in ordinary acts of congress "territory" does not include a foreign state.

"As used in this title, the term 'territories' generally refers to the political subdivisions created by congress, and not within the boundaries of any of the several states."

Cunard S. S. Co. v. Mellon, 262 U.S. 100, 43 S.Ct. 504 (1923)

"Various meanings are sought to be attributed to the term 'territory' in the phrase 'the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof.' We are of opinion that it means the regional areas- of land and adjacent waters-over which the United States claims and exercises dominion and control as a sovereign power. The immediate context and the purport of the entire section show that the term is used in a physical and not a metaphorical sense-that it refers to areas or districts having fixity of location and recognized boundaries. See United States v. Bevens, 3 Wheat. 336, 390.

"It now is settled in the United States and recognized elsewhere that the territory subject to its jurisdiction includes the land areas under its dominion and control, the ports, harbors, bays and other enclosed arms of the sea along its coast and a marginal belt of the sea extending from the coast line outward a marine league, or three geographic miles. Church v. Dred Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. 393, 509-510 (1856)

"The Constitution permits Congress to dispose of and to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States. This power applies as well to territory belonging to the United States within the States, as beyond them. It comprehends all the public domain, wherever it may be. The argument is, that the power to make 'ALL needful rules and regulations' 'is a power of legislation,' 'a full legislative power,' 'that it includes all subjects of legislation in the territory,' and is without any limitations, except the positive prohibitions which affect all the powers of Congress. Congress may then regulate or prohibit slavery upon the public domain within the new States, and such a prohibition would permanently affect the capacity of a slave, whose master might carry him to it. And why not? Because no power has been conferred on Congress. This is a conclusion universally admitted. But the power to 'make rules and regulations respecting the territory' is not restrained by State lines, nor are there any constitutional prohibitions upon its exercise in the domain of the United States within the States; and whatever rules and regulations respecting territory Congress may constitutionally make are supreme, and are not dependent on the situs of 'the territory.'"

"In this connection, the peculiar language of the territorial clause, article 4, s 3, cl. 2, of the Constitution, should be noted. By that clause Congress is given power 'to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States.' Literally, the word 'territory,' as there used, signifies property, since the language is not 'territory or property,' but 'territory or other property.' There thus arises an evident difference between the words 'the territory' and 'a territory' of the United States. The former merely designates a particular part or parts of the earth's surface--the imperially extensive real estate holdings of the nation; the latter is a governmental subdivision which happened to be called a 'territory,' but which quite as well could have been called a 'colony' or a 'province.' 'The Territories,' it was said in First National Bank v. County of Yankton, 101 U.S. 129, 133, 25 L.Ed. 1046, 'are but political subdivisions of the outlying dominion of the United States.'

"[I] The power of Congress, in the imposition of taxes and providing for the collection thereof in the possessions of the United States, is not restricted by constitutional provision (section 8, article 1), which may limit its general power of taxation as to uniformity and apportionment when legislating for the mainland or United States proper, for it acts in the premises under the authority of clause 2, section 3, article 4, of the Constitution, which clothes Congress with power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States. Binns v. United States, 194 U.S. 486, 24 Sup.Ct. 816, 48 L.Ed. 1087; Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244, 21 Sup.Ct. 770, 45 L.Ed. 1088."

Federalist Papers, James Madison, Number 45, pp. 295 - 296

"The number of individuals employed under the Constitution of the United States will be much smaller than the number employed under the particular States. There will consequently be less of personal influence on the side of the former than of the latter. The members of the legislative, executive, and judiciary departments of thirteen and more States, the justices of peace, officers of militia, ministerial officers of justice, with all the county, corporation, and town officers, for three millions and more of people, intermixed and having particular acquaintance with every class and circle of people must exceed, beyond all proportion, both in number and influence, those of every description who will be employed in the administration of the federal system. [. . .] If the federal government is to have collectors of revenue. the State governments will have theirs also. And as those of the former will be principally on the seacoast, and not very numerous, whilst those of the latter will be spread over the face of the country, and will be very numerous, the advantage in this view also lies on the same side. It is true that the Confederacy is to possess, and may exercise, the power of collecting internal as well as external taxes throughout the States: but it is probable that this power will not be resorted to, except for supplemental purposes of revenue: that an option will then be given to the States to supply their quotas by previous collections of their own: and that the eventual collection, under the immediate authority of the Union, will generally be made by the officers, and according to the rules, appointed by the several States. [. . .] Should it happen, however, that separate collectors of internal revenue should be appointed under the federal government, the influence of the whole number would not bear a comparison with that of the multitude of State officers in the opposite scale. Within every district to which a federal collector would be allotted, there would not be less than thirty or forty, or even more, officers of different descriptions, and many of them Persons of character and weight whose influence would lie on the side of the State.”

The Public Salary Tax Act of 1939, 3 Stat. 574, April 12, 1939 allegedly allows “States” to tax the income of public offices of the national government. You can read the act below:

1. Public Salary Tax Act of 1939, Library of Congress

<http://scholarship.law.berkeley.edu/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=3713&context=californialawreview>

The severe problem with the act is that it does NOT expressly define the term “State” to include CONSTITUTIONAL states. It would be unconstitutional if it DID because of the Separation of Powers. The definition of the term “State” for the purposes of that act and most other legislation is found in 4 U.S.C. §110(d):

4 U.S. Code § 110. Same; definitions

(d) The term “State” includes any Territory or possession of the United States.

This is exactly the same problem that the Buck Act has. It is touted as being available for Constitutional states, but it in fact is NOT. If it is used by the CONSTITUTIONAL states, it violates the Separation of Powers Doctrine as described in:

Government Conspiracy to Destroy the Separation of Powers, Form #05.023

<https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm>

Instead of what was proposed and described in the above references on the Public Salary Tax Act of 1939, we propose that its real but UNSTATED and UNCONSTITUTIONAL purpose behind the act was the following:

1. To make EVERYONE who files a W-4 into such federal officer.

26 U.S. Code § 3402. Income tax collected at source

(p) VOLUNTARY WITHHOLDING AGREEMENTS

(I) CERTAIN FEDERAL PAYMENTS

as relates to this chapter, such payment shall be treated as if it were a payment of wages by an employer to an employee.

26 C.F.R. §31.3401\(c\)-1 Employee:

“...the term [employee] includes officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, a [federal] State, Territory, Puerto Rico or any political subdivision, thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing. The term ‘employee’ also includes an officer of a [FEDERAL but not STATE] corporation.”

Notice they HIDE it in the regulations rather than the statutes so you don’t receive notice that you are agreeing effectively to BECOME a federal “employee” by submitting such a form. They also don’t warn you on the W-4 form this is what you are doing either.

2. To deputize EVERYONE in constitutional states to become a public officer of the national government. See: Why Your Government is Either a Thief or You are a “Public Officer” for Income Tax Purposes, Form #05.008 <https://sedm.org/Forms/05-MemLaw/WhyThiefOrPubOfficer.pdf>
3. To INVADE the Constitutional states with “swarms of federal officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance”. Those “officers” are called “taxpayers”.

“He has erected a multitude of New Offices, and sent hither swarms of Officers to harrass our people, and eat out their substance.”

4. To violate Article 4, Section 4 of the Constitution, which FORBIDS the above commercial “invasion” of the states:

Article 4: States’ Relations

Section 4. Obligations of United States to States

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.

5. To do EXACTLY what one of the AUTHORS of the Constitution, James Madison, warned that they COULD NOT do!

“With respect to the words general welfare, I have always regarded them as qualified by the detail of powers connected with them. To take them in a literal and unlimited sense would be a metamorphosis of the Constitution into a character which there is a host of proofs was not contemplated by its creator.”

“If Congress can employ money indefinitely to the general welfare, and are the sole and supreme judges of the general welfare, they may take the care of religion into their own hands; they may appoint teachers in every State, county and parish and pay them out of their public treasury; they may take into their own hands the education of children, establishing in like manner schools throughout the Union; they may assume the provision of the poor; they may undertake the regulation of all roads other than post-roads; in short, every thing, from the highest object of state legislation down to the most minute object of police, would be thrown under the power of Congress.... Were the power of Congress to be established in the latitude contended for, it would subvert the very foundations, and transmute the very nature of the limited Government established by the people of America.”

“If Congress can do whatever in their discretion can be done by money, and will promote the general welfare, the government is no longer a limited one possessing enumerated powers, but an indefinite one subject to particular exceptions.”

[James Madison. House of Representatives, February 7, 1792, On the Cod Fishery Bill, granting Bounties; More quotes like this later in Form #05.016, Section 5.1]

6. To allow States of the Union to ILLEGALLY tax federal officers domiciled within and/or working within the Constitutional States and NOT within federal enclaves. Why is it illegal? Because:
 - 6.1. It is a crime in most states to simultaneously serve as a federal and state officer at the same time.
 - 6.2. Serving two masters creates a criminal financial conflict of interest on the part of said officers. 18 U.S.C. §208.
7. To break down the constitutional separation between the federal government and the state government.

8. To deceive PRIVATE employers within constitutional states into thinking that EVERYONE is a federal STATUTORY “employee” or officer. Making them believe that a STATUTORY “employee” includes PRIVATE workers instead of what they are defined as above, and then telling their workers that they MUST submit a W-4 to work for the company essentially leaves them with only two choices:
 - 8.1. To starve to death if they don’t want to submit a VOLUNTARY W-4.
 - 8.2. To commit perjury by misrepresenting their status as a federal STATUTORY “employee” under 5 U.S.C. §2105.
9. To make PRIVATE companies and employers into COMMUNIST INFORMANTS who in effect ILLEGALLY “elect” all their workers into a public office by filing FALSE information returns, such as the W-4, 1099, etc. This violates 18 U.S.C. §911. See:

10. To violate the U.S. Supreme Court prohibition against establishing taxable franchise offices within the constitutional states:

“Thus, Congress having power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes, may, without doubt, provide for granting coasting licenses, licenses to pilots, licenses to trade with the Indians, and any other licenses necessary or proper for the exercise of that great and extensive power; and the same observation is applicable to every other power of Congress, to the exercise of which the granting of licenses may be incident. All such licenses confer authority, and give rights to the licensee.

But very different considerations apply to the internal commerce or domestic trade of the States. Over this commerce and trade Congress has no power of regulation nor any direct control. This power belongs exclusively to the States. No interference by Congress with the business of citizens transacted within a State is warranted by the Constitution, except such as is strictly incidental to the exercise of powers clearly granted to the legislature. The power to authorize a business within a State is plainly repugnant to the exclusive power of the State over the same subject. It is true that the power of Congress to tax is a very extensive power. It is given in the Constitution, with only one exception and only two qualifications. Congress cannot tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment, and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity. Thus limited, and thus only, it reaches every subject, and may be exercised at discretion. But, it reaches only existing subjects. Congress cannot authorize a trade or business within a State in order to tax it.”

11. To create a criminal financial conflict of interest on the part of federal judges not domiciled or present on federal territory by making them afraid of “selective enforcement” by the IRS. They in effect are compelled at gunpoint to become “taxpayer” recruiters or face IRS retribution on their income tax liability. See 18 U.S.C. §208, 28 U.S.C. §144, and 28 U.S.C. §144.
12. To remove ALL of the constitutional protections from people in the states who do the above, because you have no constitutional protections as a STATUTORY federal “employee”:

*“The restrictions that the Constitution places upon the government in its capacity as lawmaker, i.e., as the regulator of private conduct, are not the same as the restrictions that it places upon the government in its capacity as employer. We have recognized this in many contexts, with respect to many different constitutional guarantees. Private citizens perhaps cannot be prevented from wearing long hair, but policemen can. Kelley v. Johnson, 425 U.S. 238, 247 (1976). Private citizens cannot have their property searched without probable cause, but in many circumstances government employees can. O’Connor v. Ortega, 480 U.S. 709, 723 (1987) (plurality opinion); id., at 732 (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment). Private citizens cannot be punished for refusing to provide the government information that may incriminate them, but government employees can be dismissed when the incriminating information that they refuse to provide relates to the performance of their job. Gardner v. Broderick, [497 U.S. 62, 95] 392 U.S. 273, 277-278 (1968). With regard to freedom of speech in particular: Private citizens cannot be punished for speech of merely private concern, but government employees can be fired for that reason. Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138, 147 (1983). Private citizens cannot be punished for partisan political activity, but federal and state employees can be dismissed and otherwise punished for that reason. Public Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U.S. 75, 101 (1947); Civil Service Comm’n v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548, 556 (1973); Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 616-617 (1973).”*

[Rutan v. Republican Party of Illinois, 497 U.S. 62 (1990)]

We know, however, that not only does the SINISTER plan above violate the separation of powers, but it also violates the mandate of 4 U.S.C. §72. To wit:

TITLE 4 > CHAPTER 3 > § 72
§ 72. Public offices; at seat of Government

All offices attached to the seat of government shall be exercised in the District of Columbia, and not elsewhere, except as otherwise expressly provided by law.

Sovereignty and Freedom Points and Authorities

Why does this sinister plan violate the above? Because they never EXPRESSLY identify Constitutional states within the definition of “State” in 4 U.S.C. §110(d) and per the Rules of Statutory Construction and Interpretation⁵⁶, they CAN’T presume that constitutional states are included.

“When a statute includes an explicit definition, we must follow that definition, even if it varies from that term’s ordinary meaning.” Meese v. Keene, 481 U.S. 465, 484-485 (1987) (“It is axiomatic that the statutory definition of the term excludes unstated meanings of that term”); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 392-393, n. 10 (“As a rule, ‘a definition which declares what a term ‘means’... excludes any meaning that is not stated’”); Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Lenroot, 323 U.S. 490, 502 (1945); Fox v. Standard Oil Co. of N.J., 294 U.S. 87, 95-96 (1935) (Cardozo, J.); see also 2A N. Singer, Sutherland on Statutes and Statutory Construction, §47.07, p. 152, and n. 10 (5th ed. 1992) (collecting cases). That is to say, the statute, read “as a whole,” post at 998 [530 U.S. 943] (THOMAS, J., dissenting), leads the reader to a definition. That definition does not include the Attorney General’s restriction -- “the child up to the head.” Its words, “substantial portion,” indicate the contrary.” [Stenberg v. Carhart, 530 U.S. 914 (2000)]

“Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. A maxim of statutory interpretation meaning that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another.” Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d. 321, 325; Newblock v. Bowles, 170 Okl. 487, 40 P.2d. 1097, 1100. Mention of one thing implies exclusion of another. When certain persons or things are specified in a law, contract, or will, an intention to exclude all others from its operation may be inferred. Under this maxim, if statute specifies one exception to a general rule or assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, other exceptions or effects are excluded.” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 581]

They also don’t EXPRESSLY include constitutional states within the definition of “State” in the Buck Act, because they KNOW it is unconstitutional to do this and violates the Separation of Powers.

So the REAL agenda is to UNCONSTITUTIONALLY extend the federal income tax within the states and make everyone into an uncompensated federal office or statutory “EMPLOYEE” and to assimilate the states using contract law or consent into the federal government. That is a silent COUP if I ever saw one, and it is effected mainly by exploiting the legal ignorance of people they are supposed to be protecting.

At one time, they tried to document the TYRANNY of the above in the Internal Revenue Code and because it was found unconstitutional, they had to remove it. See:

1. 26 U.S.C. §6361-6365.
2. 26 C.F.R. §301.6361-1 through 301. 6361-5.

The way to avoid this sinister plot documented above is to NEVER file a form W-4, but instead to file the correct withholding paperwork. And then to ensure that NO information returns are filed against you, because they are usually FALSE. The procedures for doing this are found in:

Why the Federal Income Tax is a Privilege Tax Upon Government Property, Form #04.404, Section 8.4: State Income Tax: The Buck Act

The Buck Act, 4 U.S.C. §105-108, authorizes the enforcement of “State” income tax within federal enclaves. Within the act, “State” is defined as follows:

4 U.S. Code § 110. Same; definitions

(d) The term “State” includes any Territory or possession of the United States.

The federal enclaves subject to the act are therefore within Territories and possessions, and NOT within Constitutional states. The Rules of Statutory Construction and Interpretation forbid ADDING anything to the above definition of “State”.⁵⁷ Black’s Law Dictionary defines “possession” as follows:

POSSESSION. The detention and control, or the manual or ideal custody, of anything which may be the subject of property, for one's use and enjoyment, either as owner or as the proprietor of a qualified right in it, and either held personally or by another who exercises it in one's place and name. Act or state of possessing. That condition of facts under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure to the exclusion of all other persons. Starits v. Avery, 204 Iowa 401, 213 N.W. 769, 771; Schenk v. State, 106 Tex.Cr.R. 564, 293 S.W. 1101, 1102; State v. Compton, Mo.App., 297 S.W. 413, 414; Nevin v. Louisville Trust Co., 258 Ky. 187, 79 S.W.2d. 688, 689.

In the older books, "possession" Is sometimes used as the synonym of "seisin;" but, strictly speaking, they are entirely- different terms. "The difference between possession and seisin is: Lessee for years is possessed, and yet the lessor is still seised; and therefore the terms of law are that of chattels a man is possessed, whereas In feoffments, gifts in tail, and leases for life he is described as 'seised.' " Noy.Max. 64.

"Possession" Is used in some of the books In the sense of property. "A possession is an hereditament or chattel. Finch, Law, b. 2, c. 3.

Possession of liquor which Is made unlawful Is possession under some claim of right, control, or dominion, with knowledge of facts. Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 212 N.W. 664, 665. Taking a drink of Intoxicating liquor on invitation of owner thereof does not constitute criminal "possession." Colbaugh v. U. S.. C.C.A.Okla. 15 F.2d. 929, 931; State v. Williams. 117 Or. 238. 243 P. 563; Sizemore v. Commonwealth, 202 Ky. 273, 259 S.W. 337, 342; Brazeale v. State. 133 Miss. 171. 97 So. 525, 526; Harness v. State, 130 Miss. 673, 95 So.64; State v. McAllister, 187 N.C. 400, 121 S.E. 739, 740; People v. Leslie, 239 Mich. 334, 214 N.W. 128. [Black's Law Dictionary, Fourth Edition, p. 1325]

The provision authorizing states to institute sales and use and income taxes in federal areas is below:

4 U.S. Code § 106. Same; income tax

(a) No person shall be relieved from liability for any income tax levied by any State, or by any duly constituted taxing authority therein, having jurisdiction to levy such a tax, by reason of his residing within a Federal area or receiving income from transactions occurring or services performed in such area; and such State or taxing authority shall have full jurisdiction and power to levy and collect such tax in any Federal area within such State to the same extent and with the same effect as though such area was not a Federal area.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall be applicable only with respect to income or receipts received after December 31, 1940.

(July 30, 1947, ch. 389, 61 Stat. 644.)

The SEVERE problem with the Buck Act is the definition of “State” for the purposes of the above. The problem is that it does not include CONSTITUTIONAL states. That “State” is defined instead as “The term “State” includes any Territory or possession of the United States.” So what the act actually does is allow a Territory or possession and NOT a Constitutional state to institute its own income tax within federal areas WITHIN that Territory or possession. There are no remaining Territories, and only possessions remain. Those possessions include the following, extracted from Title 48:

1. Puerto Rico
2. Guam
3. Virgin Islands
4. American Samoa

This is rather curious, because the so-called “Buck Act” DOES NOT expressly authorize CONSTITUTIONAL states, but rather Territories and Possessions to tax federal areas. This calls into doubt the entire Jurisdiction over Federal Areas Within the States Report as a useful resource for whether CONSTITUTIONAL state income taxes can be enforced in federal areas.

Why does such a glaring problem exist with the report? The reason is the Separation of Powers Doctrine, which forbids overlap of federal and state jurisdiction:

<https://sedm.org/Forms/05-MemLaw/SeparationOfPowers.pdf>

All law is prima facie territorial. In order for the Separation of Powers to be preserved that is built into the constitution, there must be GEOGRAPHICAL separation of the two powers and they can never overlap legislatively. ONLY by acting as an AGENT of the national government through the District of Columbia can Constitutional states participate in taxation of federal areas. When they do so, they must IN EFFECT behave as federal corporations and federal territories. Madison talked about this in the Federalist Papers:

The number of individuals employed under the Constitution of the United States will be much smaller than the number employed under the particular States. There will consequently be less of personal influence on the side of the former than of the latter. The members of the legislative, executive, and judiciary departments of thirteen and more States, the justices of peace, officers of militia, ministerial officers of justice, with all the county, corporation, and town officers, for three millions and more of people, intermixed and having particular acquaintance with every class and circle of people must exceed, beyond all proportion, both in number and influence, those of every description who will be employed in the administration of the federal system. [. . .] If the federal government is to have collectors of revenue, the State governments will have theirs also. And as those of the former will be principally on the seacoast, and not very numerous, whilst those of the latter will be spread over the face of the country, and will be very numerous, the advantage in this view also lies on the same side. It is true that the Confederacy is to possess, and may exercise, the power of collecting internal as well as external taxes throughout the States: but it is probable that this power will not be resorted to, except for supplemental purposes of revenue: that an option will then be given to the States to supply their quotas by previous collections of their own: and that the eventual collection, under the immediate authority of the Union, will generally be made by the officers, and according to the rules, appointed by the several States. [. . .] Should it happen, however, that separate collectors of internal revenue should be appointed under the federal government, the influence of the whole number would not bear a comparison with that of the multitude of State officers in the opposite scale. Within every district to which a federal collector would be allotted, there would not be less than thirty or forty, or even more, officers of different descriptions, and many of them Persons of character and weight whose influence would lie on the side of the State.

This leads us to the subject of the next section, which are all the authorities PREVENTING overlap of federal exclusive jurisdiction and Constitutional state jurisdiction. It just ISN'T legally possible for those legislative jurisdictions to overlap. The only practical way for them to overlap is for Constitutional states to shed their sovereign character and behave as federal corporations and therefore federal “possessions” when they tax federal Territories or geographical possessions. Federal corporations are creations of and property of the national government.

TITLE 4 - FLAG AND SEAL, SEAT OF GOVERNMENT, AND THE STATES
CHAPTER 4 - THE STATES

Sec. 110. Same; definitions

(d) The term "State" includes any Territory or possession of the United States.

Downes v. Bidwell (1901)

"Loughborough v. Blake, 5 Wheat. 317, 5 L.Ed. 98, was an action of trespass or, as appears by the original record, replevin, brought in the circuit court for the District of Columbia to try the right of Congress to impose a direct tax for general purposes on that District. 3 Stat. at L. 216, chap. 60. It was insisted that Congress could act in a double capacity: in one as legislating [182 U.S. 244, 260] for the states; in the other as a local legislature for the District of Columbia. In the latter character, it was admitted that the power of levying direct taxes might be exercised, but for District purposes only, as a state legislature might tax for state purposes; but that it could not legislate for the District under art. 1, 8, giving to Congress the power 'to lay and collect taxes, imposts, and excises,' which 'shall be uniform throughout the United States,' inasmuch as the District was no part of the United States [described in the Constitution]. It was held that the grant of this power was a general one without limitation as to place, and consequently extended to all places over which the government extends; and that it extended to the District of Columbia as a constituent part of the United States. The fact that art. 1, 2, declares that 'representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several states . . . according to their respective numbers' furnished a standard by which taxes were apportioned, but not to exempt any part of the country from their operation. The words used do not mean that direct taxes shall be imposed on states only which are represented, or shall be apportioned to representatives; but that direct taxation, in its application to states, shall be apportioned to numbers.' That art. 1, 9, 4, declaring that direct taxes shall be laid in proportion to the census, was applicable to the District of Columbia, 'and will enable Congress to apportion on it its just and equal share of the burden, with the same accuracy as on the respective states. If the tax be laid in this proportion, it is within the very words of the restriction. It is a tax in proportion to the census or enumeration referred to.' It was further held that the words of the 9th section did not 'in terms require that the system of direct taxation, when resorted to, shall be extended to the territories, as the words of the 2d section require that it shall be extended to all the states. They therefore may, without violence, be understood to give a rule when the territories shall be taxed, without imposing the necessity of taxing them.'"

"There could be no doubt as to the correctness of this conclusion, so far, at least, as it applied to the District of Columbia. This District had been a part of the states of Maryland and [182 U.S. 244, 261] Virginia. It had been subject to the Constitution, and was a part of the United States[]. The Constitution had attached to it irrevocably. There are steps which can never be taken backward. The tie that bound the states of Maryland and Virginia to the Constitution could not be dissolved, without at least the consent of the Federal and state governments to a formal separation. The mere cession of the District of Columbia to the Federal government relinquished the authority of the states, but it did not take it out of the United States or from under the aegis of the Constitution. Neither party had ever consented to that construction of the cession. If, before the District was set off, Congress had passed an unconstitutional act affecting its inhabitants, it would have been void. If done after the District was created, it would have been equally void; in other words, Congress could not do indirectly, by carving out the District, what it could not do directly. The District still remained a part of the United States, protected by the Constitution. Indeed, it would have been a fanciful construction to hold that territory which had been once a part of the United States ceased to be such by being ceded directly to the Federal government."

"Indeed, the practical interpretation put by Congress upon the Constitution has been long continued and uniform to the effect [182 U.S. 244, 279] that the Constitution is applicable to territories acquired by purchase or conquest, only when and so far as Congress shall so direct. Notwithstanding its duty to 'guarantee to every state in this Union a republican form of government' (art. 4, 4), by which we understand, according to the definition of Webster, 'a government in which the supreme power resides in the whole body of the people, and is exercised by representatives elected by them,' Congress did not hesitate, in the original organization of the territories of Louisiana, Florida, the Northwest Territory, and its subdivisions of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin and still more recently in the case of Alaska, to establish a form of government bearing a much greater analogy to a British Crown colony than a republican state of America, and to vest the legislative power either in a governor and council, or a governor and judges, to be appointed by the President. It was not until they had attained a certain population that power was given them to organize a legislature by vote of the people. In all these cases, as well as in territories subsequently organized west of the Mississippi, Congress thought it necessary either to extend to Constitution and laws of the United States over them, or to declare that the inhabitants should be entitled to enjoy the right of trial by jury, of bail, and of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, as well as other privileges of the bill of rights."

Senate Report No. 1708

"The Federal Tax Lien bill of 1966 represents the first comprehensive revision and modernization of the provisions of the internal revenue laws concerned with the relationship of Federal tax liens to the interests of other creditors.

"Since the adoption of the Federal income tax in 1913, the nature of commercial financial transactions has changed appreciably. Business practices have been substantially revised and, as a result, many new types of secured transactions have been developed. In an attempt to take into account these changed commercial transactions, and to secure greater uniformity among the several States, a Uniform Commercial Code was promulgated somewhat over 10 years ago by the American Law Institute and the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. A revised version of this code is already law in over 40 States and could well be adopted by many of the remaining States in the near future. Under the Commercial Code, priority now is afforded new types of commercial secured creditors not previously protected.

"This bill is in part an attempt to conform the lien provisions of the internal revenue laws to the concepts developed in this Uniform Commercial Code. It represents an effort to adjust the provisions in the internal revenue laws relating to the collection of taxes of delinquent persons to the more recent developments in commercial practice (permitted and protected under State law) and to deal with a multitude of technical problems which have arisen over the past 50 years. The bill represents the culmination of a project initiated approximately 10 years ago by those concerned with the relationship of the tax lien provisions to the interests of other creditors. Since that time, the suggestions and ideas of various groups have been studied and analyzed carefully, both by the groups themselves and by the staffs of the Treasury Department and the congressional committees.

"Under present law, a lien for Federal taxes arises when a taxpayer's liability is assessed. The lien attaches to all of the property he then holds or subsequently acquires. The assessment is made when the unpaid tax liability is entered on the appropriate records of the Internal Revenue Service--which occurs, in the case of a taxpayer who voluntarily shows the tax liability on his return, shortly after the time the return is filed. Although the lien arises on the date of assessment, present law provides that purchasers and certain categories of secured creditors are given priority over the tax lien up to the time a notice of the tax lien is filed in the appropriate local office as designated by State law. Mortgagees, pledgees, purchasers, and judgment lien creditors are given this priority status. In addition, in the case of securities and motor vehicles, present law provides that even a filed Federal tax lien is not generally to be effective as against a purchaser or a mortgagee or pledgee of securities or a purchaser of motor vehicles."

"(a) Requirement.--Except as otherwise provided in this section, any person in possession of (or obligated with respect to) property or rights to property subject to levy upon which a levy has been made shall, upon demand of the Secretary, surrender such property or rights (or discharge such obligation) to the Secretary, except which part of the property or rights as is, at the time of such demand, subject to an attachment or execution under any judicial process."

"(b) Special rule for life insurance and endowment contracts.--[...]"

"(c) Special rule for banks.--Any bank (as defined in section 408(n)) shall surrender (subject to an attachment or execution under judicial process) any deposits (including interest thereon) in such bank only after 21 days after service of levy."

"(d) Enforcement of levy.--

"(1) Extent of personal liability.--Any person who fails or refuses to surrender any property or rights to property, subject to levy, upon demand by the Secretary, shall be liable in his own person and estate to the United States in a sum equal to the value of the property or rights not so surrendered, but not exceeding the amount of taxes for the collection of which such levy has been made, together with costs and interest on such sum at the underpayment rate established under section 6621 from the date of such levy (or, in the case of a levy described in section 6331(d)(3), from the date such person would otherwise have been obligated to pay over such amounts to the taxpayer). Any amount (other than costs) recovered under this paragraph shall be credited against the tax liability for the collection of which such levy was made.

"(2) Penalty for violation.--In addition to the personal liability imposed by paragraph (1), if any person required to surrender property or rights to property fails or refuses to surrender such property or rights to property without reasonable cause, such person shall be liable for a penalty equal to 50 percent of the amount recoverable under paragraph (1). No part of such penalty shall be credited against the tax liability for the collection of which such levy was made.

"(e) Effect of honoring levy.--Any person in possession of (or obligated with respect to) property or rights to property subject to levy upon which a levy has been made who, upon demand by the Secretary, surrenders such property or rights to property (or discharges such obligation) to the Secretary (or who pays a liability under subsection (d)(1)) shall be discharged from any obligation or liability to the delinquent taxpayer and any other person with respect to such property or rights to property arising from such surrender or payment."

"(b) Appraisal.--[...]

"(c) No other property exempt.--[...]

"(d) Exempt amount of wages, salary, or other income.--[...]

"(e) Levy allowed on principal residence in case of jeopardy or certain approval.--Property described in subsection (a)(13) shall not be exempt from levy if--

"(1) a district director or assistant district director of the Internal Revenue Service personally approves (in writing) the levy of such property, or

"(2) the Secretary finds that the collection of tax is in jeopardy."

"(f) Inflation adjustment.--[...]

26 U.S.C. §7805(a)

"(a) AUTHORIZATION.--Except where such authority is expressly given by this title to any person other than an officer or employee of the Treasury Department, the Secretary shall prescribe all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of this title, including all rules and regulations as may be necessary by reason of any alteration of law in relation to internal revenue."

"(a) Authority to levy.--(l) In general. If any person liable to pay any tax neglects or refuses to pay the tax within 10 days after notice and demand, the district director to whom the assessment is charged (or, upon his request, any other district director) may proceed to collect the tax by levy.

"(4) Certain types of compensation.--(i) Federal employees. Levy may be made upon the salary or wages of any officer or employee (including members of the Armed Forces), or elected or appointed official, of the United States, the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of either, by serving a notice of levy on the employer of the delinquent taxpayer. As used in this subdivision, the term "employer" means (a) the officer or employee of the United States, the District of Columbia, or of the agency or instrumentality of the United States or the District of Columbia, who has control of the payment of the wages, or (b) any other officer or employee designated by the head of the branch, department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States or of the District of Columbia as the party upon whom service of the notice of levy may be made. If the head of such branch, department, agency or instrumentality designates an officer or employee other than one who has control of the payment of the wages, as the party upon whom service of the notice of levy may be made, such head shall promptly notify the Commissioner of the name and address of each officer or employee so designated and the scope or extent of his authority as such designee.

"(ii) State and municipal employees. Salaries, wages, or other compensation of any officer, employee, or elected or appointed official of a State or Territory, or of any agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision thereof, are also subject to levy to enforce collection of any Federal tax."

26 C.F.R. §301.6331-2

"(a) Notice of intent to levy--(1) In general. Levy may be made upon the salary, wages, or other property of a taxpayer for any unpaid tax no less than 30 days after the district director, the service center director, or the compliance center director (director) has notified the taxpayer in writing of the intent to levy. The notice must be given in person, be left at the dwelling or usual place of business of the taxpayer, or be sent by registered or certified mail to the taxpayer's last known address. The notice of intent to levy is separate from, but may be given at the same time as, the notice and demand described in §301.6331-1.

"(2) Content of Notice. The notice of intent to levy is to contain a brief statement in nontechnical terms including the following information--

"(i) The Internal Revenue Code provisions and the procedures relating to levy"" and sale of property;

"(ii) The administrative appeals available with respect to the levy and sale of property and the procedures relating to such appeals;

"(iii) The alternatives available that could prevent levy on the property (including the use of an installment agreement under section 6159); and

"(iv) The Internal Revenue Code provisions and the procedures relating to redemption of property and release of liens on property."

Arthur v. Unkart (Apr. 15, 1878)

"Neither can it be doubted that unless protest is made within ten days, and unless an appeal is taken to the Secretary of the Treasury within thirty days after such decision, the decision of the Collector on these points is final and conclusive. The statute expressly declares that it shall be so. The decision of the Secretary upon such appeal is also declared by the statute to be final and conclusive, unless a suit be brought to recover any alleged excess of duties within ninety days after the payment of duties, if payment be made after such decision."

"When an appeal is taken from his decision, the decision of the Collector ceases to be conclusive; and the same is true of the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury."

""When the issue involves the charge of culpable omission, it is incumbent on the party making the charge to prove it, although he must prove a negative, for the other party shall be presumed to be innocent until proved to be guilty.""

"Mr. Greenleaf, Greenl. Evl. sec. 80, thus lays down the rule: "So where the negative allegation involved criminal neglect of duty, official or otherwise, or fraud, or the wrongful violation of actual lawful possession of property, the party making the allegation must prove it; for in these cases the presumption of law, which is always in favor of innocence and quiet possession, is in favor of the party charged;" and many instances are cited."

Turpin v. Lemon (Nov. 3, 1902)

"Exactly what due process of law requires in the assessment and collection of general taxes has never yet been decided by this court, although we have had frequent occasion to hold that, in proceedings for the condemnation of land under the laws of eminent domain, or for the imposition of special taxes for local improvements, notice to the owner at some stage of the proceedings, as well as an opportunity to defend, is essential. [Cites omitted.] But laws for the assessment and collection of general taxes stand upon a somewhat different footing, and are construed with the utmost liberality, sometimes even to the extent of holding that no notice whatever is necessary. Due process of law was well defined by Mr. Justice Field in Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U.S. 701, 28 L.Ed. 569, 4 Sup.Ct.Rep. 663, in the following words: "It is sufficient to observe here, that by 'due process' is meant one which, following the forms of law, is appropriate to the case, and just to the parties to be affected.

It must be pursued in the ordinary mode prescribed by the law; it must be adapted to the end to be attained; and wherever it is necessary for the protection of the parties, it must give them an opportunity to be heard respecting the justice of the judgment sought. The clause in question means, therefore, that there can be no proceeding against life, liberty, or property which may result in deprivation of either, without the observance of those general rules established in our system of jurisprudence for the security of private rights.""

"Under the Fourth Amendment, the legislature is bound to provide a method for the assessment and collection of taxes that shall not be inconsistent with natural justice; but it is not bound to provide that the particular steps of a procedure for the collection of such taxes shall be proved by written evidence; and it may properly impose upon the taxpayer the burden of showing that in a particular case the statutory method was not observed."

Wilson v. United States (May 15, 1911)

"Neither the 6th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, nor U.S. Rev.Stat. §829, U.S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 636, accords the right to the accused to be apprised of the names of the witnesses who appeared before the grand jury."

"The enforced production before a grand jury engaged in investigating the alleged criminal conduct of corporate officers, directors, and stockholders, of the letter-press copy books of the corporation for two specified months, in the possession of its president, under a subpoena duces tecum directed to the corporation, does not violate the provisions of U.S. Const., 4th Amend., forbidding unreasonable searches and seizures."

"The officer of a corporation having in his possession the books of the corporation, described in a subpoena duces tecum directed to the corporation, must produce the books or be held in contempt."

"A corporation cannot resist, upon the ground of the constitutional protection against self-crimination, the compulsory production of its books and papers before the grand jury under a subpoena duces tecum."

"The privilege against self-crimination afforded by the U.S. Const., 5th Amend., does not protect the officer of a corporation in resisting the compulsory production before the grand jury under a subpoena duces tecum directed to the corporation, of the letter-press copy books of such corporation in his possession, because the contents thereof may tend to incriminate him, even though the inquiry before the grand jury was not directed to the corporation itself."

United States v. Sullivan (May 16, 1927)

"We may take it that the defendant had sufficient gross income to require a return under the statute unless he was exonerated by the fact that the whole or a large part of it was derived from business in violation of the National Prohibition Act (Comp. St. §10138 et seq.). The Circuit Court of Appeals held that gains from illicit traffic in liquor were subject to the income tax, but that the Fifth Amendment' to the Constitution protected the defendant from the requirement of a return."

"If the form of return provided called for answers that the defendant was privileged from making he could have raised the objection in the return, but could not on that account refuse to make any return at all. We are not called on to decide what, if anything, he might have withheld. Most of the items warranted no complaint. It would be an extreme if not an extravagant application of the Fifth Amendment to say that it authorized a man to refuse to state the amount of his income because it had been made in crime. But if the defendant desired to test that or any other point he should have tested it in the return so that it could be passed upon. He could not draw conjurer's circle around the whole matter by his own declaration that to write any word upon the government blank would bring him into danger of the law."

Jenkins v. Smith (Dec. 1, 1937)

"Taxes may be collected in certain cases, by suit, without assessment. In such cases, the requirement of notice and demand is, of course, inapplicable, for the provision as to notice and demand relates only to assessed liabilities." But in such cases the burden is on the government to establish by proof of facts that the taxes sued for are liabilities of the persons sued. Little Miami & Columbus & Xenia R. Co. v. United States (1883) 108 U.S. 277, 2 S.Ct. 627, 27 L.Ed. 724. Where assessments are made, or required to be made, there are two methods of compelling payment, one by suit, a judicial proceeding; the other, by distraint, an executive proceeding. In either case, compliance with statutory conditions precedent, including initiation of proceedings within the time specified, is necessary. Bowers v. New York & Albany Lighterage Co. (1927) 273 U.S. 346, 47 S.Ct. 389, 71 L.Ed. 676.

"In all cases of income tax deficiencies, assessment by the Commissioner and service of notice and demand by the collector are specially required. Section 272(b) and (c), Revenue Act of 1932 (26 U.S.C.A. §272(b, c) and note. The service of notice of the assessment and demand for payment complete the initiation of collection proceedings, by official communication to the taxpayer. Due notice and demand are prerequisite to further proceedings to collect, either by distraint or by suit, although the time within which either suit or distraint may be begun runs six years from the date of assessment. It is not reasonable to believe that Congress intended that the required notice of the assessment might be given to the taxpayer six years after the assessment. It was intended, rather, that the notice should be given in due course, within the time already fixed by statute; that is, within ten days after receipt of the assessment list by the collector."

"The conclusion is unavoidable that service of notice and demand by collector of Internal Revenue within ten days after receipt by him of assessment list is a necessary condition to validity of further proceedings to collect."

[Jenkins v. Smith, 21 F.Supp. 433 (1937)]

United States v. Brechtel (May 29, 1937)

"A notice of the levy of a federal tax on money due a taxpayer from a county and notice and demand for surrender of such money to the collector of internal revenue were not binding on the county when addressed only to the chairman of the board of supervisors and not to the county."

"Under Iowa statutes, the county treasurer is the only person who has the possession and control of the money of the county."

"In an action to hold a county and its board of supervisors liable for the amount of a federal tax because of their failure to surrender to the collector of internal revenue on demand money due from the county to a taxpayer, an allegation in the petition that the moneys were for services rendered by the taxpayer at the special instance and request of defendants was not sufficient to show that the moneys were subject to distraint."

"When the allegations of the petition are thus read, it is clear that the "final notice and demand" and the "notice of levy" of December 9, 1935, were not binding on Woodbury county because not addressed to it."

"The papers left with Tabke were not binding upon the supervisors other than Tabke because they were neither addressed to them nor served upon them."

"It is true that in paragraphs VIII and IX of the petition there is an allegation that certain warrants for distraint were served, but it is not alleged that they were served upon any particular defendant."

"Finally, we think that the money in the hands, of the treasurer of Woodbury county owing to H. M. Havner, was not shown by the petition to be "subject to distraint." See 49 C.J. p. 151, §167, and cases cited.

"The petition alleges that such moneys so owing were for services rendered by said Havner at the special instance and request of said defendants. We think these allegations were not sufficient to show that the moneys were "subject to distraint."

"(f) Compensation paid by foreign government or wholly-owned instrumentality thereof. Remuneration paid for services performed as an employee of a foreign government, or the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, or a wholly-owned instrumentality of any such government is excepted. The exception includes not only remuneration paid for services performed by ambassadors, ministers, and other diplomatic officers and employees but also remuneration paid for services performed as a consular or other officer or employee of a foreign government, or as nondiplomatic representative of such a government.

"The citizenship or residence of the employee and the place where the services are performed are immaterial for purposes of the exception."

"(h) Remuneration for services performed outside the United States The remuneration paid by an employer for services performed outside the United States does not constitute wages and hence is not subject to withholding unless the major part of the services performed by the employee for such employer during the calendar year is to be performed within the United States. The term "United States" includes the several States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia."

"Sec. 2. COLLECTION OF TAX AT SOURCE ON WAGES." (Current Tax Payment Act of 1943.)

(a) In general. Chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to employment taxes) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subchapter:

SUBCHAPTER D-COLLECTION OF INCOME TAX AT SOURCE OF WAGES

Sec. 1621. Definitions. As used in this subchapter--* * * * *

"(c) Employee." The term "employee" includes an officer, employee, or elected official of the United States, a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing. The term "employee" also includes an officer of a corporation.

"§404.104 Employee. The term "employee" includes every individual performing services if the relationship between him and the person for whom he performs such services is the legal relationship of employer and employee. The term specifically includes officers and employees whether elected or appointed, of the United States, a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing."

Givan v. Cripe (Feb. 9, 1951)

"Nothing alleged to have been done amounts to a levy, which requires that the property be brought into legal custody through seizure, actual or constructive, levy being 'an absolute appropriation in law of the property levied upon.' * * * Levy is not effected by mere notice. * * * No warrants of distraint were issued here." We think the same is true in our case. So far as the petition shows, there was no seizure, but only a threat of seizure--the petition alleges that the Collector threatens to issue a warrant of distraint. As we interpret the facts, the notice of levy operated to freeze the assets of the taxpayer in the hands of the Bank, and no more."

C.I.R. v. Chelsea Products (June 24, 1952)

"Under provision of Internal Revenue Code authorizing Commissioner in case of organizations controlled by the same interests, to allocate gross income and deductions if necessary to prevent evasion of taxes or to reflect income of any such organizations, Commissioner might not disregard corporate entities of sales corporations owned by same interest which owned manufacturing corporation, and might not lump together all net incomes and attribute aggregate to manufacturing corporation for purpose of income and excess profit taxes."

In re Holdsworth (July 27, 1953)

"These provisions of the Code are unambiguous and must be literally construed. When these provisions are thus construed it is clear that the conditions precedent to the creation of the statutory lien are: first, the receipt by the Collector of Internal Revenue of an assessment list certified by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in accordance with Sections 61, 3640 and 3641 of the Internal Revenue Code, Title 26 U.S.C.A.; and second, a demand for payment by the Collector of Internal Revenue, and the neglect or refusal of taxpayer to pay. [Cites omitted.] The lien arises only upon the fulfillment of these conditions."

An actual or constructive seizure is essential to a valid levy and distraint; where, as here, the subject matter is an account receivable or chose in action, the seizure may be effected by a levy and the service of a warrant of distraint upon the debtor."

Brast, 4 Cir., 55 F.2d. 60; Davidovitz v. United States, Ct.Cl., 58 F.2d. 1063; United States v. Bank of Commerce, etc., D.C., 32 F.Supp. 942. The waiver signed by the taxpayer on August 2, 1945, did not bring the deficiency into existence. It merely waived the ninety day notice and other procedural requirements of 26 U.S.C.A. 871(a) (1)."

"Until the Commissioner certified the assessment list on August 17, 1945, there was no deficiency assessment, and no liability on the part of the taxpayer, and consequently nothing to pay."

Freeman v. Mayer (May 28, 1957)

"A "levy" requires that property be brought into legal custody through seizure, actual or constructive, levy being an absolute appropriation in law of property levied on, and mere notice of intent to levy is insufficient. United States v. O'Dell, 6 Cir., 1947, 160 F.2d. 304, 307. Accord, In re Holdsworth, D.C.N.J.1953, 113 F.Supp. 878, 888; United States v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., D.C.Conn.1942, 146 F.Supp. 30, 37, in which Judge Hincks observed that he could "find no statute which says that a mere notice shall constitute a levy." There are cases which hold that a warrant for distraint is necessary to constitute a levy. Givan v. Cripe, 7 Cir., 1951, 187 F.2d. 225; United States v. O'Dell, supra. The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit stated in its opinion, 221 F.2d. at page 642, "These sections [26 U.S.C. §§3690-3697] require that a levy by a deputy collector be accompanied by warrants of distraint." In re Brokol Manufacturing Co., supra."

"I am constrained to conclude that a levy upon both tangible and intangible property under §3692 requires the execution of warrant for distraint and then effective only to amounts affixed thereon. As noted above, the Court of Appeals for this Circuit declared when this matter was before it that §§3690-3697 "require that a levy by a deputy collector be accompanied by warrants of distraint."

"The distress authorized by §3690 is different from anything known to the common law, both because it authorizes sale of the property seized, and because it extends to other personality than chattels. By its very nature it requires that demands of procedural due process of law be rigorously honored." [Bold added.]

[Freeman v. Mayer, 152 F.Supp. 383 (1957)]

Sims v. United States (Mar. 23, 1959)

"Questions of whether a federal levy on accrued salaries of Employees of a state for income tax deficiencies was authorized and whether State Auditor was personally liable for refusing to surrender accrued salaries to federal government justified granting of certiorari."

"Nothing in the constitution requires that salaries of state employees be treated any differently for federal tax purposes than the salaries of others."

"Generally, accrued salaries are property and rights to property subject to levy for income tax deficiencies."

"Under statute providing that any person in possession of property or rights of property subject to levy upon which a levy has been made shall surrender such property rights and upon failure to surrender shall be subject in his own person and estate, a state is a "person" and a levy on accrued salaries of employees of a state is permissible."

"Whether the term "person" when used in a federal statute includes a state cannot be abstractly declared, but depends upon its legislative environment."

"In interpreting federal revenue measures expressed in terms of general application, Supreme Court has ordinarily found them operative in the case of state activities even though states are not expressly indicated as subjects of tax."

"Under provision of Internal Revenue Code authorizing collection of delinquent taxes by levy upon all property and rights of property belonging to delinquent taxpayer and providing that such levy may be made upon accrued salary or wages of any officer, employee, or elected official of United States, District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of United States or District of Columbia, a levy may be made upon accrued salary or wages of state employee although state employees are not specifically mentioned in such statute."

"Statute authorizing collection of delinquency taxes by levy upon all property and rights of property of a delinquent taxpayer including a levy upon accrued salary or wages of any officer, employee, or elected official of the United States was enacted to subject salaries of federal employees to same collection procedures as are available against all other taxpayers, including employees of a state."

"Where conclusion of judges who are constantly required to pass upon laws of a state appear to be founded on reason and authority, such conclusions will be accepted by the Supreme Court."

"Nor is there merit in petitioner's contention that Congress, by specifically providing in §6331 for levy upon the accrued salaries of federal employees, but not mentioning state employees, evinced an intention to exclude the latter from levy. The explanation of that action by Congress appears quite clearly to be that this Court had held in Smith v. Jackson, 246 U.S. 388, 38 S.Ct. 353, 62 L.Ed. 788, that a federal disbursing officer might not, in the absence of express congressional authorization, set off an indebtedness of a federal employee to the Government against the employee's salary, and, pursuant to that opinion, the Comptroller General ruled that an "administrative official served with [notices of levy] would be without authority to withhold any portion of the current salary of such employee in satisfaction of the notices of levy and distraint." 26 Comp.Gen. 907, 912 (1947). It is evident that §6331 was enacted to overcome that difficulty and to subject the salaries of federal employees to the same collection procedures as are available against all other taxpayers," including employees of a State.

"Accordingly we hold that §§6331 and 6332 authorize levy upon the accrued salaries of state employees for the collection of any federal tax." [Brackets original.]

[Sims v. United States, 359 U.S. 108 (1959)]

United States v. Lehigh (Dec. 28, 1961)

"It is settled that where the notice is sent by registered or certified mail to the taxpayer's last known address it is not necessary that the notice actually be received by the taxpayer. Nor is it necessary that the notice be sent to what is actually the taxpayer's "correct address." But a letter which is simply properly addressed has no legal efficacy as a notice. Merten's op. cit. §49.

In many instances the "last known address" of the taxpayer is the address shown on the return so that a mailing of a deficiency notice to that address will be sufficient. However, if, after the return is filed, the Government learns that the taxpayer has moved and has acquired a new address, the notice must be sent to that address."

"When a notice of deficiency is to be given, the Commissioner is required to exercise ordinary care to ascertain the correct address of a taxpayer and to mail the notice to that address. Arlington Corporation v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 5 Cir., 183 F.2d. 448, and other cases there cited."

"Where the notice is sent by ordinary mail, as contrasted to registered or certified mail, and is not actually received by the taxpayer, it is plain that the notice is insufficient even though it may have been directed to the correct last known address of the taxpayer."

"Counsel for the Government say that if defendant prevails in this action he will avoid a tax liability justly due by means of a "technical defense." That statement is both true and immaterial. Any procedural defense is in a sense "technical." The procedures set forth in the Internal Revenue Code were prescribed for the protection of both Government and taxpayer. Neglect to comply with those procedures may entail consequences which the neglecting party must be prepared to face, whether such party be the taxpayer or the Government."

[United States v. Lehigh, 201 F.Supp. 224 (1961)]

Reisman v. Caplin (Jan. 20, 1964)

"If the Secretary or his delegate wishes to enforce the summons, he must proceed under §7602(b), which grants the District Courts of the United States jurisdiction "by appropriate process to compel such attendance, testimony, or production of books, papers, or other data."

"Any enforce action under this section would be an adversary proceeding affording a judicial determination of the challenges to the summons and giving complete protection to the witness. In such a proceeding only a refusal to comply with an order of the district judge subjects the witness to contempt proceedings."

"It is sufficient to say that noncompliance is not subject to prosecution thereunder when the summons is attacked in good faith."

"Furthermore, we hold that in any of these procedures before either the district judge or United States Commissioner, the witness may challenge the summons on any appropriate ground. This would include, as the circuits have held, the defenses that the material is sought for the improper purpose of obtaining evidence for use in a criminal prosecution, Boren v. Tucker, 239 F.2d. 767, 772-773, as well as that it is protected by the attorney-client privilege, Sale v. United States, 228 F.2d. 682."

Brafman v. United States (Oct. 23, 1967)

"Signature is not necessary for validity of deficiency notice."

"Where assessment certificate was not signed by proper official, as prescribed by applicable treasury regulation, within statutory period after filing of estate tax return, assessment of deficiency against estate was invalid and suit against [sic] transferee for collection of unpaid estate taxes was barred by statute of limitations."

"Treasury regulations are binding on government as well as on taxpayer."

"Since the certificate lacks the requisite signature, it cannot constitute a valid assessment."

"We are not moved by the Government's argument that the assessment was valid and effective on July 23rd because it is certified for authenticity under the seal of the United States Treasury. There is no question as to the authenticity of the document or its admissibility into evidence. But authenticity of the certificate cannot be equated with validity of the assessment on the alleged date: a seal establishes the former, a signature of the assessment officer--as required by the Treasury Regulations--establishes the latter."

"We find section 301.6203-1 of the Treasury Regulations reasonably adapted to carry out the intent of Congress as reflected in §6203 of the Code. We therefore adhere to our pronouncement in United States v. Fisher, 5 Cir. 1965, 353 F.2d. 396, 398-399, that:

"In the absence of any better test, we give effect to the generally recognized rule that Regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, pursuant to statutory authority, and when necessary to make a statute effective, although not a statute, may have the force of law. Fawcus Machine Co. v. United States, 282 U.S. 375, 51 S.Ct. 144, 75 L.Ed. 397; Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. South Texas Lumber Co.," 333 U.S. 496, 501, 68 S.Ct. 695, 92 L.Ed. 831.

"The Treasury Regulations are binding on the Government as well as the taxpayer: "Tax officials and taxpayers alike are under the law, not above it." Pacific National Bank of Seattle v. Commissioner, 9 Cir. 1937, 91 F.2d. 103, 105. Even the instructions on the reverse side of the assessment certificate, Form 23C, specify that the original form "is to be transmitted to the District Director for signature, after which it will be returned to the Accounting Branch for permanent filing. * * *

"Case after case has quoted Treasury Regulation §301.6203-1 and cited it approvingly, and the treatises on taxation take its literal application for granted."

"It appears to us that the requirement of the applicable Treasury Regulation--that an assessment officer sign the assessment certificate--is consistent with the literally mechanical procedures for recording of liability. The recordation is to be accomplished through "machine operations", but the actual and final assessment step, that step which establishes a prima facie case of taxpayer liability, can be taken only with the approval of a responsible officer of the Internal Revenue Service. [* * *] What is important in any case is that assessment is not automatic upon recordation; it requires the action of an assessment officer. That action, as defined explicitly in the Treasury Regulations, is the signing of the certificate." "As the district court said in United States v. Lehigh, W.D.Ark.1961, 201 F.Supp. 224, 234, this is both true and immaterial:

"Any procedural defense is in a sense "technical." The procedures set forth in the Internal Revenue Code were prescribed for the protection of both Government and taxpayer. Neglect to comply with those procedures may entail consequences which the neglecting party must be prepared to face, whether such party be the taxpayer or the Government.

"Certainly the courts have not hesitated to enforce strictly the Code requirement that a taxpayer's returns must be signed to be effective. Thus, unsigned returns, even with remittances, have been viewed as nullities from the standpoint of imposition of penalties and of commencement of the running of the statute of limitations. It has availed the taxpayer little that his failure to sign was inadvertent.

"Finally, where state taxation is involved compliance with a statutory provision requiring an assessment list to be signed by the assessors is usually considered essential to the validity of further proceedings. 84 C.J.S. Taxation §473 (1954).

"Since the assessment certificate in this case was not signed by the proper official, as prescribed by the applicable Treasury Regulation, within the statutory period after the filing of the estate tax return, this suit for collection of any deficiency is barred by the statute of limitations."

United States v. Dickerson (July 28, 1969)

"Privilege against self-incrimination is imperiled when one deprived of his freedom of action in any significant way is subjected to interrogation without being apprised of his right to remain silent, the consequences of a decision to forego that right, and the right to presence of an attorney, retained or appointed, to assist in making such decision."

"One confronted with governmental authority in an adversary situation should be accorded the opportunity to make an intelligent decision as to the assertion or relinquishment of those constitutional 'rights designed to protect him under precisely such circumstances."

"Incriminating statements elicited from a taxpayer under criminal investigation by Internal Revenue agents in reliance on taxpayer's misapprehension as to danger of inquiry, his obligation to respond, and possible consequences of doing so must be regarded as equally violative of constitutional protections as a custodial confession extracted without proper warnings."

"Without regard to taxpayer's subjective state of mind, Miranda' warnings must be given to taxpayer under criminal investigation by either the revenue agent or the special agent at the inception of the first contact with taxpayer after case has been transferred to the Intelligence Division of Internal Revenue Service."

"Documentary and oral information obtained from taxpayer by an Internal Revenue agent and a special agent for Intelligence Division of Internal Revenue Service, without advising taxpayer that investigation had become criminal and without advising taxpayer of his Miranda' rights, was subject to suppression."

"Only the rare taxpayer would be likely to know that he could refuse to produce his records to IRS agents. Nor would he be likely to make any distinction between revenue agents and special agents without some explanation as to the different functions of these two offices. As noted in Lipton, "Constitutional Rights in Criminal Tax Investigations," 45 F.R.D. 323, 336 (1968), the pressures on the uninformed taxpayer to cooperate with the agents are considerable:

"First, there is always the fear of incurring a civil tax liability that hopefully might be avoided by cooperation. Also, a taxpayer may conclude that lack of cooperation will result in unwanted publicity about a tax liability. The average citizen, moreover, believes that the government prosecutes only the recalcitrant, uncooperative individual who is unwilling to pay what he owes. Who would believe the ironic truth that the cooperative taxpayer fares much worse than the individual who relies upon his constitutional rights!" (Emphasis supplied.)"

Garner v. United States (Mar. 23, 1976)

"Had Garner invoked the privilege against compulsory self-incrimination on his tax returns in lieu of supplying the information used against him, the Internal Revenue Service could have proceeded in either or both of two ways. First, the Service could have sought to have Garner criminally prosecuted under §7203.... Second, the Service could have sought to complete Garner's returns administratively "from [its] own knowledge and from such information as [it could] obtain through testimony or otherwise.""

"The court has held that an individual under compulsion to make disclosures as a witness who revealed information instead of claiming the privilege lost the benefit of the privilege."

"The information revealed in the preparation and filing of an income tax return is, for purposes of Fifth Amendment analysis, the testimony of a "witness," as that term is used herein."

"Since submitting a claim of privilege in lieu of the returns also would incriminate, the Court held that the privilege could be exercised by simply failing to file."

"A §7203 conviction cannot be based on a valid exercise of the privilege. This is implicit in the dictum of United States v. Sullivan, 274 U.S. 259, 71 L.Ed. 1037, 47 S.Ct.607, 51 A.L.R. 1020 (1927), that the privilege may be claimed on a return. Central Illinois Public Service Co. v. United States (Feb. 28, 1978)

"Under internal revenue statutes, required withholding is rightly much narrower than subjectability to income taxation. 26 U.S.C.A. (I.R.C.1954) §§1, 61(a), (a)(1), 63(a)? 119, 162(a), (a)(2), 3401-3401(a), 3402, 3402(a), 6532(a)(1)."

"Employer is in secondary position as to liability for tax of employee, and it is matter of obvious concern that, absent further specific congressional action, employer's obligation to withhold be precise and not speculative. 26 U.S.C.A. (I.R.C.1954) §§3401-3403, 3401(a), 3402(a)."

"The withholding tax, in some contrast, is confined to wages, §3402(a), and §3401(a)" defines as "wages," "all remuneration (other than fees paid to a public official) for services performed by an employee for his employer, including the cash value of all remuneration paid in any medium other than cash." The two concepts--income and wages--obviously are not necessarily the same. Wages usually are income, but many items qualify as income and yet clearly are not wages. Interest, rent, and dividends are ready examples. And the very definition of "wages" in §3401(a) itself goes on specifically to exclude certain types of remuneration for an employee's services to his employer (e.g., combat pay, agricultural labor, certain domestic service)."

"The present withholding system has a later origin in the Victory Tax imposed by the Revenue Act of 1942, §172.... The Victory Tax was replaced by the Current Tax Payment Act of 1943, 57 stat. 126, and was repealed by the Individual Income Tax Act of 1944, §6(a), 58 Stat. 234."

"The committee reports of the time stated consistently that "wages" meant remuneration "if paid for services performed by an employee for his employer" (emphasis supplied). H.R.Rep. No.2333, 77th Cong., 2d Sess., 126 (1942)...." [Cites omitted.]

"Considerations that support subjectability to the income tax are not necessarily the same as the considerations that support withholding. To require the employee to carry the risk of his own tax liability' is not the same as to require the employer to carry the risk of the tax liability of its employee. Required withholding, therefore, is rightly much narrower than subjectability to income taxation.

"As we have noted above, withholding, under §3402, is required only upon wages, and §3402(a) defines wages as "all remuneration . . . for services performed by an employee for his employer." When the withholding system was effectuated in 1942, the obligation was confined to wages, and the like, "in the interest of simplicity and ease of administration. 308"

"Decided cases have made the distinction between wages and income and have refused to equate the two in withholding or similar controversies. Peoples Life Ins. Co. v. United States, 373 F.2d. 924, 932, 179 Ct.Cl. 318, 332, (1967); Humble Pipe Line Co. v. United States, 442 F.2d. 1353, 1356, 194 Ct.Cl. 944, 950 (1971); Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. United States, 442 F.2d. 1362, 194 Ct.Cl. 920 (1971); Stubbs, Overbeck & Associates v. United States, 445 F.2d. 1142 (C.A.5 1971); Royster Co. v. United States, 479 F.2d, at 390; Acacia Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. United States, 272 F.Supp. 188 (D.C.Md. 1967). The Government would distinguish these cases on the ground that some of them involved overnight travel, the expenses of which would be deductible, and that others were concerned with particularized allowances. We perceive the distinctions but are not persuaded that they blunt the basic difference between the wage and the income concepts the respective courts have emphasized.

An expansive and sweeping definition of wages, such as was indulged in by the Court of Appeals, 540 F.2d, at 302, and is urged by the Government here, is not consistent with the existing withholding system. As noted above, Congress chose simplicity, ease of administration, and confinement to wages as the standard in 1942. This was a standard that was intentionally narrow and precise. It has not been changed by Congress since 1942, although, of course, as is often the case, administrative and other pressures seek to soften and stretch the definition. Because the employer is in a secondary position as to liability for any tax of the employee, it is a matter of obvious concern that, absent further specific congressional action, the employer's obligation to withhold be precise and not speculative." [Cites omitted.]

"Those who administer the Internal Revenue Code unquestionably have broad authority to make tax rulings and regulations retroactive. That authority is not unfettered, however, and conditions are present here that would make retroactive application of the withholding tax to petitioner's lunch payments an abuse of discretion."

"The legislative history of the Internal Revenue Code does not reveal any evidence of congressional intent to make employers guarantors of the tax liabilities of their employees, which would in all likelihood be the result if withholding taxes can be assessed retroactively. Far from it. When Congress has changed the withholding provisions to enlarge the scope of the withholding base or to increase the tax rate, its uniform practice has been to give employers a grace period in which to bring their withholding practices in line with the new law. In the one instance where this has not been the case, Congress has made clear that its retroactive application of withholding tax changes was inadvertent and it has moved promptly to correct its error:..." United States v. LaSalle Nat'l Bank (June 19, 1978)

"Section of Internal Revenue Code permitting use of summons for purpose of ascertaining correctness of any return, determining liability of any person for any internal revenue tax, or collecting any such liability, necessarily permits use of summons for examination of suspected tax fraud and for calculation of 50% civil penalty."

"Congress has not categorized tax fraud investigations into civil and criminal components, but rather intended to design system with interrelated criminal and civil elements, and any limitation on good-faith use of internal revenue summons must reflect that statutory premise."

"Prior to recommendation for prosecution to Department of Justice, Internal Revenue Service must use its summons authority in good faith; dispositive question in each case is whether Service is pursuing authorized purposes in good faith or whether it has abandoned, in institutional sense, pursuit of civil tax determination or collection."

"That single special agent intends only to gather evidence for criminal investigation is not dispositive of question of good faith of IRS as institution in issuing summons; those resisting enforcement of summons have heavy burden of disproving actual existence of valid civil tax determination or collection purpose by IRS."

"Internal Revenue Service does not enjoy inherent authority to summon production of private papers of citizens, but may only exercise that authority granted by Congress."

"Congress intended Internal Revenue Service summons authority to be used to aid determination and collection of taxes, which purposes do not include goal of filing criminal charges against citizens; consequently, summons authority does not exist to aid criminal investigations solely."

IRC §6212(a) & (b) specifies that a notice of deficiency be sent to the taxpayer by certified or registered mail at his last known address, and it is clear that the statute requires "a proper giving of notice before a deficiency is assessed". United States v. $8,850.00 (May 23, 1983)

"General rule is that absent an extraordinary situation a party cannot invoke the power of the state to seize a person's property without a prior judicial determination that seizure is justified, but such an extraordinary situation exists when the government seizes items subject to forfeiture."

"Unlike the situation where due process requires a prior hearing, there is no obvious bright line dictating when a post-seizure hearing must occur. Because our prior cases in this area have wrestled with whether due process requires a pre-seizure hearing, we have not previously determined when a postseizure delay may become so prolonged that the dispossessed property owner has been deprived of a meaningful hearing at a meaningful time."

"In applying the Barker balancing test to this situation, the overarching factor is the length of the delay. As we said in Barker, the length of the delay "is to some extent a triggering mechanism." Ibid. Little can be said on when a delay becomes presumptively improper, for the determination necessarily depends on the facts of the particular case. Our inquiry is the constitutional one of due process; we are not establishing a statute of limitations. Obviously, short delays--of perhaps a month or so--need less justification than longer delays. We regard the delay here--some 18 months--as quite significant. Being deprived of this substantial sum of money for a year and a half is undoubtedly a significant burden."

"Justice STEVENS, dissenting."

"None of the various activities that various Government bureaucrats undertook before filing the civil forfeiture proceeding was required by the Constitution or by any statute. None of those activities made it impossible, or even arduous, for the Government to act promptly to establish its right to hold claimant's currency. In my opinion a rule that allows the Government to dispossess a citizen of her property for more than 18 months without her consent and without a hearing is a flagrant violation of the Fifth Amendment."

[Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Groetzinger, 480 U.S. 24; 107 S.Ct. 980, 94 L.Ed.2d. 25 (1987)]

Scar v. C.I.R. (Apr. 14, 1987)

"Failure to comply with statutory requirements renders the deficiency notice null and void and leaves nothing on which court jurisdiction can rest. See Sanderling Inc. v. Commissioner, 571 F.2d. 174, 176 (3d Cir.1978) ("The Tax Court has held that it has no jurisdiction where the deficiency notice does not cover a proper taxable period")...."
[Scar L, C.I.R., 814 F.2d. 1363 (9th Cir. 1987)]

In re Carter (June 11, 1987)

""Tax assessment is administrative device, used by Internal Revenue Service in collection activities, which serves function of court judgment; thus, just as setting aside judgment does not, of necessity, invalidate underlying claim, setting aside tax assessment does not determine taxpayer's liability for unpaid taxes."

"Assessment filed more than three years after taxes were due was invalid under applicable nonbankruptcy law and, therefore, claim was not entitled to priority within meaning of Bankruptcy Code."
[In re Carter, 74 B.R. 613 (Bkrty. E. D. Pa . 1987)]

United States v. Berman (Aug. 6, 1987)

"Government's failure to provide taxpayers with copy of notice of assessment and demand for payment did not bar civil action to collect tax liability; Internal Revenue Code requirement that Government provide taxpayer with such notice and demand applies only when Government seeks to collect taxes administratively. 26 U.S.C.A. §6303(a)."
[United States v. Berman, 825 F.2d. 1053 (6th Cir.1987)]

Hatcher v. United States (Jan. 16, 1990)

"Treasury Department orders delegating to IRS agents the authority to issue summonses were binding upon taxpayer with actual knowledge thereof, even assuming that they were never published in Federal Register; accordingly, taxpayer could not complain of special agent's alleged lack of delegated authority to issue or approve summonses."
[Hatcher v. United States, 733 F.Supp. 218 (1990)]

Ward v. C.I.R. (Aug. 1, 1990)

"The taxpayer's "last known address" is the address to which, in light of all surrounding facts and circumstances, the Commissioner reasonably believed that the taxpayer wished the notice of deficiency to be sent. Pomeroy, 864 F.2d. at 1195; Mulder, 855 F.2d. at 211; Eschweiler v. United States, 877 F.2d. 634, 636 7th Cir.1989; Guillen v. Barnes, 819 F.2d. 975, 977 (10th Cir.1987)."

"We presume that the IRS used reasonable diligence if it mailed the deficiency notice to the address contained in the taxpayer's most recently filed tax return, unless the taxpayer provided "clear and concise" notice to the IRS of an address change. Pomeroy, 864 F.2d. at 1194; King v. Commissioner, 857 F.2d. 676, 681 (9th Cir.1988); [cites omitted]. [...] Where the taxpayer has provided clear and concise notice, a deficiency notice mailed to the address listed on the taxpayer's prior, albeit most recent, tax return is ineffective."

Kulway v. United States (Oct. 25, 1990)

"But since the assessment automatically results in lien on taxpayer's property, see 26 U.S.C. §§6321 & 6322, the taxpayer may bring action under §2410(a)(1) to challenge procedural irregularities in the seizure and sale of his property following such an assessment, see, e.g., Aqua Bar & Lounge, Inc. v. United States, 539 F.2d. 935, 983-40 (3d Cir.1976); Schmidt v. King, 913 F.2d. at 839; Elias v. Connett, 908 F.2d. at 527; *Popp v. Robinson v. United States (Dec. 21, 1990)

"Notice of deficiency is jurisdictional prerequisite to suit in tax court. 26 U.S.C.A. §§6212(a), 6213."

"Notice of deficiency serves as a prerequisite to valid assessment by Internal Revenue Service. 26 U.S.C.A. §§6212(a), 6213(a, c)."

"The notice is a 'pivotal feature of the Code's assessment procedures,' Holof, 872 F.2d. at 53, because it serves as a prerequisite to a valid assessment by the IRS. The Internal Revenue Code is clear that 'no assessment of a deficiency...and no levy or proceeding in court for its collection shall be made, begun, or prosecuted until such notice [of deficiency] has been mailed to the taxpayer, nor until the expiration of such 90-day...period.' [Brackets original.] [Robinson v. United States, 920 F.2d. 1157 (3rd Cir. 1990)]

First Atlas Funding Corp. Through Kersting v. United States (May 22, 1991)

"A lien is not an assertion of adverse title or an actual effort to dispossess. It is merely a means of securing a position as a creditor. For there to be a taking, there must be other acts suggesting deprivation of access or use. The mere filing of a notice of a tax lien against the property interest, if any, of a taxpayer other than the landowner does not state a claim for a physical taking of property." [Cites omitted.]

[First Atlas Funding Corp. Through Kersting v. United States, 23 Cl.Ct. 137 (1991)]

Arford v. United States (May 31, 1991)

"Taxpayer's allegation in quiet title action against the United States that government did not assess taxes properly under statute defining method of assessment and requiring that taxpayer be furnished with copy of assessment record if he or she so requests, satisfied waiver of sovereign immunity requirement, to extent that taxpayers were challenging procedural lapses of assessment under statute."

"Transfer of taxpayer's Air Force retirement pay to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) in satisfaction of unpaid tax assessments was a 'levy,' not a 'set-off,' and as such, transfer was subject to procedural requirements governing transfers by lien & levy."

[Arford v. United States, 934 F.2d. 229 (9th Cir. 1991)]

Portillo v. C.I.R. (June 11, 1991)

"...in order for a notice of deficiency to be valid, the I.R.S. must have made a 'determination' of a tax deficiency. See 26 U.S.C. §6212(a). Portillo argues that in this case the I.R.S. failed to make such a 'determination' and therefore the notice was invalid and the tax court consequently lacked jurisdiction."

"The need for tax collection does not serve to excuse the government, however, from providing some factual foundation for its assessments. Id. 'The tax collector's presumption of correctness has a herculean muscularity of Goliathlike reach, but we strike an Achilles' heel when we find no muscles, no tendons, no ligaments of fact.' Id." [Portillo v. C.I.R., 932 F.2d. 1128 (5th Cir. 1991)]

United States v. Saunders (Dec. 13, 1991)

"The Saunders argue first that the summonses were invalid because they lacked an Office of Management and Budget ("OMB") control number. Consequently, the Saunders continue, section 3512 of the Paperwork Reduction Act, 44 U.S.C. §§3501 to 3520, relieves them of the obligation to respond to the summonses. Section 3512 reads: 'Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no person shall be subject to any penalty for failing to maintain or provide information to any agency if the information collection request involved was made after Dec. 31, 1981, and does not display a current control number assigned by the Director, or fails to state that such request is not subject to this chapter.'"

"The district court appropriately rejected the Saunders' argument. The Paperwork Reduction Act specifically excepts from section 3512's requirements 'the collection of information ... during the conduct of ... an administrative action or investigation involving an agency against specific individuals or entities.' 44 U.S.C. §3518(c)(1)(B); see also 5 C.F.R. §1320.3(c)."

Litigation Tool 10.018, Rev. 11-21-2018

"To establish prima facie case for enforcement of administrative summons, IRS need only present affidavit of agent involved in investigation offering requisite good-faith elements; party challenging summons then assumes heavy burden of disproving actual existence of valid civil tax determination or collection purpose."

"IRS has both statutory and regulatory authority to issue administrative summons; regulations providing Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms authority to issue such summons are not exclusive."

[United States v. Streett, 791 F.Supp. 563 (D.Md. 1992)]

United States v. Stoecklin (Feb. 15, 1994)

"To obtain judicial enforcement of a summons, the Internal Revenue Service must establish: (1) the investigation is being conducted for a legitimate purpose; (2) the inquiry may be relevant to that purpose; (3) the information sought is not already in the IRS's possession; and (4) the administrative steps required by the Internal Revenue Code have been followed. United States v. Powell, 379 U.S. 48, 57-58, 85 S.Ct. 248, 245-55, 13 L.Ed.2d. 112 (1964); United States v. Medlin, 986 F.2d. 463, 466 (11th Cir.)..."

"Respondent argued at the hearing that his primary assertion is that this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction. Respondent asserts that the Secretary of the Treasury is required by 26 U.S.C. §7805(a) to promulgate implementing regulations, that these regulations have the force of law, that the Secretary has failed to promulgate such regulations regarding income tax, and that without such regulations the IRS statutes are given no force and effect. In the absence of such regulations, respondent asserts that 26 U.S.C. §7604(a), which purports to vest jurisdiction in the district court, has no effect."

"26 U.S.C. §7805(a) requires the Secretary to prescribe "all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of this title..." Regulatory embellishment is unnecessary, because enforcement procedure is clearly set forth in the statutes. 26 U.S.C. §7602 et seq. Similarly, there is no need for regulations regarding the jurisdiction of a district court because the statutes themselves also specifically vest jurisdiction. 26 U.S.C. §§7402(b), 7604(a). Because Congress has spoken clearly, there was no need to promulgate or refer to regulations. RJR Nabisco, Inc. v. United States, 955 F.2d. 1457, 1464 (11th Cir.1992). Therefore, respondent's argument that without regulations the statutes are not operative is without merit."

"Respondent argues that there is no personal jurisdiction over him because he is not "federal subject" and is not a "person" who owes an obligation to pay taxes to the federal government. Respondent alleges that petitioner has failed to produce any written documentation that he has agreed to subject himself to federal income tax. Respondent argues that he is not a citizen of the United States but rather a free citizen of the republic of Florida. ... Respondent's argument has consistently been rejected. United States v. Gerads, 999 F.2d. 1255, 1256 (8th Cir.1993)(Minnesota); United States v. Price, 798 F.2d. 111, 112-13 (5th Cir.1986)(Texas). Additionally, Stoecklin v. C.I.R., 865 F.2d. at 1224 stated "Stoecklin's arguments that he is not subject to the income tax laws are equally frivolous."

"§3.1 Purposes of the act and regulations.

"The principal purposes of the act and of the regulations in this part are to provide means of: (a) Settling, by compromise, adjustment or cancellation relatively small debts long past due and owing to the Government arising from loans or payments made under farm programs administered by the Department; (b) recovering by the Department of substantial sums which are found uncollectible when the indebtednesses are treated as full obligations, and which otherwise would probably never be collected; (c) clearing the accounts of balances so small as not to warrant continued efforts of collection; and (d) the clearing of the account of the records of indebtedness made uncollectible by reason of the death or disappearance of the debtors. The existence of the act will neither serve as grounds for any relaxation in the general collection policy of the Department nor should it serve as grounds for any lessening of the efforts of farmers to pay their indebtedness."

Note 23. [Cites omitted.]

"Frivolous return penalty of $500 was properly assessed against taxpayers who filed amended return claiming refund on ground that wages had been erroneously reported as income but were now considered by taxpayers exempt as having been received in equal exchange for services, pursuant to statute providing for imposition of civil penalty for filing of frivolous income tax return, where courts which had considered that position had uniformly rejected it as patently without merit. *Sisemore v. "In special excise and income-tax assessments a notice on Form 647 is required to be given in all cases where the required return is filed in due time. This, however, is simply a preliminary notice of assessment, to be followed, in case of nonpayment, by a formal notice and demand which the law clearly contemplates and which the courts hold to be necessary before the delinquent taxpayer becomes chargeable with penalty and interest."

"AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY. --If any person liable to pay any tax neglects or refuses to pay the same within 10 days after notice and demand, it shall be lawful for the Secretary to collect such tax (and such further sum as shall be sufficient to cover the expenses of the levy) by levy upon all property and rights to property (except such property as is exempt under section 6334) belonging to such person or on which there is a lien provided in this chapter for the payment of such tax.

Levy may be made upon the accrued salary or wages of any officer, employee, or elected official, of the United States, the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of the United States or the District of Columbia, by serving a

28 U.S.C. §3101. Prejudgment remedies

"(a) Application.--(1) The United States may, in a proceeding in conjunction with the complaint or at any time after the filing of a civil action on a claim for a debt, make application under oath to a court to issue any prejudgment remedy.

"(2) Such application shall be filed with the court and shall set forth the factual and legal basis for each prejudgment remedy sought.

"(3) Such application shall--

" (A) state that the debtor against whom the prejudgment remedy is sought shall be afforded an opportunity for a hearing; and

"(B) set forth with particularity that all statutory requirements under this chapter for the issuance of the prejudgment remedy sought have been satisfied.

"(b) Grounds.-Subject to section 3102, 3103, 3104, or 3105, a prejudgment remedy may be granted by any court if the United States shows reasonable cause to believe that--

"(1) the debtor--

"(A) is about to leave the jurisdiction of the United States with the effect of hindering, delaying, or defrauding the United States in its effort to recover a debt;

"(B) has or is about to assign, dispose, remove, conceal, ill treat, waste, or destroy property with the effect of hindering, delaying, or defrauding the United States;

"(C) has or is about to convert the debtor's property into money, securities, or evidence of debt in a manner prejudicial to the United States with the effect of hindering, delaying, or defrauding the United States; or

"(D) has evaded service of process by concealing himself or has temporarily withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the United States with the effect of hindering, delaying, or defrauding the United States; or

"(2) a prejudgment remedy is required to obtain jurisdiction within the United States and the prejudgment remedy sought will result in obtaining such jurisdiction.

"(c) Affidavit.--(1) The application under subsection (a) shall include an affidavit establishing with particularity to the court's satisfaction facts supporting the probable validity of the claim for a debt and the right of the United States to recover what is demanded in the application.

"(2) The affidavit shall state--

"(A) specifically the amount of the debt claimed by the United States and any interest or costs attributable to such debt;

"(B) one or more of the grounds specified in subsection (b); and

"(C) the requirements of section 3102(b), 3103(a), 3104(a), or 3105(b), as the case may be.

"(3) No bond is required of the United States.

"(d) Notice and hearing.--(1) On filing an application by the United States as provided in this section, the counsel for the United States shall prepare, and the clerk shall issue, a notice for service on the debtor against whom the prejudgment remedy is sought and on any other person whom the United States reasonably believes, after exercising due diligence, has possession, custody, or control of property affected by such remedy. Three copies of the notice shall be served on each such person. The form and content of such notice shall be approved jointly by a majority of the chief judges of the Federal districts in the State in which the court is located and shall be in substantially the following form:

"NOTICE

""You are hereby notified that this [property] is being taken by the United States Government ('the Government'), which says that [name of debtor] owes it a debt of $ [amount] for [reason for debt] and has filed a lawsuit to collect this debt. The Government says it must take this property at this time because [recite the pertinent ground or grounds from section 3101(b)]. The Government wants to make sure [name of debtor] will pay if the court determines that this money is owed.

""In addition, you are hereby notified that there are exemption under the law which may protect some of this property from being taken by the Government if [name of debtor] can show that the exemptions apply. Below is a summary of the major exemptions which apply in most situations in the State of [State where property is located]:

""[A statement summarizing in plain and understandable English the election available with respect to such State under section 3014 and the types of property that may be exempted under each of the alternatives specified in paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 3014(a), and a statement that different property may be so exempted with respect to the State in which the debtor resides.]

""If you are [name of debtor] and you disagree with the reason the Government gives for taking your property now, or if you think you do not owe the money to the Government that is says you do, or if you think the property the Government is taking qualifies under one of the above exemptions, you have a right to ask the court to return your property to you.

""If you want a hearing, you must promptly notify the court. You must make your request in writing, and either mail it or deliver it in person to the clerk of the court at [address]. If you wish, you may use this notice to request the hearing by checking the box below and mailing this notice to the court clerk. You must also send a copy of your request to the Government at [address], so the Government will know you want a hearing. The hearing will take place within 5 days after the clerk receives your request, if you ask for it to take place that quickly, or as soon after that as possible.

""At the hearing you may explain to the judge why you think you do not owe the money to the Government, why you disagree with the reason the Government says it must take your property at this time, or why you believe the property the Government has taken is exempt or belongs to someone else. You may make any or all of these explanations as you see fit.

""If you think you live outside the Federal judicial district in which the court is located, you may request, not later than 20 days after you receive this notice, that this proceeding to take your property be transferred by the court to the Federal judicial district in which you reside. You must make your request in writing, and either mail it or deliver it in person to the clerk of the court at [address]. You must also send a copy of your request to the Government at [address], so the Government will know you want the proceeding to be transferred.

""Be sure to keep a copy of this notice for your own records. If you have any questions about your rights or about this procedure, you should contact a lawyer, or office of public legal assistance, or the clerk of the court. The clerk is not permitted to give legal advice, but can refer you to other sources of information.

""(2)By requesting, at any time before judgment on the claim for a debt, the court to hold a hearing, the debtor may move to quash the order granting such remedy. The court shall hold a hearing on such motion as soon as practicable, or, if requested by the debtor, within 5 days after receiving the request for a hearing or as soon thereafter as possible. The issues at such hearing shall be limited to--

"(A) the probable validity of the claim for the debt for which such remedy was granted and of any defense or claim of exemption asserted by such person;

"(B) compliance with any statutory requirement for the issuance of the prejudgment remedy granted;

"(C) the existence of any ground set forth in subsection (b); and

"(D) the inadequacy of alternative remedies (if any) to protect the interests of the United States.

"(e) Issuance of writ.--On the court's determination that the requirements of subsections (a), (b), and (c) have been met, the court shall issue all process sufficient to put into effect the prejudgment remedy sought." [Brackets and bold original.]

"Garnishment

"(a) In general. If the requirements of section 3101 are satisfied, a court may issue a writ of garnishment against property (excluding earnings) in which the debtor has a substantial nonexempt interest and which is in the possession, custody, or control of a person other than the debtor in order to satisfy a claim for a debt. Co-owned property shall be subject to garnishment to the same extent as co-owned property is subject to garnishment under the law of the State in which such property is located. A court may issue simultaneous separate writs of garnishment to several garnishees."

"(b) Writ. (1) Subsections (b)(2) and (c) of section 3205 shall apply with respect to garnishment under this section, except that for purposes of this section--

"(A) earnings of the debtor shall not be subject to garnishment [...]."

“The principle of Lucas v. Earl, that he who earns income may not avoid taxation through anticipatory arrangements no matter how clever or subtle, has been repeatedly invoked by this Court and stands today as a cornerstone of our graduated income tax system. See, e. g., Commissioner v. Harmon, 323 U.S. 44 (1944); 451*451 United States v. Joliet & Chicago R. Co., 315 U.S. 44 (1942); Helvering v. Eubank, 311 U.S. 122 (1940); Burnet v. Leininger, 285 U.S. 136 (1932). And, of course, that principle applies with equal force in assessing partnership income.”

What Is Income?, Sept. 29, 2018, Larry Becraft

Some Basics

(updated links, Sept. 29, 2018)

The subject of the various prior and current income tax acts, income, has always been directly connected to a particular phrase: “gains, profits, and income.” For example, the 1894 act, titled “An Act To reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,” approved August 27, 1894, 28 Stat. 509, ch. 349, provided as follows (starting on page 553):

*“SEC. 27. That from and after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and ninety-five, and until the first day of January, nineteen hundred, there shall be assessed, levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income received in the preceding calendar year by every citizen of the United States, whether residing at home or abroad, and every person residing therein, whether said gains, profits, or income be derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, or salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, ***.”*

This tax was declared unconstitutional in the Pollock case when the Supreme Court declared it to be a direct tax that failed to comply with the apportionment requirement of the Constitution. See Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429, 15 S.Ct. 673, aff. reh., 158 U.S. 601, 15 S.Ct. 912 (1895).

In 1909, Congress proposed for ratification by the States the Sixteenth Amendment, the federal income tax amendment. At the same time, it adopted the Corporate Excise Tax of 1909, 36 Stat. 112, §38, which was in essence an income tax. This tax was found constitutional as an excise tax in Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U.S. 107, 31 S.Ct. 342, 349 (1911).

A couple of years later in Stratton’s Independence, Ltd. v. Howbert, 231 U.S. 399, 415, 34 S.Ct. 136 (1913), a case involving the 1909 act, the Supreme Court defined “income” as “the gains derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined.”

After the alleged ratification of the Sixteenth Amendment, Congress adopted in October, 1913, the first federal income tax based thereon. In reference to the subject of this tax, income, this act, titled “An Act To reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,” 38 Stat. 114, 167, ch. 16, imposed this tax as follows:

“B. That, subject only to such exemptions and deductions as are hereinafter allowed, the net income of a taxable person shall include gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, businesses, trade, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in real or personal property, also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any lawful business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever, including the income from but not the value of property acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent:”

Like the challenge made to the 1909 Corporate Excise Tax Act, a challenge was also made to the constitutionality of this 1913 income tax act. The Supreme Court in Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 240 U.S. 1, 36 S.Ct. 236 (1916), declared that the federal income tax was, in a constitutional sense, an excise tax. See also Hale v. Iowa State Bd. of Assessment and Review, 302 U.S. 95, 106 (1937) ("Finally, and even more conclusively, decisions of our own court forbid us to stigmatize as unreasonable the classification of a tax upon net income as something different from a property tax, if not substantially an excise. People ex rel. Clyde v. Gilchrist, 262 U.S. 94, 43 S.Ct. 501; New York ex rel. Cohn v. Graves, 300 U.S. 308, 57 S.Ct. 466, 108 A.L.R. 821; Brushaber v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., 240 U.S. 1, 36 S.Ct. 236, L.R.A.1917D, 414, Ann.Cas. 1917B, 713, all point in that direction.").

A few months after the decision in Brushaber, Congress repealed the 1913 income tax act and enacted a new federal income tax. See "An Act To increase the revenue, and for other purposes," 39 Stat. 756, 757, ch. 463. This act followed its predecessors and defined income as follows:

"INCOME DEFINED.

"SEC. 2. (a) That, subject only to such exemptions and deductions as are hereinafter allowed, the net income of a taxable person shall include gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, businesses, trade, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in real or personal property, also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever:"

A year later, Congress amended the 1916 act via the 1917 act. See "An Act To provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes", 40 Stat. 300, 329, ch. 63. Again, the phrase, "gains, profits, and income," appeared in this act:

"SEC. 1200. That subdivision (a) of section two of such Act of September eighth, nineteen hundred and sixteen, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) That, subject only to such exemptions and deductions as are hereinafter allowed, the net income of a taxable person shall include gains, profits, and income, derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, businesses, trade, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in real or personal property, also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever."

The Revenue Act of 1918, titled "An Act To provide revenue, and for other purposes", 40 Stat. 1057, ch. 18, contained this "gains, profits, and income" phrase:

"GROSS INCOME DEFINED.

"SEC. 213. That for the purposes of this title (except as otherwise provided in section 233) the term 'gross income'—

"(a) Includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service (including in the case of the President of the United States, the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States, and all other officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, the compensation received as such), of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever."

The Revenue Act of 1921 was adopted by Congress on November 23, 1921. See "An Act To reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes," 42 Stat. 227, 237-38, ch. 136. It contained this phrase:

"GROSS INCOME DEFINED.

SEC. 213. That for the purposes of this title (except as otherwise provided in section 233) the term 'gross income'—

"(a) Includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service (including in the case of the President of the United States, the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States, and all other officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, the compensation received as such), of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever."

The Revenue Act of 1924 was adopted by Congress on June 2, 1924. See "An Act To reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes," 43 Stat. 253, 267, ch. 234. It contained this phrase:

"GROSS INCOME DEFINED.

"SEC. 213. For the purposes of this title, except as otherwise provided in section 233—

"(a) The term 'gross income' includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service (including in the case of the President of the United States, the judges or the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States, and all other officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, the compensation received as such), of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever."

The Revenue Act of 1926, titled "An Act To reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes," 44 Stat. 9, 23-24, ch. 27, contained this phrase:

"GROSS INCOME DEFINED

"SEC. 213. For the purposes of this title, except as otherwise provided in section 233—

"(a) The term 'gross income' includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service (including in the case of the President of the United States, the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States, and all other officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, the compensation received as such), of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever."

The Revenue Act of 1928, titled "An Act To reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes," 45 Stat. 791, 797, ch. 852, contained this phrase:

"SEC. 22. GROSS INCOME.

"(a) General definition.—'Gross income' includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service, of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever."

The Revenue Act of 1932, titled "An Act To provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes," 47 Stat. 169, 178, ch. 209, contained this phrase:

"SEC. 22. GROSS INCOME.

"(a) GENERAL DEFINITION.—'Gross income' includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service, of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever. In the case of Presidents of the United States and judges of courts of the United States taking office after the date of the enactment of this Act, the compensation received as such shall be included in gross income; and all Acts fixing the compensation of such Presidents and judges are hereby amended accordingly."

The Revenue Act of 1934, titled "An Act To provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes," 48 Stat. 680, 686-87, ch. 277, contained this phrase:

"SEC. 22. GROSS INCOME.

"(a) GENERAL DEFINITION. —'Gross income' includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service, of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever. In the case of Presidents of the United States and judges of courts of the United States taking office after June 6, 1932, the compensation received as such shall be included in gross income; and all Acts fixing the compensation of such Presidents and judges are hereby amended accordingly."

The Revenue Act of 1936, titled "An Act To provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes," 49 Stat. 1648, 1657, ch. 690, contained this phrase:

"SEC. 22. GROSS INCOME.

"(a) GENERAL DEFINITION.—'Gross income' includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service, of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever. In the case of Presidents of the United States and judges of courts of the United States taking office after June 6, 1932, the compensation received as such shall be included in gross income; and all Acts fixing the compensation of such Presidents and judges are hereby amended accordingly."

The Revenue Act of 1938, titled "An Act To provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes," 52 Stat. 447, 457, ch. 289, contained this phrase:

"SEC. 22. GROSS INCOME.

"(a) GENERAL DEFINITION.—'Gross income' includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service, of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever. In the case of Presidents of the United States and judges of courts of the United States taking office after June 6, 1932, the compensation received as such shall be included in gross income; and all Acts taxing the compensation of such Presidents and judges are hereby amended accordingly."

And finally, the 1939 Internal Revenue Code (53A, Statutes at Large) contained this phrase:

"SEC. 22. GROSS INCOME.

"(a) GENERAL DEFINITION.—'Gross income' includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service, of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever."

Stratton's Independence, Ltd. v. Howbert, 231 U.S. 399, 415, 34 S.Ct. 136 (1913) ("for 'income' may be defined as the gains derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined, and here we have combined operations of capital and labor."); Doyle v. Mitchell Bros. Co., 247 U.S. 179, 185, 38 S.Ct. 467 (1918) ("Whatever difficulty there may be about a precise and scientific definition of 'income, it imports, as used here, something entirely distinct from principal or capital either as a subject of taxation or as a measure of the tax; conveying rather the idea of gain or increase arising from corporate activities. Here is an interesting test for students of the federal income tax to perform. Download the searchable old tax acts: the Revenue Act of 1918 through the 1939 Code, the 1954 Code, and the 2002 version of the 1986 Code. Search these income tax acts for the phrase "gains, profits", which will thus find all references to this phrase, "gains, profits, and income." Why does this search demonstrate a certain pattern in the tax acts, with particular emphasis on non-resident aliens and foreign corporations?

Taxing the Right To Work

Here are some important state cases regarding the taxability of compensation for labor:

O'Keefe v. City of Somerville, 190 Mass. 110, 76 N.E. 457, 458 (1906): "cannot levy an excise tax upon the business of a husbandman or an ordinary mechanic".

Sims v. Ahrens, 167 Ark. 557, 271 S.W. 720, 733 (1925): "[T]he Legislature has no power to declare as a privilege and tax for revenue purposes occupations that are of common right, but it does have the power to declare as privileges and tax as such for state revenue purposes those pursuits and occupations that are not matters of common right..."

Redfield v. Fisher, 135 Or. 180, 292 P. 813, 819 (Ore. 1930): "The individual, unlike the corporation, cannot be taxed for the mere privilege of existing. The corporation is an artificial entity which owes its existence and charter powers to the state; but the individual's rights to live and own property are natural rights for the enjoyment of which an excise cannot be imposed."

Jerome H. Sheip Co. v. Amos, 100 Fla. 863, 130 So. 699, 705 (1930): gas tax case: "A man is free to lay hand upon his own property. To acquire and possess property is a right, not a privilege ... The right to acquire and possess property cannot alone be made the subject of an excise nor, generally speaking, can an excise be laid upon the mere right to possess the fruits thereof, as that right is the chief attribute of ownership."

Cary v. Bellingham, 41 Wn. 2d 468, 250 P.2d 114 (1952): excise can't be used to tax right to work.

Jack Cole Co. v. MacFarland, 337 S.W.2d. 453, 455-56 (Tenn. 1960): "Realizing and receiving income or earnings is not a privilege that can be taxed. * * * Since the right to receive income or earnings is a right belonging to every person, this right cannot be taxed as a privilege."

"Exempt" Pursuant to the Constitution

Starting with Regs 45 for the Revenue Act of 1918, certain sections of the regs mentioned that some income was “fundamentally” exempt from the tax, or exempt pursuant to the Constitution and thus not taxable by the Federal Government. For your convenience, extracts of these various regulations are included here:

Staples v. U.S., 21 F.Supp. 737 at 739 (1937)

The Sixteenth Amendment authorizes the taxation without apportionment of "incomes, from whatever source derived." Income has been defined as "the gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined," Stratton's Independence v. Howbert, 231 U.S. 399, 34 S.Ct. 136, 140, 58 L.Ed. 285, "including profit gained through sale or conversion of capital," Doyle v. Mitchell Bros. Co., 247 U.S. 179, 38 S.Ct. 467, 62 L.Ed. 1054; Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189, 40 S.Ct. 189, 193, 64 L.Ed. 521, 9 A.L.R. 1570. The gain is, however, not taxable until it is realized. North American Oil Consol. v. Burnet, 286 U.S. 417, 52 S.Ct. 613, 76 L.Ed. 1197. Furthermore, a gain from capital must be derived from it, not merely accruing to it. Eisner v. Macomber, supra. In the case just cited Mr. Justice Pitney, after quoting the foregoing definition, said, 252 U. S. 189, at page 207, 40 S.Ct. 189, 193, 64 L. Ed. 521, 9 A.L.R. 1570:

"Brief as it is, it indicates the characteristic and distinguishing attribute of income essential for a correct solution of the present controversy. The government, although basing its argument upon the definition as quoted, placed chief emphasis upon the word 'gain,' which was extended to include a variety of meanings; while the significance of the next three words was either overlooked or misconceived. 'Derived — from — capital'; 'the gain — derived — from — capital,' etc. Here we have the essential matter: not a gain accruing to capital; not a growth or increment of value in the investment; but a gain, a profit, something of exchangeable value, proceeding from the property, severed from the capital, however invested or employed, and coming in, being 'derived' — that is, received or drawn by the recipient (the taxpayer) for his separate use, benefit and disposal — that is income derived from property. Nothing else answers the description.

"The same fundamental conception is clearly set forth in the Sixteenth Amendment 740*740 — 'incomes, from whatever source derived' — the essential thought being expressed with a conciseness and lucidity entirely in harmony with the form and style of the Constitution."

"There is a clear distinction between 'profit' and 'wages', or a compensation for labor. Compensation for labor (wages) cannot be regarded as profit within the meaning of the law. The word 'profit', as ordinarily used, means the gain made upon any business or investment -- a different thing altogether from the mere compensation for labor."

Helvering v. Edison Bros. Stores, 133 F.2d. 575 (1943)

The argument on behalf of the taxpayer runs as follows: The treasury regulations interpreting revenue acts prior to the Act of 1934, under which a corporation was held not to realize taxable income from the purchase and sale of its own stock, have acquired the force of law by repeated reenactments of the income tax laws by Congress without change in the definition of gross income. The regulation in question thus having acquired the force of law, the taxpayer contends, the Treasury Department is without power to change it in the absence of a change in the definition of gross income by Congress itself. In the view of the taxpayer it follows that Articles 22(a)-6 and 22(a)-16 of Treasury Regulations 86 and 94 are void. The argument is pressed further by the contention that the interpretation of § 22(a) of the Revenue Acts of 1934 and 1936, now advanced by the Treasury Department, is beyond the power of either the Department or Congress as conflicting with the meaning of the word "income" as used in the Sixteenth Amendment to the Constitution; and finally, the taxpayer contends that if valid the treasury regulations in question here are not applicable to the taxpayer's purchase and sale of its own stock in the circumstances of this case. The Commissioner contends for the reverse of these propositions. Accordingly, the taxpayer seeks reversal of the decision of the Board of Tax Appeals affirming the determination of a deficiency in its income tax for 1937, and the Commissioner, a reversal of the Board's decision reversing the determination of a deficiency against the taxpayer for the year 1935.

The principles controlling in the decision of the questions stated are established. The Treasury Department cannot, by interpretative regulations, make income of that which is not income within the meaning of the revenue acts of Congress, nor can Congress, without apportionment, tax as income that which is not income within the meaning of the Sixteenth Amendment. Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189, 40 S.Ct. 189, 64 L.Ed. 521, 9 A.L.R. 1570; M. E. Blatt Co. v. United States, 305 U.S. 267, 59 S.Ct. 186, 83 L. Ed. 167. But Congress, in defining gross income in the various revenue acts, manifested its intention to use to its fullest extent the power granted it by the Sixteenth Amendment. Douglas v. Willcuts, 296 U.S. 1, 9, 56 S.Ct. 59, 80 L.Ed. 3, 101 A.L.R. 391; Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U.S. 331, 341, 60 S.Ct. 554, 84 L.Ed. 788. What is or is not income within the meaning of the Sixteenth Amendment must be determined in each case "according to truth and substance, without regard to form." Eisner v. Macomber, supra [252 U.S. 189, 40 S.Ct. 193, 64 L.Ed. 521, 9 A.L.R. 1570]. The meaning of the word "income" in the Sixteenth Amendment and in the acts of Congress pursuant to the Amendment is that given it in common speech and every day usage. Old Colony R. Co. v. Commissioner, 284 U.S. 552, 52 S.Ct. 211, 76 L.Ed. 484; United States v. American Trucking Ass'ns, 310 U.S. 534, 60 S.Ct. 1059, 84 L.Ed. 1345. In the construction of the revenue acts in question here, and of the administrative regulations interpreting them, we may put aside as not controlling the meaning of income in the language of accountancy and economics. Nor can the ruling of one administrative department of the government concerning income accounting control that of another department made for an entirely different purpose under another act of Congress. Old Colony R. Co. v. Commissioner, supra.

[Millsap v. Commissioner, 91 T.C. 926 (1988)]

Klunder v. C.I.R. (1991)

"Petitioner, nevertheless, attempts to assert that the withholding of income tax by his employer satisfies his obligation to pay tax, and that in essence, there is no underpayment. A withholding credit, however, is not in payment of petitioner's tax liability until he consents to assessment, or a liability is otherwise determined. The filing of a proper return is treated as a consent to assessment of the tax and would obviate the need for the deficiency procedures under sections

6211 through 6215.⁵⁸ In failing to file a return, petitioner clearly failed to report or admit to his tax liability. Thus, his withholding credits had not and could not be applied by respondent to reduce or satisfy that tax liability, or his deficiency or underpayment.”

Sullivan v. C.I.R. (1991)

“Because petitioner here filed no return, he is not entitled to any amount with which to offset his total tax liability for purposes of the above calculation. Sec. 6653(c); sec. 301.6211-1\(a\), Proced. & Admin. Regs.; Cirillo v. Commissioner, 314 F.2d. 478, 484 \(3d Cir. 1953\); Emmons v. Commissioner, supra at 348. Petitioner's underpayment is, therefore, the full amount of his 1983 tax liability. Schneiker v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo. 1989-378. The rationale underlying our holding, the case law, and the statute is that a prepayment credit cannot become a payment of petitioner's tax liability until he consents to assessment, or a liability is otherwise determined. In this same view, prepayment credits are not considered for purposes of computing a deficiency for section 6211. The filing of a proper return is treated as a consent to assessment of the tax and would obviate the need for the deficiency procedures under sections 6211 through 6215 before respondent is able to collect the tax.⁵⁹ In failing to file a return, petitioner clearly failed to admit and consent to his tax liability.

8.8 Validity of return and requirement to file

Davis v. U.S. (1983)

Taxpayers argue that § 6702 does not apply to them in that the Form 1040 that they filed was not a “purported return.” While taxpayers did write on the forms the words “not a tax return,” the form was undeniably filed to obtain a refund of the taxes withheld from their wages for which the filing of a return is necessary. 26 C.F.R. §301.6402-3(a)(1) (1983). As stated a district court that recently faced this same situation:

Since the plaintiffs' stated purpose was to obtain a refund, the documents submitted must be deemed to be purported tax returns for purposes of Section 6702. It is true that the plaintiffs wrote on the forms that they were not returns, but this disclaimer has no effect in light of the plaintiffs' stated purpose to have the documents treated as returns. If such a disclaimer were sufficient to avoid liability under Section 6702, tax protesters could flood the IRS with frivolous tax returns bearing similar disclaimers without penalty.”

Nichols v. United States, 575 F.Supp. 320, 322(D.Minn.1983). Thus, the Form 1040 was a purported return, and the district court correctly granted summary judgment on the issue of the penalty under § 6702.

Internal Revenue Manual

Section 25.6.5.5.1 (11-01-2004)

Valid Return

1. A taxpayer is not considered to have filed a tax return (which begins the period of limitations on assessment) until the taxpayer files a valid tax return. A valid return is described at IRM 25.6.2.4.14. In general, a tax return is considered sufficient for establishing a statute of limitations period if it meets the following criteria:

- A. It has data sufficient available to calculate a tax liability,
- B. It purports to be a return,
- C. It is an honest and reasonable attempt to satisfy the requirements of the tax law, and
- D. It is signed under penalties of perjury.

Note:

#While there is no question that an unsigned return is an invalid return; the Service has found it necessary to process unsigned balance due returns since 1970 in order for the Service to handle the volume of unsigned payment returns received annually. This business decision is reflected in P-2-11 (Approved 10-02-1970), IRM 1.2.1.3.6.#

2. A return filed on the wrong form may be a valid return for the purpose of starting the period of limitations if it provides sufficient date to calculate a tax liability.

A. Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA) form instead of Railroad Retirement Tax Act (RRTA) form. A FICA return did not start the period on an employer's RRTA tax liability because the FICA return did not include all the information necessary to compute the RRTA tax. See Atlantic Land & Improv. Co. v. United States, 790 F.2d. 853, 860 (11th Cir. 1986).

B. RRTA form instead of FICA form. It appears that a RRTA return filed for a FICA tax liability might be sufficient to start the period on that liability. See the suggestion in Atlantic Land & Improv. Co., 790 F.2d. 860 at footnote 12. [SOURCE: <http://www.irs.gov/irm/part25/ch06s05.html>]

- (3) represents an honest and reasonable attempt to satisfy the requirements of the tax law; and
- (4) is executed under penalties of perjury.

Beard v. Commissioner, 82 T.C. 766, 777 (1984), aff'd, 793 F.2d. 139 (6th Cir. 1986) (citing Badaracco v. Commissioner, 464 U.S. 386 (1984); Zellerbach Paper Co. v. Helvering, 293 U.S. 172 (1934); and Florsheim Bros. Drygoods Co. v. United States, 280 U.S. 453 (1930)).

[Revenue Ruling 2005-59: Valid Return; Election to File Joint Return]

Spurlock v. Commissioner (2003)

In Spurlock v. Commissioner, supra at 157 n. 3, we stated that "Both parties agree that respondent filed sec. 6020(b) returns for the years in issue; however, we do not decide whether those 'returns' meet the requirements of sec. 6020(b)." Since respondent has failed to produce any evidence that a "return" was filed, we hold that the section 6651(a)(2) additions to tax for failure to pay tax shown on a return is inapplicable.

We previously addressed what constitutes a section 6020(b) return in Millsap v. Commissioner, 91 T.C. 926, 1988 W.L. 123581 (1988), and Phillips v. Commissioner, 86 T.C. 433, 1986 W.L. 22098 (1986). In Phillips v. Commissioner, supra at 437-438, we held that a "dummy return", i.e., page 1 of a Form 1040 showing only the taxpayer's name, address, and Social Security number, was not a section 6020(b) return.

[FN18] In Millsap v. Commissioner, supra, the Commissioner prepared a Form 1040 and attached a revenue agent's report which contained sufficient information from which to compute the taxpayer's tax liability. The attached report was subscribed, and we held that the Form 1040 together with the attached revenue agent's report containing information from which the tax could be computed met the requirements for a section 6020(b) return. The same elements we found necessary to constitute a section 6020(b) return in Millsap v. Commissioner, supra, and Phillips v. Commissioner, supra, are generally required for purposes of a section 6020(b) return in the context of section 6651(a)(2) and (g)(2). Namely, the return must be subscribed, it must contain sufficient information from which to compute the taxpayer's tax liability, and the return form and any attachments must purport to be a "return". The mere fact that respondent's files contain information upon which a tax might be determined does not transform his files into a section 6020(b) return. See Cabirac v. Commissioner, 120 T.C. -

---, (2003).

The documents attached to respondent's response to petitioner's motion for partial summary judgment for 1996 and 1997 consist of:

- (1) Half-page printouts of numerous codes and information which the Court is unable to translate;
- (2) portions of pages 1 of Forms 1040, each of which contains petitioner's name, address, Social Security number, and filing status;
- (3) computer-generated Forms 5344(CG), Examination Closing Record, each of which contains numerous codes and listings including petitioner's tax liability, penalty, and interest adjustments, credit and tax computation adjustments;
- (4) manually completed Forms 5344 signed by a tax examiner containing codes and information which the Court is also unable to translate;
- (5) a Form 4549-CG, Income Tax Examination Changes; and
- (6) a Letter 915(DO)(CG) (the "30-day letter")

[FN19] for petitioner's 1995, 1996, and 1997 tax years. Only the Form 5344 document and the 30-day letter were signed. FN19. Letter 915(DO)(CG) provides notice to the taxpayer of proposed adjustments to his or her tax liability. The letter is commonly referred to as a "30-day letter", because the taxpayer has 30 days to agree or disagree with the proposed adjustments.

[FN20] Respondent's revenue agent, Chris English, signed the 30-day letter. The dates which appear on the numerous documents that respondent alleged to be section 6020(b) returns do not match; indeed, the date entries span several years. The half-page printouts are dated November 22, 2000. Those printouts contain the notation "Received-Date: 10071999". Each of the Forms 1040 is dated September 23, 1999. The computer-generated Forms 5344(CG) contain no date. [Spurlock v. Commissioner, T.C.Memo. 2003-124]

Steines v. C.I.R. 1991

The Supreme Court on a number of occasions has considered the essential elements of a valid tax return, usually for purposes of the statute of limitations. Badaracco v. Commissioner, 464 U.S. 386 \(1984\); Commissioner v. Lane-Wells Co., 321 U.S. 219 \(1944\); Zellerbach Paper Co. v. Helvering, 293 U.S. 172 \(1934\); Lucas v. Pilliod Lumber Co., 281 U.S. 245 \(1930\); Florsheim Bros. Drygoods Co. v. United States, 280 U.S. 453 \(1930\). This Court has distilled the essence of the Supreme Court's test and applied it to determine whether or not a particular document constitutes a tax return for purposes of section 6651(a)(1). Beard v. Commissioner, 82 T.C. 766, 777 \(1984\), affd. 793 F.2d. 139 \(6th Cir. 1986\). Those essential elements, as set out in Beard, are as follows:

First, there must be sufficient data to calculate tax liability; second, the document must purport to be a return; third, there must be an honest and reasonable attempt to satisfy the requirements of the tax law; and fourth, the taxpayer must execute the return under penalties of perjury. (82 T.C. at 777.)

(a) Authority of Secretary

The Secretary is authorized and required to make the inquiries, determinations, and assessments of all taxes (including interest, additional amounts, additions to the tax, and assessable penalties) imposed by this title, or accruing under any former internal revenue law, which have not been duly paid by stamp at the time and in the manner provided by law. Such authority shall extend to and include the following:

Office of Chief Counsel, Notice-CC 2007-005

“It is essential that section 6020(b) returns be placed in evidence if the Tax Court is to find that the Service has met its burden of production under section 7491(c) and sustain the Service’s addition to tax determination. In cases brought by nonfilers, the Tax Court will deny the section 6651(a)(2) addition to tax if a valid section 6020(b) return is not entered into the record. See, *Wheeler v. Section 35.2.2.11 (08-11-2004)

Answers in Failure to Pay (Section 6651(a)(2) Cases Where Substitute for Return Filed under Section 6020(b))

Section 6020(b)(1) authorizes the Secretary to make a return upon either a taxpayer’s failure to file a return or upon a taxpayer’s filing of a fraudulent return. In two cases decided in 2003, the Tax Court clarified what constitutes a return under section 6020(b) for purposes of the addition to tax under section 6651(a)(2). See Cabirac v. Commissioner, 120 T.C. 163 (2003), and Spurlock v. Commissioner, T.C.Memo. 2003-124. In Spurlock, the Tax Court held that a return for section 6020(b) purposes must be “subscribed, it must contain sufficient information from which to compute the taxpayer’s tax liability, and the return form and any attachments must purport to be a ‘return’.” Spurlock, slip. op. at 27. In Cabirac, the documents the Service proffered as constituting a section 6020(b) return were (a) dummy Forms 1040 that identified the taxpayer, but which were not signed and did not show any tax due, (b) a subsequently prepared 30-day letter, and (c) a revenue agent’s report attached to the 30-day letter explaining how the Service computed the taxpayer’s liability.

Applying the analysis later explained in Spurlock, the Tax Court held that these documents did not constitute a section 6020(b) return. Critical to the Tax Court’s analysis was that the Service never treated the documents, which the Service created at various times, as one group purporting to be a return. See Millsap v. Commissioner, 91 T.C. 926 (1988), acq. in result in part, 1991-2 C.B. 1, describing a valid section 6020(b) return at issue therein.

TITLE 26--INTERNAL REVENUE

CHAPTER I--INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE, DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

PART 301_PROCEDURE AND ADMINISTRATION--Table of Contents

Assessment

Sec. 301.6211-1 Deficiency defined.

(a) In the case of the income tax imposed by subtitle A of the Code, the estate tax imposed by chapter 11, subtitle B, of the Code, the gift tax imposed by chapter 12, subtitle B, of the Code, and any excise tax imposed by chapter 41, 42, 43, or 44 of the Code, the term "deficiency" means the excess of the tax, (income, estate, gift, or excise tax as the case may be) over the sum of the amount shown as such tax by the taxpayer upon his return and the amounts previously assessed (or collected without assessment) as a deficiency; but such sum shall first be reduced by the amount of rebates made. If no return is made, or if the return (except a return of income tax pursuant to sec. 6014) does not show any tax, for the purpose of the definition "the amount shown as the tax by the taxpayer upon his return" shall be considered as zero. Accordingly, in any such case, if no deficiencies with respect to the tax have been assessed, or collected without assessment, and no rebates with respect to the tax have been made, the deficiency is the amount of the income tax imposed by subtitle A, the estate tax imposed by chapter 11, the gift tax imposed by chapter 12, or any excise tax imposed by chapter 41, 42, 43, or 44. Any amount shown as additional tax on an "amended return," so-called (other than amounts of additional tax which such return clearly indicates the taxpayer is protesting rather than admitting) filed after the due date of the return, shall be treated as an amount shown by the taxpayer "upon his return" for purposes of computing the amount of a deficiency.

(b) For purposes of the definition, the income tax imposed by subtitle A and the income tax shown on the return shall both be determined without regard to the credit provided in section 31 for income tax withheld at the source and without regard to so much of the credit provided in section 32 for income taxes withheld at the source as exceeds 2 percent of the interest on tax-free covenant bonds described in section 1451. Payments on account of estimated income tax, like other payments of tax by the taxpayer, shall likewise be disregarded in the determination of a deficiency. Any credit resulting from the collection of amounts assessed under section 6851 or 6852 as the result of a termination assessment shall not be taken into account in determining a deficiency.

(c) The computation by the Internal Revenue Service, pursuant to section 6014, of the income tax imposed by subtitle A shall be considered as having been made by the taxpayer and the tax so computed shall be considered as the tax shown by the taxpayer upon his return.

(a) IN GENERAL.

The district director is authorized and required to make all inquiries necessary to the determination and assessment of all taxes imposed by the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or any prior internal revenue law. The district director is further authorized and required, and the director of the regional service center is authorized, to make the determinations and the assessments of such taxes. However, certain inquiries and determinations are, by direction of the Commissioner, made by other officials, such as assistant regional commissioners. The term "taxes" includes interest, additional amounts, additions to the taxes, and assessable penalties. The authority of the district director and the director of the regional service center to make assessments includes the following:

(1) TAXES SHOWN ON RETURN. The district director or the director of the regional service center shall assess all taxes determined by the taxpayer or by the district director or the director of the regional service center and disclosed on a return or list.

(2) UNPAID TAXES PAYABLE BY STAMP.

(i) If without the use of the proper stamp:

(a) Any article upon which a tax is required to be paid by means of a stamp is sold or removed for sale or use by the manufacturer thereof, or

(b) Any transaction or act upon which a tax is required to be paid by means of a stamp occurs; The district director, upon such information as he can obtain, must estimate the amount of the tax which has not been paid and the district director or the director of the regional service center must make assessment therefor upon the person the district director determines to be liable for the tax. However, the district director or the director of the regional service center may not assess any tax which is payable by stamp unless the taxpayer fails to pay such tax at the time and in the manner provided by law or regulations.

(ii) If a taxpayer gives a check or money order as a payment for stamps but the check or money order is not paid upon presentment, then the district director or the director of the regional service center shall assess the amount of the check or money order against the taxpayer as if it were a tax due at the time the check or money order was received by the district director.

(a) In general.

Each return required under the regulations in this part, together with any prescribed copies or supporting data, shall be filled in and disposed of in accordance with the forms, instructions, and regulations applicable thereto. The return shall be carefully prepared so as fully and accurately to set forth the data required to be furnished therein. Returns which have not been so prepared will not be accepted as meeting the requirements of the regulations in this part. The return may be made by an agent in the name of the person required to make the return if an acceptable power of attorney is filed with the internal revenue office with which such person is required to file his returns and if such return includes all taxes required to be reported by such person on such return for the period covered by the return.

TITLE 26--INTERNAL REVENUE

CHAPTER I--INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE, DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

PART 601_STATEMENT OF PROCEDURAL RULES--Table of Contents

Subpart A_General Procedural Rules

Sec. 601.105 Examination of returns and claims for refund, credit or abatement; determination of correct tax liability.

(4) Conclusion of examination.

At the conclusion of an office or field examination, the taxpayer is given an opportunity to agree with the findings of the examiner. If the taxpayer does not agree, the examiner will inform the taxpayer of the appeal rights. If the taxpayer does agree with the proposed changes, the examiner will invite the taxpayer to execute either Form 870 or another appropriate agreement form. When the taxpayer agrees with the proposed changes but does not offer to pay any deficiency or additional tax which may be due, the examiner will also invite payment (by check or money order), together with any applicable interest or penalty. If the agreed case involves income, profits, estate, gift, generation-skipping transfer, or Chapter 41, 42, 43, or 44 taxes, the agreement is evidenced by a waiver by the taxpayer of restrictions on assessment and collection of the deficiency, or an acceptance of a proposed overassessment. If the case involves excise or employment taxes or 100 percent penalty, the agreement is evidenced in the form of a consent to assessment and collection of additional tax or penalty and waiver of right to file claim for abatement, or the acceptance of the proposed overassessment. Even though the taxpayer signs an acceptance of a proposed overassessment the district director or the director of the regional service center remains free to assess a deficiency. On the other hand, the taxpayer who has given a waiver may still claim a refund of any part of the deficiency assessed against, and paid by, the taxpayer, or any part of the tax originally assessed and paid by the taxpayer. The taxpayer's acceptance of an agreed overassessment does not prevent the taxpayer from filing a claim and bringing a suit for an additional sum, nor does it preclude the Government from maintaining suit to recover an erroneous refund. As a matter of practice, however, waivers or acceptances ordinarily result in the closing of a case insofar as the Government is concerned.

Treasury Decision 8734

A withholding agent (defined next) is the person responsible for withholding on payments made to a foreign person. However, a withholding agent that can reliably associate the payment with documentation (discussed later) from a U.S. person is not required to withhold.

As a general matter, a withholding agent (whether U.S. or foreign) must ascertain whether the payee is a U.S. or a foreign person. If the payee is a U.S. person, the withholding provisions under chapter 3 of the Code do not apply; however, information reporting under chapter 61 of the Code may apply; further, if a TIN is not furnished in the manner required under section 3406, backup withholding may also apply. If the payee is a foreign person, however, the withholding provisions under chapter 3 of the Code apply instead. To the extent withholding is required under chapter 3 of the Code, or is excused based on documentation that must be provided, none of the information reporting provisions under chapter 61 of the Code apply, nor do the provisions under section 3406.

Long v. Rasmussen (1922)

"The revenue laws are a code or system in regulation of tax assessment and collection. They relate to taxpayers, and not to nontaxpayers. The latter are without their scope. No procedure is prescribed for nontaxpayers, and no attempt is made to annul any of their rights and remedies in due course of law. With them Congress does not assume to deal, and they are neither of the subject nor of the object of the revenue laws...The distinction between persons and things within the scope of the revenue laws and those without is vital."

Economy Plumbing and Heating v. United States (1972)

"Revenue Laws relate to taxpayers [officers, employees, and elected officials of the Federal Government] and not to non-taxpayers [American Citizens/American Nationals not subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government]. The latter are without their scope. No procedures are prescribed for non-taxpayers and no attempt is made to annul any of their Rights or Remedies in due course of law."

26 U.S.C. §7426: Civil actions by persons other than taxpayers

26 U.S. Code § 7426 - Civil actions by persons other than taxpayers

(a) Actions permitted

(1) Wrongful levy

If a levy has been made on property or property has been sold pursuant to a levy, any person (other than the person against whom is assessed the tax out of which such levy arose) who claims an interest in or lien on such property and that such property was wrongfully levied upon may bring a civil action against the United States in a district court of the United States. Such action may be brought without regard to whether such property has been surrendered to or sold by the Secretary.

(2) Surplus proceeds

If property has been sold pursuant to a levy, any person (other than the person against whom is assessed the tax out of which such levy arose) who claims an interest in or lien on such property junior to that of the United States and to be legally entitled to the surplus proceeds of such sale may bring a civil action against the United States in a district court of the United States.

(3) Substituted sale proceeds

If property has been sold pursuant to an agreement described in section 6325(b)(3) (relating to substitution of proceeds of sale), any person who claims to be legally entitled to all or any part of the amount held as a fund pursuant to such agreement may bring a civil action against the United States in a district court of the United States.

(4) Substitution of value

If a certificate of discharge is issued to any person under section 6325(b)(4) with respect to any property, such person may, within 120 days after the day on which such certificate is issued, bring a civil action against the United States in a district court of the United States for a determination of whether the value of the interest of the United States (if any) in such property is less than the value determined by the Secretary. No other action may be brought by such person for such a determination.

[26 U.S.C. §7425(a)]

8.13 Private earnings of PRIVATE humans protected by the Constitution are “exempt by fundamental law”

A synonym for the constitution is “fundamental law”. CONSTITUTIONAL income is earnings paid to a PRIVATE human who is protected by the constitution and the common law. Such earnings are NOT taxable under the Internal Revenue Code and they are referred to as “exempt by fundamental law”. If it is CONSTITUTIONAL income, then it by definition CANNOT be STATUTORY income. PUBLIC privileges and PRIVATE rights cannot coexist at the same time and are mutually exclusive. See:

Why Statutory Civil Law is Law for Government and Not Private Persons, Form #05.037
<https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm>

Earnings “exempt by fundamental law” MUST be considered both by you and the IRS in the computation of “gross income” on a tax return. No IRS form or procedure we have ever seen or read even acknowledges the existence of such an exemption, which is proof that they are communists. Under communism there is no private property and the state owns or at least CONTROLS everything. Ownership and control are synonymous. Our constitution, however, has as its main goal the protection of such property, as described in:

Separation Between Public and Private Course, Form #12.025
<https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm>

Below are authorities cites acknowledging an exemption from taxation of “income exempt by fundamental law”. No such earnings can EVER be considered part of “gross income”:

Treasury Decision 3640, January 1, 1924

“ART. 71. Exclusions from gross income.--The term “gross income” as used in the Act does not include those items of income exempted by statute or by fundamental law. The exemption of such income should not be confused with the reduction of taxable income by the application of allowable deductions.” p. 769.

“ART. 92. Gross income of nonresident alien individuals.--In the case of nonresident alien individuals “gross income” means only the gross income from sources within the United States.... The items of gross income from sources without the United States and therefore not taxable to nonresident aliens or foreign corporations are described in section 217 (c) and article 323." p. 781.

"ART. 311. Definition.--A "nonresident alien individual" means an individual (a) whose residence is not within the United States and (b) who is not a [STATUTORY] citizen of the United States. An alien actually present in the United States who is not a mere transient or sojourner is a resident of the United States for purposes of the income tax. Whether he is a transient or not is determined by his intentions with regard to the length and nature of his stay. A mere floating intention, indefinite as to time, to return to another country is not sufficient to constitute him a transient. If he lives in the United States and has no definite intention as to his stay, he is a resident. One who comes to the United States for a definite purpose which in its nature may be promptly accomplished is a transient; but if his purpose is of such a nature that an extended stay may be necessary for its accomplishment, and to that end the alien makes his home temporarily in the United States, he becomes a resident, though it may be his intention at all times to return to his domicile abroad when the purpose for which he came has been consummated or abandoned. A foreign corporation is one which is not domestic." p. 841.
[Treasury Decision 3640, January 1, 1924]

Regs 45: ART. 71. What excluded from gross income.-- Gross income excludes the items of income specifically exempted by the statute and also certain other kinds of income by statute or fundamental law free from tax. Such tax-free income should not be included in the return of income and need not be mentioned in the return, unless information regarding it is specifically called for, as in the case, for example, of interest on municipal bonds. See article 402.

Regs 62: ART. 71. What excluded from gross income.-- Gross income excludes the items of income specifically exempted by the statute and also certain other kinds of income by statute or fundamental law free from tax. Such tax-free income should not be included in the return of income and need not be mentioned in the return. The exclusion of such income should not be confused with the reduction of taxable income by the application of allowable deductions. See section 212 of the statute and article 21.

Regs 65: ART. 71. Exclusions from gross income.-- The term "gross income" as used in the Act does not include those items of income exempted by statute or by fundamental law. The exemption of such income should not be confused with the reduction of taxable income by the application of allowable deductions.

Regs 69: ART. 71. Exclusions from gross income.-- The term "gross income" as used in the Act does not include those items of income exempted by statute or by fundamental law. The exemption of such income should not be confused with the reduction of taxable income by the application of allowable deductions.

Regs 74: ART. 81. Exclusions from gross income.-- The term "gross income" as used in the Act does not include those items of income exempted by statute or by fundamental law.

Regs 77: ART. 81. Exclusions from gross income.-- The term "gross income" as used in the Act does not include those items of income exempted by statute or by fundamental law.

Regs 86:

ART. 21-1. Meaning of net income.-- The tax imposed by Title I is upon income. Neither income exempted by statute or fundamental law, nor expenses incurred in connection therewith, other than interest, enter into the computation of net income as defined by section 21.

ART. 22 (b) -1. Exemptions-- Exclusions from gross home.-- Certain items of income specified in section 22(b) are exempt from tax and may be excluded from gross income. These items, however, are exempt only to the extent and in the amount specified. No other items are exempt from gross income except (1) those items of income which are, under the Constitution, not taxable by the Federal Government; (2) those items of income which are exempt from tax on income under the provisions of any Act of Congress not inconsistent with or repealed by the Act; (3) the income exempted under the provisions of section 116.

ART. 24-4. Amounts allocable to exempt income, other than interest.--

(a) Class of exempt income.-- As used in this article, the term "class of exempt income" means any class of income, other than interest (whether or not any amount of income of that class or classes is received or accrued), wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by Title I of the Act. Included are any item or class of income, other than interest, constitutionally exempt from the taxes imposed by Title I; any item or class, other than interest, excluded from gross income under any provision of section 22 or section 116 of the Act; and any item or class of income, other than interest, exempt under the provisions of any other law from the taxes imposed by Title I. Thus the income derived from the operation of a lease of State lands, constituting such an instrumentality of the State as to render the income constitutionally exempt from the tax, is a class of exempt income. The expenses or other items referable to the operation of such a lease are allocable to a class of exempt income, even though no income was received or accrued from such operations during the year.

The object of section 24 (a) (5) is to segregate the exempt income from the taxable income, in order that a double exemption may not be obtained through the reduction of taxable income by expenses and other items incurred in the production of item of income wholly exempt from tax. Accordingly, just as exempt items of income are excluded from the computation of gross income under section 22, so this provision of the Act excludes from the computation of deductions under section 23 all items referable to the production of exempt income. Only one exception is made, namely, in the case of exempt interest. (See section 23 (b).)

ART. 115-1. Dividends.— The term “dividends” for the purpose of Title I (except when used in sections 203 (a) (4) and 207 (c) (1)) comprises any distribution in the ordinary course of business, even though extraordinary in amount, made by a domestic or foreign corporation to its shareholders out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913. Among the items entering into the computation of corporate “earnings or profits” for a particular period are all income exempted by statute, income not taxable by the Federal Government under the Constitution, as well all items includible in gross income under section 22 (a) of the Act or corresponding provisions of prior Acts.

Regs 94:

ART. 21-1. Meaning of net income.— The tax imposed by Title I is upon income. Neither income exempted by statute or fundamental law, nor expenses incurred in connection therewith, other than interest, enter into the computation of net income as defined by section 21.

ART. 22(a)-8. Sale of stock and rights.  In the case of stock in respect of which were issued stock subscription rights which did not constitute income under the Constitution, and in the case of such rights, the following rules are to be applied:

ART. 24-4. Amounts allocable to exempt income, other than interest.—

(a) Class of exempt income.—As used in this article, the term “class of exempt income” means any class of income, other than interest (whether or not any amount of income of that class or classes is received or accrued), wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by Title I of the Act. Included are any item or class of income, other than interest, constitutionally exempt from the taxes imposed by Title I; any item or class, other than interest, excluded from gross income under any provision of section 22 or section 116 of the Act; and any item or class of income, other than interest, exempt under the provisions of any other law from the taxes imposed by Title I. Thus the income derived from the operation of a lease of State lands, constituting such an instrumentality of the State as to render the income constitutionally exempt from the tax, is a class of exempt income. The expenses or other items referable to the operation of such a lease are allocable to a class of exempt income, even though no income was received or accrued from such operations during the year.

Section 115. ***

(f) Stock dividends—

(1) GENERAL RULE.— A distribution made by a corporation to its shareholders in its stock or in rights to acquire its stock shall not be treated as a dividend to the extent that it does not constitute income to the shareholder within the meaning of the Sixteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

(h) Effect on Earning and Profits of distribution of stock.

(2) if the distribution was not subject to tax in the hands of such distributee because it did not constitute income to him within the meaning of the Sixteenth Amendment to the Constitution or because exempt to him under section 115(f) of the Revenue Act of 1934 or a corresponding provision of the prior Revenue Act. ART. 115-7. Stock dividends.— A distribution made by a corporation to its shareholders in its stock or in rights to acquire its stock shall be treated as a dividend to the full extent that it constitutes income to the shareholders within the meaning of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution.

ART. 212-1:

(b) United States business office. — The gross income of a nonresident alien individual who at any time within the taxable year was engaged in trade or business within the United States or had an office or place of business therein is not limited to the items of gross income specified in section 211(a), but includes any item of gross income which is treated as income from sources within the United States, except those items which are exempt from taxation by statute or treaty or which are not taxable by the Federal Government under the Constitution. (See sections 22(b), 112, 116, 119, and 212(b) .)

ART. 231-2:

(b) Resident foreign corporation.—The gross income from sources within the United States of a resident foreign corporation is not limited to the items of fixed or determinable annual or periodical income referred to in section 231 (a), but includes every item of gross income which is treated as income from sources within the United States, except those items which are specifically exempt from taxation by statute or treaty or which are not taxable by the Federal Government under the Constitution.

Regs 103:

SEC. 19.21-1. Meaning of net income.— The tax imposed by Title I is upon income. Neither income exempted by statute or fundamental law, nor expenses incurred in connection therewith, other than interest, enter into the computation of net income as defined by section 21.

SEC. 19.22(a)-8. Sale of stock and rights.

In the case of stock in respect of which were issued stock subscription rights which did not constitute income under the Constitution, and in the case of such rights, the following rules are to be applied:

SEC. 19.22 (b) -1. Exemptions– Exclusions from gross income. – Certain items of income specified in section 22(b) are exempt from tax and may be excluded from gross income. These items, however, are exempt only to the extent and in the amount specified. No other items are exempt from gross income except (1) those items of income which are, under the Constitution, not taxable by the Federal Government; (2) those items of income which are exempt from tax on income under the provisions of any Act of Congress still in effect; and (3) the income exempted under the provisions of section 116.

SEC. 19.24-4. Amounts allocable to exempt income, other than interest.– (a) Class of exempt income.– As used in this section, the term "class of exempt income" means any class of income, other than interest (whether or not any amount of income of that class or classes is received or accrued), wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by chapter 1. Included are any item or class of income, other than interest, constitutionally exempt from the taxes imposed by chapter 1; any item or class, other than interest, excluded from gross income under any provision of section 22 or section 116; and any item or class of income, other than interest, exempt under the provisions of any other law from the taxes imposed by chapter 1.

See also SEC. 19.27(i)-1, SEC. 19.113(a)(19)-1, SEC. 19.115-3, SEC. 19.115-7, SEC. 19.115-8, SEC. 116-2 (state employees are immune).

SEC. 19.212-1:

(b) United States business office. – The gross income of a nonresident alien individual who at any time within the taxable year was engaged in trade or business within the United States or had an office or place of business therein is not limited to the items of gross income specified in section 211(a), but includes any item of gross income which is treated as income from sources within the United States, except those items which are exempt from taxation by statute or treaty or which are not taxable by the Federal Government under the Constitution. (See sections 22(b), 112, 116, 119, and 212(b).)

SEC. 19.231-2:

(b) Resident foreign corporation.– The gross income from sources within the United States of a resident foreign corporation is not limited to the items of fixed or determinable annual or periodical income referred to in section 231 (a), but includes every item of gross income which is treated as income from sources within the United States, except those items which are specifically exempt from taxation by statute or treaty or which are not taxable by the Federal Government under the Constitution.

A nonresident alien can claim an item of income is exempt/excluded from "gross income" by statute (such as IRC Section 872) as well. This is much harder for the IRS to argue with than claiming an exemption by fundamental law. They can more easily twist your words if you invoke "fundamental law" to them--they can claim you are making "Constitutional arguments/objections to the income tax." They fight dirty.

You could easily make a case that your wages and salary are not even income, per 26 C.F.R. §1.61-2, let alone "gross income". But it seems simpler to just rely on the exclusions from "gross income" available under IRC Section 872, which accomplishes the same thing. It is not necessary to argue your paycheck is not "income" if it is excluded from "gross income" anyway. The statutory exclusion under 26 U.S.C. §872 is a product of the limitations in the fundamental law on the tax power of Congress.

Some great questions to ask when writing to the IRS about your tax liability is:

1. Do you know what "exempt by fundamental law" means?
2. Did you consider income "exempt by fundamental law" in your computation of "gross income"?
3. If you didn't, why not?

If they refuse to answer the above questions, essentially they are refusing to acknowledge the limits of the statutes OR the constitution upon their behavior. The U.S. Congress defines this type of behavior as the essence of communism itself:

TITLE 50 > CHAPTER 23 > SUBCHAPTER IV > Sec. 841.
Sec. 841. - Findings and declarations of fact

The Congress finds and declares that the Communist Party of the United States [consisting of the IRS, DOJ, and a corrupted federal judiciary], although purportedly a political party, is in fact an instrumentality of a conspiracy to overthrow the [de jure] Government of the United States [and replace it with a de facto government ruled by the judiciary]. It constitutes an authoritarian dictatorship [IRS, DOJ, and corrupted federal judiciary in collusion] within a [constitutional] republic, demanding for itself the rights and [FRANCHISE] privileges [including immunity from prosecution for their wrongdoing in violation of Article 1, Section 9, Clause 8 of the Constitution] accorded to political parties, but denying to all others the liberties [Bill of Rights] guaranteed by the Constitution [Form #10.002]. Unlike political parties, which evolve their policies and programs through public means, by the reconciliation of a wide variety of individual views, and submit those policies and programs to the electorate at large for approval or disapproval, the policies and programs of the Communist Party are secretly [by corrupt judges and the IRS in complete disregard of, Form #05.014, the tax franchise "codes", Form #05.001] prescribed for it by the foreign leaders of the world Communist movement [the IRS and Federal Reserve]. Its members [the Congress, which was terrorized to do IRS bidding by the framing of Congressman Traficant] have no part in determining its goals, and are not permitted to voice dissent to party objectives. Unlike members of political parties, members of the Communist Party are recruited for indoctrination [in the public FOOL system] by homosexuals, liberals, and socialists [with respect to its objectives and methods, and are organized, instructed, and disciplined [by the IRS and a corrupted judiciary] to carry into action slavishly the assignments given them by their hierarchical chieftains. Unlike political parties, the Communist Party [thanks to a corrupted federal judiciary] acknowledges no constitutional or statutory limitations upon its conduct or upon that of its members [ANARCHISTS!, Form #08.020]. The Communist Party is relatively small numerically, and gives scant indication of capacity ever to attain its ends by lawful political means. The peril inherent in its operation arises not from its numbers, but from its failure to acknowledge any limitation as to the nature of its activities, and its dedication to the proposition that the present constitutional Government of the United States ultimately must be brought to ruin by any available means, including resort to; force and violence [or using income taxes]. Holding that doctrine, its role as the agency of a hostile foreign power [the Federal Reserve and the American Bar Association (ABA)] renders its existence a clear present and continuing danger to the security of the United States. It is the means whereby individuals are seduced [illegally KIDNAPPED via identity theft!, Form #05.046] into the service of the world Communist movement [using FALSE information returns and other PERJURIOUS government forms, Form #04.001], trained to do its bidding [by FALSE government publications and statements that the government is not accountable for the accuracy of, Form #05.007], and directed and controlled [using FRANCHISES illegally enforced upon NONRESIDENTS, Form #05.030] in the conspiratorial performance of their revolutionary services. Therefore, the Communist Party should be outlawed

If they refuse to answer the above questions, essentially they are refusing to acknowledge the limits of the statutes OR the constitution upon their behavior. It is not their job to compute your "gross income"---that is YOUR job. If you don't do that, you are in no position to complain about how they compute your tax based on available gross income information.

9.1 Generally

16 C.J.S., §65

"Necessity of Injury in General"

"In order to have standing to contest the validity of legislation or governmental action, the claimant must show an injury in fact and that he has been deprived of a constitutional right, or that he is adversely affected by a statute or governmental action."

[16 Corpus Juris Secundum, Constitutional Law, §65]

Black's Law Dictionary: Damage

"DAMAGE. Loss, injury, or deterioration, caused by the negligence, design, or accident of one person to another, in respect of the latter's person or property. The word is to be distinguished from its plural, "--damages,"--which means a compensation in money for a loss or damage. An injury produces a right in them who have suffered any damage by it to demand reparation of such damage from the authors of the injury. By damage, we understand every loss or diminution of what is a man's own, occasioned by the fault of another. 1 Ruth. Inst. 399.

"The harm, detriment, or loss sustained by reason of an injury. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Fields, 188 Miss. 725, 195 So. 489, 490.

"Synonymous with "condemnation money." [Cite omitted.] "Injury". [Cite omitted.] "Loss,"" [Cite omitted]. [Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, p. 466]

Black's Law Dictionary: Damages

"DAMAGES. A pecuniary compensation or indemnity, which may be recovered in the courts by any person who has suffered loss, detriment, or injury, whether to his person, property, or rights, through the unlawful act or omission or negligence of another." [Cites omitted.]

"Compensatory damages

"Compensatory damages are such as will compensate the injured party for the injury sustained, and nothing more; such as will simply make good or replace the loss caused by the wrong or injury." [Cite omitted.]

"Contingent damages

"Where a demurrer has been filed to one or more counts in a declaration, and its consideration is postponed, and meanwhile other counts in the same declaration, not demurred to, are taken as issues, and tried, and damages awarded upon them, such damages are called "contingent damages.""

"Exemplary damages

"Exemplary damages are damages on an increased scale, awarded to the plaintiff over and above what will barely compensate him for his property loss, where the wrong done to him was aggravated by circumstances of violence, oppression, malice, fraud, or wanton and wicked conduct on the part of the defendant, and are intended to solace the plaintiff for mental anguish, laceration of his feelings, shame, degradation, or other aggravations of the original wrong, or else to punish the defendant for his evil behavior or to make an example of him, for which reason they are also called "punitive" or "punitory" damages or "vindictive" damages, and (vulgarly) "smart-money." [Cites omitted.] It is said that the idea of punishment does not enter into the definition; the term being employed to mean an increased award in view of supposed aggravation of the injury to the feelings of plaintiff by the wanton or reckless act of defendant. [Cite omitted.]

"General damages

"General damages are such as the law itself implies or presumes to have accrued from the wrong complained of, for the reason that they are its immediate, direct, and proximate result, or such as necessarily result from the injury, or such as did in fact result from the wrong, directly and proximately, and without reference to the special character, condition, or circumstances of the plaintiff." [Cites omitted.]

[Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, pp. 466-469]

Black's Law Dictionary: Duress

"DURESS, n. Unlawful constraint exercised upon a man whereby he is forced to do some act that he otherwise would not have done. It may be either "duress of imprisonment," where the person is deprived of his liberty in order to force him to compliance, or by violence, beating, or other actual injury, or duress per minas, consisting in threats of imprisonment or great physical injury or death. Duress may also include the same injuries, threats, or restraint exercised upon the man's wife, child, or parent. [Cites omitted.]

"Duress consists in any illegal imprisonment, or legal imprisonment used for an illegal purpose, or threats of bodily or other harm, or other means amounting to or tending to coerce the will of another, and actually inducing him to do an act contrary to his free will. [Cites omitted.] And it is never "duress" to threaten to do that which a party has a legal right to do. [Cites omitted.] Such as, instituting or threatening to institute civil actions." [Cites omitted.]

Black's Law Dictionary: Equity

"EQUITY. In its broadest and most general signification, this term denotes the spirit and the habit of fairness, justness, and right dealing which would regulate the intercourse of men with men, --the rule of doing to all others as we desire them to do to us; or, as it is expressed by Justinian, "to live honestly, to harm nobody, to render to every man his due." Inst. 1, 1, 3. It is therefore the synonym of natural right or justice. But in this sense its obligation is ethical rather than jural, and its discussion belongs to the sphere of morals. It is grounded in the precepts of the conscience, not in any sanction of positive law.

"In a restricted sense, the word denotes equal and impartial justice as between two persons whose rights or claims are in conflict; justice, that is, as ascertained by natural reason or ethical insight, but independent of the formulated body of law. This is not a technical meaning of the term, except in so far as courts which administer equity seek to discover it by the agencies above mentioned, or apply it beyond the strict lines of positive law. See Miller v. Kennirton, 86 Me. 550, 30 A. 114.

"In a still more restricted sense, it is a system of jurisprudence, or branch of remedial justice, administered by certain tribunals, distinct from the common-law courts and empowered to decree "equity" in the sense last above given. Here it becomes a complex of well-settled and well-understood rules, principles, and precedents. Isabelle Properties v. Edelman, 297 N.Y.S. 572, 574, 164 Misc. 192.

Black's Law Dictionary: Mandamus

"MANDAMUS. Lat. We command. This is the name of a writ (formerly a high prerogative writ) which issues from a court of superior jurisdiction, and is directed to a private or municipal corporation, or any of its officers, or to an executive, administrative or judicial officer, or to an inferior court, commanding the performance of a particular act therein specified, and belonging to his or their public, official, or ministerial duty, or directing the restoration of the complainant to rights or privileges of which he has been illegally deprived." [Cite omitted.]

"Writ of "mandamus" is summary writ issued from court of competent jurisdiction to command performance of specific duty which relator is entitled to have performed. [Cite omitted.]

"It is legal, not equitable, remedy, and, when issued, is an inflexible peremptory command to do a particular thing." [Cite omitted.]

[Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, p. 1113]

Black's Law Dictionary: Common-Law Remedy

"COMMON-LAW REMEDY. This phrase, within the meaning of U.S. Judicial Code 1911, §256 (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, 36 Stat. 1100, see Historical and Revision Notes under 28 U.S.C.A. §1333), was not limited to remedies in the common-law courts, but embraced all methods of enforcing rights and redressing injuries known to the common or statutory law. Kennerson v. Thames Towboat Co., 89 Conn. 367, 94 A. 372, 375, L.R.A. 1916A, 436. See, also, Northern Pacific S. S. Co. v. Industrial Ace. Commission of California, 174 Cal. 346, 163 P. 199, 202. See Notes of Decisions under 28 U.S.C.A. §1333."

[Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, p. 347]

Black's Law Dictionary: Administrative Remedy

"ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDY. One not judicial, but provided by commission or board created by legislative power." [Cite omitted.]

[Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, p. 67]

28 U.S.C. §1343

"(a) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action authorized by law to be commenced by any person:

"(1) To recover damages for injury to his person or property, or because of the deprivation of any right or privilege of a citizen of the United States, by any act done in furtherance of any conspiracy mentioned in section 1985 of Title 42;

"(2) To recover damages from any person who fails to prevent or to aid in preventing any wrongs mentioned in section 1985 of Title 42 which he had knowledge were about to occur and power to prevent;

"(3) To redress the deprivation, under color of any State law, statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage, of any right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States or by any Act of Congress providing for equal rights of citizens or of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States;

"(4) To recover damages or to secure equitable or other relief under any Act of Congress providing for the protection of civil rights, including the right to vote.

"(b) For purposes of this section--

"(1) the District of Columbia shall be considered to be a State; and

"(2) any Act of Congress applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia shall be considered to be a statute of the District of Columbia."

[28 U.S.C. §1343]

Coles v. Com'rs of Washington Co. (Apr. 5, 1886)

"In State v. Cronkhite, supra, the statute under consideration related to the reimbursement of purchasers where tax sales are adjudged void, and it was there held that "where a tax sale has been declared void a moral obligation arises to refund the purchaser's money."

[Coles v. Com'rs of Washington Co., 35 Minn. 124, 27 N.W. 497 (1886)]

Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ferguson (May 28, 1901)

"Though courts should and do extend the application of the rules of the common law to the new conditions of advancing civilization, they may not rightfully create a new principle unknown to the common law, nor abrogate a known one. If new conditions cannot properly be met by the application of existing laws, the supplying of needful new laws is the province of the legislative, not the judicial, department."

infringes another's legal rights should pay both compensatory and punitive damages."
 [Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ferguson, 60 N.E. 674 (1901)]

Harrigan v. Gilchrist (Apr. 19, 1904)

"The jurisdiction of courts of equity is defined by principles, not precedents; the former govern, the latter illustrate."

""When it appears that the court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit, it will take notice of the defect whether objection is made or not, and will dismiss or stay proceedings ex mero motu, and it is its duty to do so without determining any other matter involved in the litigation."

"The instances are very rare where any court has ventured to invade this salutary doctrine for the purpose of saving a party from the consequences, however severe. It would be difficult to assign any justification for such an invasion that would leave it free from condemnation as an act of usurpation, as it goes to the question of power. A court is all-powerful within its jurisdiction, but is absolutely powerless in any legitimate sense when acting outside thereof."

"How vast that is in its chancery field can best be appreciated by applying thereto the standard of measurement which the distinguished men who have been significant in the development of our system have taught us must be used to span it: "Equity will not suffer a wrong without a remedy." The term "wrong" in the maxim, as before indicated, has here a significance which does not reach violations of mere moral rights. Any other wrong is said to involve a corresponding primary legal or equitable right, with and equitable or legal remedy, according to circumstances, for the former, and an equitable remedy for the latter. Pomeroy, Eq.Jur. 424."

[Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 121 Wis. 127, 99 N.W. 909 (1904)]

People ex rel. Eckerson v. Board of Education, etc., of School Dist. No. 1 of Haverstraw (May 1, 1908)

"The mere fact that a tax was voluntarily paid does not debar the Legislature from providing for a refund of that part of it which was excessive; and hence a taxpayer is not precluded by voluntarily paying a tax from obtaining relief under a statute relating to the refunding of excessive taxes not previously refunded, which were levied and paid upon a basis thereafter pronounced improper by the courts, where the statute did not limit its application to involuntary or compulsory payments."

"Legislative recognition of the existence of a moral obligation to refund excessive taxes to a taxpayer, and the giving it legal effect by a retroactive statute, is within the legislative power."

"The legislative policy in enacting a law is not the concern of the courts, so long as the legislative enactment is within the Constitution, and, though the practical effect of an act may be considered by the courts in arriving at the legislative intent where that requires interpretation, the courts will not nullify or limit a statute under the guise of interpretation because they may not approve of its policy or scope."

The obligation to refund excessive taxes levied and collected carries with it the right to interest as a matter of course."

Coe v. Armour Fertilizer Works (May 3, 1915)

"A person is not precluded from complaining that the taking of his property conformably to state legislation, to satisfy an alleged debt or obligation, was without the notice and hearing essential under the due process of law clause of U.S. Const., 14th Amend., because, in his particular case, due process of law would lead to the same result, because he had no adequate defense on the merits."

"Extra-official or casual notice, or a hearing granted as a matter of favor or discretion in proceedings for the taking of one's property to satisfy his alleged debt or obligation, is not a substantial substitute for the due process of law which U.S. Const., 14th Amend., requires."

[Coe v. Armour Fertilizer Works, 237 U.S. 413, 423, 35 S.Ct. 625, 628, 59 L.Ed. 1027 (1915)]

State v. County Com'rs of Fairfield County (July 27, 1923)

"Mandamus will lie to compel the payment of money by public officials, where the duty to pay is plain, the claim just, undisputed in amount, and based on a clear legal right, and the county commissioners of such portion of their license fees as liquor dealers were entitled to, under Pub. Acts 1919, c. 164, §2, after the going into effect of the War-Time Prohibition Act."

"The court did not err in issuing the writ. The statute is mandatory. It leaves nothing to the discretion of the commissioners."

The application for the writ alleges facts upon which it became the statutory duty of the commissioners to pay the relator a fixed sum, and alleges that they refused to pay it. State ex rel. Bulkeley v. Williams, 68 Conn. 131, 35 Atl. 24, 421, 48 L.R.A. 465, is exactly in point.

"It is said that the relator has an adequate remedy at law, because he might obtain a judgment against the commissioners in an action at law. But the remedy at law is inadequate, because ineffectual and incomplete. The judgment could not be collected by levy of execution and could be collected only by mandamus, or by an action on the commissioners' bonds. To avoid circuity of action, and because the state is interested in compelling its agents to obey its commands, it is well settled that mandamus will lie to compel the payment of money by public officials, when the duty to pay it is plain, and the claim is just, undisputed in amount, and based on a clear legal right."

.. it is apparent not only from the language of the act, but from the circumstances surrounding the passage of the act, that it is not in the nature of a vote of a gratuity, but in the nature of a remission of a tax, and the power of the General Assembly to remit taxes within constitutional limits being unquestionable, the real issue is whether this particular remission is a valid exercise of powers incidental to the taxing power."

""When the license fee is imposed solely or primarily for * * * raising revenue, it is the imposition of a tax no matter by what name it may be called." State v. Murphy, 90 Conn. 662, 665, 98 Atl. 343, 345."

Old Colony Trust Co. v. Seattle (June 1, 1926)

""But immunity from suit is a high attribute of sovereignty--a prerogative of the State itself--which cannot be availed of by public agents when sued for their own torts. The 11th Amendment was not intended to afford them freedom from liability in any case where, under color of their office, they have injured one of the State's citizens. To grant them such immunity would be to create a privileged class free from liability from wrongs inflicted or injuries threatened. Public agents must be liable to the law, unless they are to be put above the law." [Citing Hopkins v. Clemson Agri. College, 221 U.S. 6361." [Old Colony Trust Co. v. "Constitutional limitations regarding assessment and collection of taxes do not obtain with reference to appropriations of money out of state treasury."

"Statute authorizing' repayment of illegal inheritance taxes collected does not invade judicial power of state (Stat. §72.26; Const. art. 7, §2)."

"In constitutional provision regarding time of filing claims against state, word "claim" means legal claim, a demand as of right (Const. art. 8, §2)."

"Person paying illegal tax under duress has legal claim for its repayment, notwithstanding money has gone into treasury and has been paid out by disbursing officers."

"Duress in payment of illegal tax may be either express or implied, and legal duty to refund exists in both instances."

"In absence of contrary statutory provision, it is immaterial whether illegal tax is paid under protest."

"A person who pays an illegal tax under duress has a legal claim for its repayment. In this connection it is held in some jurisdictions that a taxpayer cannot maintain an action to recover taxes illegally exacted after the money has gone into the treasury and been paid out by the disbursing officers, but we think the sounder rule is to the contrary. 26 R.C.L. p. 454, §410; *Commonwealth v. "Strangers to contract cannot interpose party's noncompliance with statute of frauds as defense to action for unjustifiable interference with contractual relation."

"The complaint is sufficient in law. The action sounds in tort. The ways in which one may become liable to an action as for tort are the following: (1) By actually doing to the prejudice of another something he ought not to do; (2) by doing something he may rightfully do, but wrongfully or negligently doing it by such means or at such times or in such manner that another is injured; and (3) by neglecting to do something which he ought to do, whereby another suffers an injury. Cooley on Torts (4th Ed.) §44."

"The primary inquiry therefore is, What constitutes a wrong that the law will redress? All wrong may be considered as merely a privation of right, and the plain, natural remedy for every species of wrong is the being put in possession of that right whereof the party injured is deprived. This may either be effected by a specific delivery or restoration of the subject-matter in dispute to the legal owner, or, where that is not possible, or at least not an adequate remedy, by making the sufferer a pecuniary satisfaction in damages. 3 Blackstone's Commentaries, 116. There is no necessary identity, or even relation, of legal right and moral right. Legal right must be established on principles of general utility. A legal right may be said to be a well-founded claim, enforced by sanctions. By legal rights are intended those to which the state gives its sanction. The sanction it gives is the sanction of remedies; so that a legal right may be said to be a claim which can be enforced by legal means against the persons or the community whose duty it is to respect it. 1 Cooley's Blackstone, pp. 109, 113, note. "A tort or a wrong may be spoken of either as a breach or violation of a duty or an infringement of a right." 1 laggard Torts 2."

"Plaintiff contends that reasonable cause for its failure to file said returns on time existed because it relied on the advice of its counsel and of the special committee of which he was a member, and all of whose members were reputable attorneys. My consideration of this contention must begin with an acknowledgement of the now accepted rule, which is well set forth in 10 Mertens, Law of Federal Income Taxation (Zimet revision 1958), §55.27:

"It may be stated generally that a taxpayer who acts upon the advice of reputable counsel is not to be considered guilty of either fraud, or negligence, or delinquency. It has been indicated that the taxpayer's interpretation of a transaction may be viewed in the light of what was reasonable at the time the transaction occurred. The fact that the taxpayer seeks and obtains advice from counsel tends to show that he is acting in good faith and that he avails himself of the best means at his command to determine his liability honestly and fairly."

Sniadach v. Family Finance Corp. of Bay View (June 9, 1969)

"Supreme Court does not sit as a superlegislative body and is not concerned with what philosophy a state should or should not embrace."

"A procedural rule that may satisfy due process for attachments in general does not necessarily satisfy procedural due process in every case."

"A procedural rule that may satisfy due process for attachments in general, see McKay v. McInnes, 279 U.S. 820, 49 S.Ct. 344, 73 L.Ed. 975, does not necessarily satisfy procedural due process in every case. The fact that a procedure would pass muster under a feudal regime does not mean it gives necessary protection to all property in its modern forms. We deal here with wages--a specialized type of property presenting distinct problems in our economic system. We turn then to the nature of that property and problems of procedural due process.

"A prejudgment garnishment of the Wisconsin type is a taking which may impose tremendous hardship on wage earners with families to support. Until a recent Act of Congress, §304 of which forbids discharge of employees on the ground that their wages have been garnished, garnishment often meant the loss of a job. Over and beyond that was the great drain on family income. As stated by Congressman Reuss:

""The idea of wage garnishment in advance of judgment, of trustee process, of wage attachment, or whatever it is called is a most inhuman doctrine. It compels the wage earner, trying to keep his family together, to be driven below the poverty level."

"Recent investigations of the problem have disclosed the grave injustices made possible by prejudgment garnishment whereby the sole opportunity to be heard comes after the taking. Congressman Sullivan, Chairman of the House Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs who held extensive hearings on this and related problems stated:

""What we know from our study of this problem is that in a vast number of cases the debt is a fraudulent one, saddled on a poor ignorant person who is trapped in an easy credit nightmare, in which he is charged double for something he could not pay for even if the proper price was called for, and then hounded into giving up his pound of flesh, and being fired besides." 114 Cong.Rec. 1832.

"The lever of the creditor on the wage earner is enormous. The creditor tenders not only the original debt but the "collection fees" incurred by his attorneys in the garnishment proceedings:

""The debtor whose wages are tied up by a writ of garnishment, and who is usually in need of money, is in no position to resist demands for collection fees. If the debt is small, the debtor will be under considerable pressure to pay the debt and collection charges in order to get his wages back. If the debt is large, he will often sign a new contract of 'payment schedule' which incorporates these additional charges."

"Apart from those collateral consequences, it appears that in Wisconsin the statutory exemption granted the wage earner is "generally insufficient to support the debtor for any one week."

"The result is that the prejudgment garnishment of the Wisconsin type may as a practical matter drive a wage-earning family to the wall. Where the taking of one's property is so obvious, it needs no extended argument to conclude that absent notice and a prior hearing (cf. Coe v. Armour Fertilizer Works, 237 U.S. 413, 423, 35 S.Ct. 625, 628, 59 L.Ed. 1027) this prejudgment garnishment procedure violates the fundamental principles of due process."

[Footnote 9.] ""For a poor man--and whoever heard of the wage of the affluent being attached?--to lose part of his salary often means his family will go without the essentials. No man sits by while his family goes hungry or without heat. He either files for consumer bankruptcy and tries to begin again, or just quits his job and goes on relief. Where is the equity, the common sense, in such a process?" Congressman Gonzales, 114 Cong.Rec. 1833. For the impact of garnishment on personal bankruptcies see H.R. Rep. No.

1040, 90th Cong., 1st Sess., 20-21." [End footnote.]

"Central meaning of "procedural due process" is that parties whose rights are to be affected are entitled to be heard and, in order that they may enjoy that right, they must first be notified."

"Procedural due process includes right to notice and opportunity to be heard at meaningful time and in meaningful manner. "

"Constitutional right to be heard is basic aspect of duty of government to follow a fair process of decision making when it acts to deprive a person of his possessions; purpose of requirement is not only to ensure abstract fair play to the individual but to protect his use and possession of property from arbitrary encroachment--to minimize substantively unfair or mistaken deprivations of property, a danger that is especially great when the state seizes goods simply upon application of and for benefit of private party."

"Prohibition against deprivation of property without due process of law reflects the high value, embedded in our constitutional and political history, that we place on a person's right to enjoy what is his, free of governmental interference."

"Right to notice and hearing as to seizure of person's goods must be granted at time when deprivation can still be prevented inasmuch as, even though at later hearing his possessions can be returned to him or damages may be awarded for wrongful deprivation, no later hearing and no damage award can undo fact that arbitrary taking that was subject to right of procedural due process has already occurred."

"Right of party in possession of property to be heard before he is deprived of it does not depend upon an advance showing that he will surely prevail at the hearing and it is enough to invoke procedural safeguards of Fourteenth Amendment that a significant property interest is at stake, whatever the ultimate outcome of a hearing on the contractual right to continued possession and use of the goods."

"Due process requirement of hearing before deprivation of property takes effect is not limited to protection of only a few types of property interest."

"The rather ordinary costs in time, effort and expense resulting from hearing held prior to deprivation of property interest cannot outweigh the constitutional right to such a hearing."

"Procedural due process is not intended to promote efficiency or accommodate all possible interests; it is intended to protect the particular interests of the person whose possessions are about to be taken."

"Outright seizure of property interest without opportunity for prior hearing is justified only when a seizure is directly necessary to secure an important governmental or general public interest, there is a special need for very prompt action and the state keeps strict control over its monopoly of legitimate force, that is, the person initiating the seizure has been a government official responsible for determining, under standards of a narrowly drawn statute, that it is necessary and justified in the particular instance."

"In civil, no less than criminal area, courts indulge every reasonable presumption against waiver of procedural due process rights."

"Waiver of constitutional rights in any context must, at the very least, be clear and courts will not be concerned with involuntariness or intelligence of waiver when the contractual language relied upon does not even, on its face, amount to a waiver."

"Essential reason for requirement of prior hearing before depriving person of property interest is to prevent unfair and mistaken deprivations of property; the hearing must provide a real test and due process is afforded only by the kings of notice and hearing that are aimed at establishing the validity, or at least the probable validity, of the underlying claim against the alleged debtor."

"The constitutional right to be heard is a basic aspect of the duty of government to follow a fair process of decisionmaking when it acts to deprive a person of his possessions. The purpose of this requirement is not only to ensure abstract fair play to the individual. Its purpose, more particularly, is to protect his use and possession of property from arbitrary encroachment--to minimize substantively unfair or mistaken deprivations of property, a danger that is especially great when the State seizes goods simply upon application of and for benefit of private party. So viewed, the prohibition against the deprivation of property without due process of law reflects the high value, embedded in our constitutional and political history, that we place on a person's right to enjoy what is his, free of governmental interference. See Lynch v. Household Finance Corp., 405 U.S. 538, 552, 92 S.Ct. 1113, 1122, 31 L.Ed.2d. 424."

"If the right to notice and a hearing is to serve its full purpose, then, it is clear that it must be granted at a time when the deprivation can still be prevented. At a later hearing, an individual's possessions can be returned to him if they were unfairly or mistakenly taken in the first place. Damages may even be awarded to him for the wrongful deprivation. But no later hearing and no damage award can undo the fact that the arbitrary taking that was subject to the right of procedural due process has already occurred. "This Court has not . . . embraced the general proposition that a wrong may be done if it can be undone." Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U.S. 645, 647, 92 S.Ct. 1208, 1210, 31 L.Ed.2d. 551."

"No doubt, there may be many gradations in the "importance" or "necessity" of various consumer goods. Stoves could be compared to television sets, or beds could be compared to tables. But if the root principle of procedural due process is to be applied with objectivity, it cannot rest on such distinctions. The fourteenth Amendment speaks of "property" generally. And, under our free-enterprise system, an individual's choices in the marketplace are respected, however unwise they may seem to someone else. It is not the business of a court adjudicating due process rights to make its own critical evaluation of those choices and protect only the ones that, by its own lights, are "necessary."

"There are "extraordinary situations" that justify postponing notice and opportunity for a hearing. Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S., at 379, 91 S.Ct., at 786. These situations, however, must be truly unusual. Only in a few limited situations has this Court allowed outright seizure without opportunity for a prior hearing. First, in each case, the seizure has been directly necessary to secure an important governmental or general public interest. Second, there has been a special need for very prompt action. Third, the State has kept strict control over its monopoly of legitimate force; the person initiating the seizure has been a government official responsible for determining, under the standards of a narrowly drawn statute, that it was necessary and justified in the particular instance. Thus, the Court has allowed summary seizure of property to collect the internal revenue of the United States, to meet the needs of a national war effort, to protect against the economic disaster of a bank failure, and to protect the public from misbranded drugs and contaminated food."

"It is a fundamental tenet of criminal law that an honest mistake of fact negatives criminal intent, when a defendant's acts would be lawful if the facts were as he supposed them to be. A mistake of law, on the other hand, generally will not excuse the commission of an offense. A defendant's error as to his authority to engage in particular activity, if based upon a mistaken view of legal requirements (or ignorance thereof), is a mistake of law. Typically, the fact that he relied upon the erroneous advice of another is not an exculpatory circumstance. He is still deemed to have acted with a culpable state of mind."

[United States v. Barker, 546 F.2d. 940 (1976)]

Mathes v. C.I.R. (July 10, 1978)

"Taxpayers also assert they were denied their Seventh Amendment right to trial by jury before the Tax Court. The Seventh Amendment preserves the right to jury trial "in suits at common law." Since there was no right of action at common law against a sovereign, enforceable by jury trial or otherwise, there is no constitutional right to a jury trial in a suit against the U.S. See 9 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure §2314, 68-69 (1971). Thus, there is a right to jury trial in actions against the United States only if a statute so provides. Congress has not so provided when the taxpayer elects not to pay the assessment and sue for a redetermination in the tax court. For a taxpayer to obtain a trial by jury, he must pay the tax allegedly owed and sue for refund in the district court. 28 U.S.C. §§2412 & 1346(a)(1). The law is therefore clear that a taxpayer who elects to bring his suit in the tax court has no right, statutory or constitutional, to a trial by jury. Phillips v. Commissioner, 283 U.S. 589, 599 n. 9, 51 S.Ct. 608, 75 L.Ed. 1289 (1931); Wickwire v. Reincke, 275 U.S. 101, 105-106, 48 S.Ct. 43, 72 L.Ed. 184 (1927); *Dori v. [Lincoln Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. State, 632 S.W.2d. 227 (1982)]

United States v. Hylton (June 10, 1982)

"Shortly after 6:00 p.m. on the evening of November 4, 1981, IRS special agents Michael E. Rentsch and Thomas E. Artru entered the Hylton premises to inquire of the whereabouts of the defendant's son, David Hylton. They were met by the defendant at the front of a patio adjoining the defendant's house, and a conversation ensued, after which the agents departed. Both the agents and the defendant tape-recorded the conversation, and there is no dispute as to what transpired.

"The following day, the defendant, armed with her recording, filed a criminal complaint against the agents with Chambers County Attorney Eugene T. Jenson. The complaint was factually accurate and properly alleged the elements of criminal trespass pursuant to Tex. Penal Code Ann. tit. 7 §30.05 (Vernon Supp. 1980-81). Subsequently, criminal prosecution in state court was commenced by information. The action was removed to this Court where after the presentation of the state's case-in-chief, the Court, relying upon Foster v. United States, 296 F.2d. 65, 67 (5th Cir. 1962), entered judgment of acquittal."

"The issue before the Court is whether the defendant can be convicted of violating 26 U.S.C. §7212(a) for filing a nonfraudulent criminal complaint against federal agents with appropriate local law enforcement officials. The gravamen of the Government's case is that the defendant, in lodging her complaint, did not act in a good faith assertion of her own rights, but rather with the specific purpose and intent of obstructing an IRS investigation into the criminal liability of her son. Hence, the Government contends that she can be convicted because she acted with an obstructionist's heart.

"The Court disagrees. Even assuming the evidence to have established beyond any doubt that the defendant acted with the sole purpose of obstructing the investigation of the two IRS agents, the Court finds the application of the criminal law to the facts and circumstances of this case constitutes an impermissible infringement upon the first amendment right of the defendant to petition the government for redress of grievances. Accordingly, even construing the evidence and reasonable inferences therefrom in a manner supportive of the jury's verdict, the Court holds that the defendant has committed no offense proscribed by 26 U.S.C. §7212(a)."

"The first amendment right to petition for redress of grievances is "among the most precious of the liberties safeguarded by the Bill of Rights." [Cites omitted.] There can be no doubt that the filing of a legitimate criminal complaint with local law enforcement officials constitutes an exercise of the first amendment right."

"Despite the defendant's questionable motivation and intent, the Court holds that the challenged conduct was constitutionally protected under the first amendment. It is well settled that liability can be imposed for activities ostensibly consisting of petitioning the government for redress of grievances only if the petitioning is a "sham," and the real purpose is not to obtain governmental action, but otherwise to obtain an unlawful result. ... It is clear that the defendant genuinely sought governmental response to her complaint against the IRS agents, namely, the filing of criminal charges by officials of Chambers County. In such a situation, the defendant's intent or purpose in lodging the complaint is of no moment."

"In sum, the Court finds that the defendant's activities alleged by the Government to be in violation of 26 U.S.C. §7212(a) all fall within the aegis of constitutionally protected expression under the first amendment. It is irrelevant to the applicability of the right to petition that its exercise might have the effect of intimidating or impeding federal officials about whom complaints are made, or even that the complainer might be aware of and pleased by such prospects."

United States v. Boyle (Jan. 9, 1985)

"This case is not one in which a taxpayer has relied on the erroneous advice of counsel concerning a question of law. Courts have frequently held that "reasonable cause" is established when a taxpayer shows that he reasonably relied on the advice of an accountant or attorney that it was unnecessary to file a return, even when such advice turned out to have been mistaken. [Cites omitted.] This court also has implied that, in such a situation, reliance on the opinion of a tax adviser may constitute reasonable cause for failure to file a return."

When an accountant or attorney advises a taxpayer on a matter of tax law, such as whether a liability exists, it is reasonable for the taxpayer to rely on that advice. Most taxpayers are not competent to discern error in the substantive advice of an accountant or attorney. To require the taxpayer to challenge the attorney, to seek a "second opinion," or to try to monitor counsel on the provisions of the Code himself would nullify the very purpose of seeking the advice of a presumed expert in the first place. See Haywood Lumber, supra, at 771. "Ordinary business care and prudence" do not demand such actions."

United States v. Reinis (July 14, 1986)

"Reporting Act and its regulations do not impose duty on participant in currency transaction with bank to inform bank of nature of transaction."

"Defendant who ran money laundering operation, and with agents, paid cash to purchase cashier's checks from various banks, was not guilty of conspiring to violate Reporting Act, where each currency transaction involved less than $10,000."

"Criminal penalties for failure to report currency transactions under Reporting Act can attach only upon violations of regulations promulgated by Secretary of the Treasury."

"Reporting Act did not require bank to treat as single transaction or to report defendant's cashier check purchases, made on ten different days, which totalled more than $10,000, and thus, defendant was not guilty of aiding and abetting bank's failure to report currency transactions as required by Act, conspiring to violate Act, or causing concealment of material fact from Internal Revenue Service."

"As the district court noted, supervisory liability may be imposed when an official has actual or constructive notice of unconstitutional practices and demonstrates "gross negligence" or "deliberate indifference" by failing to act. McCann v. Coughlin, 698 F.2d. 112, 125 (2d Cir. 1983)."

"Punitive damages' may be available in section 1983 actions when conduct is motivated by evil motive or intent or when it demonstrates reckless or callous indifference to federally protected rights. Smith v. Wade, 461 U.S. 30, 56, 103 S.Ct. 1625, 1640, 75 L.Ed.2d. 632 (1983). The jury awarded punitive damages because it found that the defendants' conduct was malicious, wanton, or oppressive."

Heller v. Plave (July 18, 1990)

"If taxpayer can establish that she relied on advice and approval of her tax preparer--the so-called "reliance defense"--she will not be convicted of tax evasion. See e.g., Bursten v. United States, 395 F.2d. 976, 981-982 (5th Cir. 1968)." Footnote 3, p. 1557.

"Absolute immunity protects certain government officials from prosecution. Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409, 96 S.Ct. 984, 47 L.Ed.2d. 128 (1976). Its justification in the judicial arena is that certain decisions must be made freely and without fear of personal liability for error."

"Imbler held that a prosecutor cannot be held personally liable for her "decisions to initiate a prosecution" or for her presentation of the state's case at trial. [Cite omitted.] Derived from common law prosecutorial immunity, absolute immunity affords wide discretion to prosecutors and judges in the conduct of trials and in the presentation of evidence. [Cites omitted.] But absolute immunity ends with the prosecutor's role as an advocate. Even a prosecutor will lose absolute immunity when her duties are merely investigative."

"The Defendants, as IRS agents, are not prosecutors, nor are the cases granting absolute immunity to prosecutors helpful to them. Rather, their duties are merely investigative. They gather facts and refer cases to prosecutors, who then decide whether or not to prosecute. "Considering these duties, an IRS agent is analogous to a complaining witness at common law--both are detached from the judicial process by the interposition of the prosecutor. For this reason, a complaining witness was not entitled to absolute immunity at common law. [Cites omitted.] It follows that the Defendants, IRS agents, should not be entitled to absolute immunity on the same basis."

"Accordingly, we find that when IRS agents investigate and refer cases for criminal investigations, they do not enjoy absolute immunity for their actions. Accord, Cameron v. I.R.S., 773 F.2d. 126, 128 (7th Cir. 1985) (IRS agents are not entitled to absolute immunity)."

"A supervisor can be held liable for civil rights violations where his "conduct is causally related to constitutional violation committed by his subordinate." Greason v. Kemp, 891 F.2d. 836 (citing, Wilson v. Attaway, 757 F.2d. 1227, 1241 (11th Cir. 1985)) (personal participation is not required to impose liability for a civil rights deprivation. There must be some causal connection between the actions of the superior and the alleged deprivation); see also Rizzo v. Goode, 423 U.S. 362, 375-76, 96 S.Ct. 598, 606 L.Ed.2d. 561, 572 (1976) (for liability under §1983, supervisory officials must have direct responsibility for actions of officials who had engaged in misconduct)."

Cheek v. United States (Jan. 8, 1991)

"Based on the notion that the law is definite and knowable, the common law presumed that every person knew the law. This common-law rule has been applied by the Court in numerous cases construing criminal statutes. [Cites omitted].

"The proliferation of statutes and regulations has sometimes made it difficult for the average citizen to know and comprehend the extent of the duties and obligations imposed by the tax laws. Congress has accordingly softened the impact of the common-law presumption by making specific intent to violate the law an element of certain federal criminal tax offenses. Thus, the Court almost 60 years ago interpreted the statutory term "willfully" as used in the federal criminal tax statutes as carving out an exception to the traditional rule. This special treatment of criminal tax offenses is largely due to the complexity of the tax laws." p. 609.

"Willfulness, as construed by our prior decisions in criminal tax cases, requires the Government to prove that the law imposed a duty on the defendant, that the defendant knew of the duty, and that he voluntarily and intentionally violated that duty." p. 610.

"Defendant's claimed good-faith belief need not be objectively reasonable in order for it to negate Government's evidence purporting to show defendant's awareness of his duties under the tax laws." p. 605.

""Seizure" of property occurs when there is some meaningful interference with individual's possessory interests in that property."

"The Fourth Amendment protects people from unreasonable searches and seizures of their persons, houses, papers and effects, protecting property as well as privacy."

The Fourth Amendment's reach extends to property, but does not protect possessory interests in all kinds of property."

"Property rights are not the sole measure of Fourth Amendment violation."

"Fourth Amendment protection against unreasonable searches and seizures fully applies in the civil context."

"Seizures of property are subject to Fourth Amendment scrutiny even though no search within the meaning of the amendment has taken place." [Bold added.]

"When multiple violations of Constitution are alleged in civil rights suit, each constitutional provision is examined by court in turn, and court does not generally as preliminary matter identify the claim's dominant character. 42 U.S.C.A. §1983."

"A "seizure" of property, we have explained, occurs when "there is some meaningful interference with an individual's possessory interests in that property." United States v. Jacobsen, 466 U.S. 109, 113, 104 S.Ct. 1652, 1656, 80 L.Ed.2d. 85 (1984)."

"As a result of the state action in this case, the Soldals' domicile was not only seized, it literally was carried away, giving new meaning to the term "mobile home.""

"The Amendment protects the people from unreasonable searches and seizures of "their persons, houses, papers, and effects." This language surely cuts against the novel holding below, and our cases unmistakably hold that the Amendment protects property as well as privacy. This much was made clear in Jacobsen, supra, where we explained that the first clause of the Fourth Amendment

""protects two types of expectations, one involving `searches, the other `seizures, A `search' occurs when an expectation of privacy that society is prepared to consider reasonable is infringed. A `seizure' of property occurs where there is some meaningful interference with an individual's possessory interests in that property." 466 U.S., at 113, 104 S.Ct., at 1656."

"The Court of Appeals understandably found it necessary to reconcile its holding with our recognition in the plain view cases that the Fourth Amendment protects property as such. In so doing, the court did not distinguish this case on the ground that the seizure of the Soldals' home took place in a noncriminal context. Indeed, it acknowledged what is evident from our precedents--that the Amendment's protection applies in the civil context as well. [Cites omitted.]

"Nor did the Court of Appeals suggest that the Fourth Amendment applied exclusively to law enforcement activities. It observed, for example, that the Amendment's protection would be triggered "by a search or other entry into the home incident to an eviction or repossession," 942 F.2d, at 1077. Instead, the court sought to explain why the Fourth Amendment protects against seizures of property in the plain view context, but not in this case, as follows:

""[S]eizures made in the course of investigations by police or other law enforcement officers are almost always, as in the plain view cases, the culmination of searches. The police search in order to seize, and it is the search and ensuing seizure that the Fourth Amendment by its reference to `searches and seizures' seeks to regulate. Seizure means one thing when it is the outcome of a search; it may mean something else when it stands apart from a search or any other investigative activity. The Fourth Amendment may still nominally apply, but, precisely because there is no invasion of privacy, the usual rules do not apply." Id., 942 F.2d. at 1079 (emphasis in original)." [Brackets original.]

"We have difficulty with this passage. The court seemingly construes the Amendment to protect only against seizures that are the outcome of a search. But our cases are to the contrary and hold that seizures of property are subject to Fourth Amendment scrutiny even though no search within the meaning of the Amendment has taken place. See, e.g., Jacobsen, 466 U.S., at 120-125, 104 S.Ct., at 1660-1662; Place, 462 U.S., at 706-707, 103 S.Ct., at 2644-2645; Cardwell, 417 U.S., at 588-589, 94 S.Ct., at 2468-2469."

[Footnote to above paragraph.] "The officers in these cases were engaged in law enforcement and were looking for something that was found and seized. In this broad sense the seizures were the result of "searches," but not in the Fourth Amendment sense. That the Court of Appeals might have been suggesting that the plain view cases are explainable because they almost always occur in the course of law enforcement activities receives some support from the penultimate sentence of the quoted passage, where the court states that the word "seizure" might lose its usual meaning "when it stands apart from a search or any other investigative activity." 942 F.2d, at 1079 (emphasis added). And, in the following paragraph, it observes that "[o]utside of the law enforcement area the Fourth Amendment retains its force as a protection against searches, because they invade privacy. That is why we decline to confine the amendment to the law enforcement setting." Id., at 1079-1080. Even if the court meant that seizures of property in the course of law enforcement activities, whether civil or criminal, implicate interests safeguarded by the Fourth Amendment, but that pure property interests are unprotected in the nonlaw enforcement setting, we are not in accord, as indicated in the body of this opinion." [End footnote; brackets original.]

"The Court of Appeals' effort is both interesting and creative, but at bottom it simply reasserts the earlier thesis that the Fourth Amendment protects privacy but not property. We remain unconvinced and see no justification for departing from our prior cases. In our view, the reason why an officer might enter a house or effectuate a seizure is wholly irrelevant to the threshold question of whether the Amendment applies. What matters is the intrusion on the people's security from governmental interference. Therefore, the right against unreasonable seizures would be no less transgressed if the seizure of the house was undertaken to collect evidence, verify compliance with a housing regulation, effect an eviction by the police, or on a whim, for no reason at all. As we have observed on more than one occasion, it would be "anomalous to say that the individual and his private property are fully protected by the Fourth Amendment only when the individual is suspected of criminal behavior." Camara, 387 U.S., at 530, 87 S.Ct., at 1732; see also O'Connor, 480 U.S., at 715, 107 S.Ct., at 1496; T.L.O., 469 U.S., at 335, 105 S.Ct., at 739.

"The Court of Appeals also stated that even if, contrary to its previous rulings, "there is some element or tincture of a Fourth Amendment seizure, it cannot carry the day for the Soldals." 942 F.2d, at 1080. Relying on our decision in Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 109 S.Ct. 1865, 104 L.Ed.2d. 443 (1989), the court reasoned that it should look at the "dominant character of the conduct challenged in a section 1983 case [to] determine the constitutional standard under which it is evaluated." 942 F.2d, at 1080. Believing that the Soldals' claim was more akin to a challenge against the deprivation of property without due process of law than against an unreasonable seizure, the court concluded that they should not be allowed to bring their suit under the guise of the Fourth Amendment.

"But we see no basis for doling out constitutional protections in such fashion. Certain wrongs affect more than a single right and, accordingly, can implicate more than one of the Constitution's commands. Where such multiple violations are alleged, we are not in the habit of identifying as a preliminary matter the claim's "dominant" character. Rather, we examine each constitutional provision in turn. See, e.g., Hudson (Fourth Amendment and Fourteenth Amendment Due Process Clause); Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 97 S.Ct. 1401, 51 L.Ed.2d. 711 (1977) (Eighth Amendment and Fourteenth Amendment Due Process Clause). Graham is not to the contrary. Its holding was that claims of excessive use of force should be analyzed under the Fourth Amendment's reasonableness standard, rather than the Fourteenth Amendment's substantive due process test. We were guided by the fact that, in that case, both provisions targeted the same sort of governmental conduct and, as a result, we chose the more "explicit textual source of constitutional protection" over the "more generalized notion of substantive due process. 490 U.S., at 394-395, 109 S.Ct., at 1870-1871." another. As explained in Soldal v. Cook County, 506 U.S. 113 S.Ct. 538, 548, 121 L.Ed.2d. 450 (1992):

""Certain wrongs affect more than a single right and, accordingly, can implicate more than one of the Constitution's commands. Where such multiple violations are alleged, we are not in the habit of identifying as a preliminary matter the claim's "dominant" character.

Rather, we examine each constitutional provision in turn." "Here, as in Soldal, the seizure of property implicates two "explicit textual source[s] of constitutional protection, the Fourth Amendment and the Fifth. Ibid. The proper question is not which Amendment controls but whether either Amendment is violated." [Brackets and italics original; bold added.]

"It is true, of course, that the Fourth Amendment applies to searches and seizures in the civil context and may serve to resolve the legality of these governmental actions without reference to other constitutional provisions. ... Here the Government seized property not to preserve evidence of wrongdoing, but to assert ownership and control over the property itself. Our cases establish that government action of this consequence must comply with the Due Process Clause of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments.

"Though the Fourth Amendment places limits on the Government's power to seize property for purposes of forfeiture, it does not provide the sole measure of constitutional protection that must be afforded property owners in forfeiture proceedings. So even assuming that the Fourth Amendment were satisfied in this case, it remains for us to determine whether the seizure complied with our well-settled jurisprudence under the Due Process Clause."

("[I]t makes sense to scrutinize governmental action more closely when the State stands to benefit")."

[Footnote (n. 2) to above paragraph.] "The extent of the Government's financial stake in drug forfeiture is apparent from a 1990 memo, in which the Attorney General urged United States Attorneys to increase the volume of forfeitures in order to meet the Department of Justice's annual budget target:

""We must significantly increase production to reach our budget target.

... Failure to achieve the $470 million projection would expose the Department's forfeiture program to criticism and undermine confidence in our budget projections. Every effort must be made to increase forfeiture income during the remaining three months of [fiscal year] 1990." The Court goes on to note that the passage of the Sixteenth Amendment alleviated the Government's reliance on liquor, customs, and tobacco taxes as sources of operating revenue. Whatever the merits of this novel distinction, it fails entirely to distinguish the leading case in the field, Phillips v. Commissioner, supra, a unanimous opinion authored by Justice Brandeis. That case dealt with the enforcement of income tax liability, which the Court says has replaced earlier forms of taxation as the principle source of governmental revenue. There the Court said:

""The right of the United States to collect its internal revenue by summary administrative proceedings has long been settled ...[w]here, as here, adequate opportunity is afforded for a later judicial determination of the legal rights, summary proceedings to secure prompt performance of pecuniary obligations to the government have been consistently sustained." 283 U.S., at 595, 51 S.Ct., at 610 (footnote omitted). "(a) GENERAL, RULE.--Subsection (b) of section 7433 (relating to damages') is amended by striking "$100,000" and inserting "$1,000,000".

"SEC. 802. COURT DISCRETION TO REDUCE AWARD FOR LITIGATION COSTS FOR FAILURE TO EXHAUST ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.--Paragraph (1) of section 7433(d) (relating to civil damages for certain unauthorized" collection actions) is amended to read as follows:

""(1) AWARD FOR DAMAGES MAY BE REDUCED IF ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES NOT EXHAUSTED.--

The amount of damages awarded under subsection (b) may be reduced if the court determines that the plaintiff has not exhausted the administrative remedies available to such plaintiff within the Internal Revenue Service."."

"SEC. 901. PRELIMINARY NOTICE REQUIREMENT.

"(a) IN GENERAL.--Section 6672 (relating to failure to collect and pay over tax, or attempt to evade or defeat tax) is amended by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c) and by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

""(b) PRELIMINARY NOTICE REQUIREMENT.--

""(1) IN GENERAL.--No penalty shall be imposed under subsection (a) unless the Secretary notifies the taxpayer in writing by mail to an address as determined under section 6212(b) that the taxpayer shall be subject to an assessment of such penalty.

""(2) TIMING OF NOTICE.--The mailing of the notice described in paragraph (1) shall precede any notice and demand of any penalty under subsection (a) by at least 60 days.

""(3) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.--If a notice described in paragraph (1) with respect to any penalty is mailed before the expiration of the period provided by section 6501 for the assessment of such penalty (determined without regard to this paragraph), the period provided by such section for the assessment of such penalty shall not expire before the later of--

""(A) the date 90 days after the date on which such notice was mailed, or

""(B) if there is a timely protest of the proposed assessment, the date 30 days after the Secretary makes a final administrative determination with respect to such protest.

""(4) EXCEPTION FOR JEOPARDY.--This subsection shall not apply if the Secretary finds that the collection of the penalty is in jeopardy." "

"SEC. 1203. UNAUTHORIZED ENTICEMENT OF INFORMATION DISCLOSURE.

"(a) IN GENERAL.--Subchapter B of chapter 76 (relating to proceedings by taxpayers and third parties), as amended by section 601(a), is amended by redesignating section 7435 as section 7436 and by inserting after section 7434 the following new section:

""SEC. 7435. CIVIL DAMAGES FOR UNAUTHORIZED ENTICEMENT OF INFORMATION DISCLOSURE.

""(a) IN GENERAL.--If any officer or employee of the United States intentionally compromises the determination or collection of any tax due from an attorney, certified public accountant, or enrolled agent representing a taxpayer in exchange for information conveyed by the taxpayer to the attorney, certified public accountant, or enrolled agent for purposes of obtaining advice concerning the taxpayer's tax such taxpayer may bring a civil action for damages" against the United States. Such civil action shall be the exclusive remedy for recovering damages resulting from such actions.

""(b) DAMAGES.--In any action brought under subsection (a), upon a finding of liability on the part of the defendant, the defendant shall be liable to the plaintiff in an amount equal to the lesser of $500,000 or the sum of--

""(1) actual, direct economic damages sustained by the plaintiff as a proximate result of the information disclosure, and

""(2) the costs of the action.

"Damages shall not include the taxpayer's liability for any civil or criminal penalties, or other losses attributable to incarceration or the imposition of other criminal sanctions.

""(c) PAYMENT AUTHORITY.--Claims pursuant to this section shall be payable out of funds appropriated under section 1304 of title 31, United States Code.

""(d) PERIOD FOR BRINGING ACTION.--Notwithstanding any other provision of law, an action to enforce liability created under this section may be brought without regard to the amount in controversy and may be brought only within 2 years after the date the actions creating such liability would have been discovered by exercise of reasonable care.

""(e) MANDATORY STAY.--Upon a certification by the Commissioner or the Commissioner's delegate that there is an ongoing investigation or prosecution of the taxpayer, the district court before which an action under this section is pending shall stay all proceedings with respect to such action pending the conclusion of the investigation or prosecution.

""(f) CRIME-FRAUD EXCEPTION.--Subsection (a) shall not apply to information conveyed to an attorney, certified public accountant, or enrolled agent for the purpose of perpetrating a fraud or crime." "

16 Am.Jur.2d., Constitutional Law, §202 "Taxpayers.

"Generally speaking, a person who pays taxes or is liable to pay taxes for the support of a taxing unit and who would be injured' by the unlawful expenditure of public funds, by the illegal disposition of the public property of such taxing unit, or by any other illegal act which would increase his burden of taxation, is entitled to institute and maintain a taxpayer's action, regardless of the amount or kind of taxes that he pays. However, as a general rule, private citizens who seek to restrain official acts must allege and prove damage to themselves different in character from that sustained by the public generally. Ordinarily, the mere status of one as a taxpayer is not sufficient to qualify him to institute a taxpayer's action. The rule is that he must have a pecuniary interest in the subject of the action and must show that the acts complained of will result in some pecuniary loss or other injury to his property or interest as a taxpayer and to taxpayers as a class, through increased taxation and the consequences thereof, or in some financial loss or injury to the municipal corporation or other governmental unit on behalf of which he institutes the action, and in the absence of such a showing of direct pecuniary injury by the taxpayer, no justiciable case or controversy would exist."

Black's Law Dictionary: Delict

"DELICT. In the Roman and civil law. A wrong or injury; an offense; a violation of public or private duty.

"It will be observed that this word, taken in its most general sense, is wider in both directions than our English term "tort."

On the one hand, it includes those wrongful acts which, while directly affecting some individual or his property, yet extend in their injurious consequences to the peace or security of the community at large, and hence rise to the grade of crimes or misdemeanors. These acts were termed in the Roman law "public delicts;" while those for which the only penalty exacted was compensation to the person primarily injured were denominated "private delicts." On the other hand, the term appears to have included injurious actions which transpired without any malicious intention on the part of the doer. Thus Pothier gives the name "quasi delicts" to the acts of a person who, without malignity, but by an inexcusable imprudence, caused an injury to another. Poth.Obl. 116. But the term is used in modern jurisprudence as a convenient synonym of "tort."

"FORM. A model or skeleton of an instrument to be used in a judicial proceeding, containing the principal necessary matters, the proper technical terms or phrases, and whatever else is necessary to make it formally correct, arranged in proper and methodical order, and capable of being adapted to the circumstances of the specific case.

"In contradistinction to "substance," "form" means the legal or technical manner or order to be observed in legal instruments or juridical proceedings, or in the construction of legal documents or processes.

"Antithesis of "substance."" Phoenix Building & Homestead Ass'n v. Meraux, 189 La. 819, 180 So. 648, 649." [Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, p. 780]

Black's Law Dictionary: Injury

"INJURY. Any wrong or damage done to another, either in his person, rights, reputation, or property. An act which damages, harms, or hurts.

"The words "damage," "loss," and "injury" are used interchangeably, and, within legislative meaning and judicial interpretation, import the same thing.

"The term "injury," used to describe an error for which a reversal may be had, means an error which affects the result.

"Absolute injuries. Injuries to those rights which a person possesses as being a member of society."

"Civil injury. Injuries to person or property, resulting from a breach of contract, delict, or criminal offense, which may be redressed by means of a civil action."

"Irreparable injury. This phrase does not mean such an injury as is beyond the possibility of repair, or beyond possible compensation in damages, or necessarily great damage, but includes an injury, whether great or small, which ought not to be submitted to, on the one hand, or inflicted, on the other; and which, because it is so large or so small, or is of such constant and frequent occurrence, or because no certain pecuniary standard exists for the measurement of damages, cannot receive reasonable redress in a court of law. Wrongs of a repeated and continuing character, or which occasion damages that are estimated only by conjecture, and not by any accurate standard, are included." 9.2 Restitution

Black's Law Dictionary: Restatement of Law

"Restatement of Law. A series of volumes authored by the American Law Institute that tell what the law in a general area is, how it is changing, and what direction the authors (who are leading legal scholars in each field covered) think this change should take; for example, Restatement of the Law of Contracts; Restatement of the Law of Torts. The various Restatements have been a formidable force in shaping the disciplines of the law covered; they are frequently cited by courts and either followed or distinguished; they represent the fruit of the labor of the best legal minds in the diverse fields of law covered."

[Black's Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, 1990, p. 1313]

Restatement of the Law, Agency, Restitution

"A person who has been unjustly enriched at the expense of another is required to make restitution to the other." "Comment:

"a. This statement of the basic principle of restitution is made here in order to indicate that in many of the situations involving agency the result is reached not primarily by principles of agency but upon restitutional principles. Thus when a person who has no authority or apparent authority to act for another, purports to act as the agent of another in the acquisition of property, the purported principal may be liable for its value, not because of any agency principle but because he has been unjustly enriched. Again, an agent who properly receives property from a third person on account of the principal may be under a duty of restitution to transferor if later it is found that the transaction with the principal under which he received the property is voidable by the third person. Between principal and agent the right of the principal to recover profits improperly made by an agent is a restitutional right. Similarly, the duty of the principal to indemnify the agent and, in other situations, the duty of an agent to indemnify the principal, is created by the rules of restitution."

[Restatement of the Law, Agency, 2d, §8C, American Law Institute, 1958]

Law of Agency

"1. Definitions are concise, and hence incomplete, descriptions of that which they define.

"A. Inaccuracy of definitions. Because of their brevity, definitions are more or less incomplete and inaccurate. They should, however, give an idea of what the writer has in mind. In Agency, key words have been used by the courts and text writers in so many different senses that it is especially important to state the meaning assigned to them here. The definitions in this chapter are intended to accord with judicial usage in the more carefully reasoned opinions, except for the terms "inherent agency power" and "subservant," which have little judicial sanction."

"2. Agency deals with the rules applicable to the legal relations which arise when two persons agree that one is to act for the benefit of the other in accordance with the other's directions.

"A. Purpose. The agency relation exists in order to enable a person to utilize the services of others and thereby to accomplish what he could not achieve alone. Business is today almost wholly conducted by agents, mostly individuals, but in many cases partnerships and corporations, acting on behalf of principals who are usually corporations and partnerships. The rules applicable to the liabilities of the parties have been evolved by the courts for the advancement of the interests of business and of the community in which it is done.

"B. Scope. The subject includes the relations commonly described in treatises and digests as Principal and Agent and as Master and Servant. The latter relation is included in the agency relation, a servant being a particular kind of agent. Two hundred years ago the term Agency was hardly known; the present rules have grown out of the relation of master and servant. Other agents are given no general name, being called attorneys, factors, auctioneers or brokers, whose function it was and is, of course, to act as agents."

"3. Agency is a consensual, fiduciary relation between two persons, created by law by which one, the principal, has a right to control the conduct of the agent, and the agent has a power to affect the legal relations of the principal.

"B. Principal and agent. The term "principal" describes one who has permitted or directed another to act for his benefit and subject to his direction and control. "Agent" describes a person who has undertaken to act for another and to be controlled by the other in so acting. "Principal" includes in its meaning the term "master", a species of principal who, in addition to other control, has a right to control the physical conduct of the species of agents known as servants (see Section 84), as to whom special rules are applicable with reference to harm caused by their physical acts. Except for that purpose, the rules stated in this book as to principals apply to servants. For other purposes it is immaterial whether an agent is or is not a servant.

"The term "agent" as used in the statutes may vary in meaning from the term as used here. Thus one appointed by the state to receive notices of actions against foreign corporations doing business in the state, may be called an agent, although not responding in any way to the will of his "principal". He is merely a person who is used to satisfy the requirements of due process. The term agent may also be used to describe a particular type of state officer, excluding other types from its meaning."

"D. The relation is created by law. All legal relations are created by law. The legal consequences of an act done by a person are determined by rules of law and not by his intent. It is important to note this fact in marginal agency cases, since the parties may do acts from which they believe that an agency relation results or does not result, but which creates a relation different from that intended. Thus, for one or another reason, a wholesaler who wishes the benefit of the agency rules in appointing distributors may find his arrangements are such that the court will determine the relation to be one of seller and buyer, although the parties have called it agency. If the relation to which the parties agree satisfies the tests for agency, that is what it is.

"E. Right to control. The right of the principal to direct what the agent shall do or shall not do is basic. It is a violation of duty for the agent to act for the principal in a manner contrary to orders and he has a duty to obey all orders which are within his contractual undertaking. It is this which distinguishes a non-agency trust from a trust in which the "trustee" is also an agent. See Section 10C. In determining the existence of a master-servant relation, the existence of a right to control the physical conduct of the agent is normally the most important element although there are other elements to consider. See Section 84.

"F. Agent's power to subject the principal to personal liability. This power is the characteristic result of the agency relation--the ability of the agent to subject the principal to personal liability and to create rights in his favor. Other fiduciaries such as the representatives of the estates of deceased persons, trustees who are not also agents, receivers and those holding control over property, can affect the interests of their beneficiaries in the property which they hold, but cannot create personal liabilities as to these persons.

"The agent's power may be consistent with principles of Torts, Contracts or Restitution. Thus, where the agent of a disclosed principal contracts with a third person as he is told to do, the requirement of a manifestation between the parties is satisfied. This is true also where the agent contracts with one whom the principal has told that the agent will contract with him. If the principal directs an agent to do an act which is tortious, ordinary tort principles make the principal liable. The rules of restitution make the principal liable for property wrongfully taken from a third person and transferred to the principal by the agent."

"8. An agent may have power to create relations between the principal and a third person because of authority, apparent authority, estoppel, or inherent agency power.

"A. The agent's power. The power of an agent to create legal relations between the principal and third persons is a characteristic element of the agency relation. It is based upon the principal's consent or apparent consent to the relation. It is difficult to define legal power without the use of synonyms. It has been described as a personal capacity to do something. Perhaps it is better to say that it is an ability to create, change or destroy legal relations created by law."

"An agency power is limited to the ability of the agent to change legal relations between any of the parties involved, the principal, the third person, and himself. It exists, irrespective of the intent of the parties, upon the happening of the events required to bring it into existence. Thus if a person is found to be a servant, his power to subject the master to liability for his torts exists--although against the wishes of both and even though they believe that the relation does not exist."

"B. Authority. Authority is the privileged power of the agent to bind the principal, the privilege being based upon the principal's manifestations of a consent to him. It is the power which, as to his principal, the agent is privileged to exercise and which is effective to create rights and liabilities between the principal and third persons. For an agent to be authorized to do an act there must be a manifestation of consent to him by a principal who has capacity to give consent, the act must be delegable, and any required formalities must have been performed. If these facts exist, the principal becomes a party to the transaction performed by the agent, in most instances with the same effect as if conducted by himself, although the other party knew nothing as to the agent's authority or identity. If the authorized act constitutes a tort, the principal is liable; if it is the making of a contract or the transfer of property, the principal is a party to the contract or the grantor of the property. [* * *] Where the directed act is a tort, the liability of the parties follows normal tort principles, since one who knowingly causes a tort is liable for it."

"F. Inherent agency power. This is a term first used in the Restatement of Agency, 2d, Section 8 A, to explain the liability of the principal in cases in which the agent who conducts a transaction has neither authority nor apparent authority and there are no estoppel elements. The outstanding illustration of this is the liability of a master for negligence or other tortious and unauthorized physical acts "in the scope of employment."

"These inherent agency powers have been created by the courts in accordance with what they believe to be for the benefit of the entire community--the test to be applied to all law. It is not unjust that a master should be required to pay for the inevitable harm caused by the expectable negligence and other acts of his servants, or that principals should be liable for many of the frauds of those he employed to make profits for him. The extension of liability upon contracts to cases in which there is neither authority nor apparent authority reacts ultimately to the benefit of the business community, in that it tends to facilitate business transactions, now almost entirely conducted by agents. The imposition of liability causes the employer to use care to select good representatives and police their conduct. If he does as well in this as his competitors, the losses resulting from careless, deceitful, over zealous employees can be passed to those who use the products or services and then borne by the entire consuming public, as are the amounts paid in "Workmen's Compensation" awards."

"57. A principal whose agent makes or conducts an unauthorized transaction is not liable to the other party because of it, unless the unauthorized portion was severable, the agent had apparent authority or inherent agency power, the principal is estopped, or he has been unjustly benefitted.

"A. Bases [sic] for liability. The generalization of the Section is an attempt to list the grounds of the principal's liability upon transactions entered into by an agent who acted beyond his authority. Inherent power is the result of agency conceptions. Estoppel is essentially a tort principle; the principles of restitution because of unjust enrichment are found in all branches of the law. The section also indicates the line beyond which the principal's liability does not extend, with mention below of two situations in which there may be doubt. The rules as to the liability of the principal in such cases define also the rights of the principal against the other party, in the absence of fraud or some ground of avoidance of the transaction by the other party; the latter can not well claim rights under a transaction without being subject to the accompanying liabilities."

"58. A disclosed, partially disclosed or undisclosed principal is subject to liability for unauthorized conduct by an agent within his inherent agency power.

"A. Nature of the power. The liability of the principal based upon authority, apparent authority, estoppel, or unjust enrichment is supported by the principles of Contracts, Torts, or Restitution. The inherent agency power of an agent to bind his principal, like the rules of ratification, is unique, since it may make a principal liable or cause him to lose his property because of conduct which he did not desire or direct, to persons who may not have known of his existence or who did not rely upon anything which he said or did. It is a contribution to the common law by judges, since most of the rules have been created without statutory authority. See Section 8F which gives a general statement of its nature and function.

"B. Scope of the power. The area within which a principal has been made liable for unauthorized conduct has been gradually expanded by the courts. As the nation's business has more and more been done by agents, it has become clearer that the business enterprise should bear the burden of the losses created by the mistakes or over-zealousness of its agents. It stimulates the watchfulness of the employer in selecting and supervising the agents. This is especially true with reference to general agents whose inherent power is broadest. Its existence has been concealed in many cases, by basing the liability upon apparent authority, even in cases in which it was obvious there was no appearance of authority, or upon an expanded idea of estoppel."

"E. Limits of general agent's power. There are some rather obvious limits to the agent's power, whether or not the principal is disclosed or undisclosed. Thus an agent has no power to bind the principal beyond the geographic boundaries of his employment."

"60. A principal is bound by unauthorized misrepresentations made by an agent in the course of a transaction in which he was authorized to make true statements on the subject, unless the other party had notice of the truth or of the agent's lack of authority.

"Agent as spokesman for principal. The rule applies to statements of the general and the special agents of all three types of principals. In most cases it is unnecessary to rely upon this rule when the speaker is a general agent. The reason for making the principal responsible is the same as that which makes him liable for the agent's fraud (see Section 92) and although frequently there is apparent authority to make the true statements, his responsibility is not limited to such cases. The formula and the reason for the result is much the same as that which makes a false statement by an agent operate as an admission of the principal, if the agent had been authorized to make such a statement if true."

"61. The fact that an agent acts with an improper motive when conducting a transaction on account of the principal does not prevent the principal from being bound by it, unless the other party has notice of the agent's motives."

"It is not unfair to place the risk of the agent's honesty upon the principal, since he has the opportunity of investigating the agent before entrusting him with his affairs, and in the long run this result inures to the benefit of employers, whose interests require that they should guarantee the honesty of agents to those doing business with them. It is not likely that a principal who, to escape from liability, notifies those dealing with his agent that they take the risk of the agent's honesty, would get much business. Of course, if the other party has notice that the agent is acting improperly, he cannot hold the principal (see Section 76), but the principal may be responsible criminally."

"67. A principal who employs a general agent to issue or indorse negotiable instruments, or appoints one to a position in which it is usual for such agents to do so, is subject to liability to holders in due course for the unauthorized issue or indorsement of such instruments.

"A. Scope of rule. The rule applies to all types of principals. It is essential that the instrument purports to be the principal's instrument, but the name used can be a trade name, including that of the agent, or the name of a partnership in which one of the partners is unknown to others. See Section 72A."

"75. The rules as to the liability of a principal to third persons for authorized acts are applicable to unauthorized acts which, as to the other party to the transaction, are apparently authorized.

"A. Compared with authority. As stated in Section 8D which defines apparent authority, the exercise of apparent authority creates the same relations between the apparent principal and the other party as if the one acting was authorized. The apparent agent may also be authorized; it is only when there is a difference between authority and apparent authority that the other party needs to rely upon apparent authority. It may be noted that apparent authority may be easier to prove than authority, since it can be proved without the testimony of either principal or agent. Many of the situations dealt with in this Section have been treated in earlier Sections, such as those on interpretation and termination, and are inserted here for convenience."

"D. Statements of agents creating apparent authority. In general, a principal is not bound by the unauthorized statements of an agent as to the extent of his authority or the facts upon which it depends. He can testify as to this, but evidence of such statements in transactions with third persons is admissible only after proof that he had authority or apparent authority to make them. See Sections 104, 105.

"If a principal authorizes an agent to enter into a transaction, he necessarily authorizes him to say that he has authority and this statement is a basis of apparent authority. It is to be noted, however, that although authorized to act for the principal, he has no authority to represent that he is so acting, if at the time he has determined to embezzle the proceeds, as where he is sent to cash a check the proceeds of which he has decided to keep. In such case, the liability of the principal must be based upon the inherent power which agents have to bind their principals upon a transaction otherwise authorized but in which the agent acts with an improper motive. See Section 61."

"76. A person can not bind a principal to a contract or conveyance because of apparent authority or inherent agency power, if he should know, has reason to know, or has been notified that the agent is not authorized to make it.

"83. A master, although not liable because of his own conduct, is liable for the unauthorized tortious conduct of a servant which is within the scope of employment.

"A. Rationale. "Respondeat superior" is the phrase used by the courts to indicate the area within which a master is liable for the torts of servants which, although committed disobediently, are connected with the service of the employer. This is a condition imposed by the common law in return for the privilege of utilizing the services of others in household and business matters."

"84. A servant is normally one who gives personal service as a member of a business or domestic household, and subject to control by the employer as to his physical activities.

"A. Difficulties of definition. No short statement can give an accurate picture of what the courts include within the term servant. In general they have in mind a more intimate relation than that between principal and a non-servant agent or one who is casually employed and who is not primarily a part of the core of workers in the enterprise."

"C. Right to control. The right to control the physical movements of the employee is the most important single element in most of the situations. This does not mean de facto control, which is usually absent, but the right to control. This may be described as the element responsive to the tort principle that control creates responsibility. The name the parties give to the relation may not be important, since a servant in fact may be called an independent contractor, in order to avoid liability."

"89. Unauthorized trespasses, conversion, assaults, defamation and other similar torts committed by a servant may be within his scope of employment if not done for a purely personal motive or, in case of assaults, were not unexpected."

"A. Historical development. The liability of a master for torts under the rules of respondeat superior was mostly limited to the negligent acts of servants, until the second half of the nineteenth century."

"Today, however, the courts have no hesitancy in imposing liability for acts which are far from those authorized but which are likely to be done by over-zealous servants or in reaction to a situation arising out of the employment. In this, as in other areas, the master's liability is expanding, but it is still true that an act done from a purely personal motive or one for which the employment furnishes only the opportunity, is not in the scope of employment unless it is a violation of a duty owed by the master to the person harmed.

"B. Trespass and conversion. A master is liable for the mistakes of his servants as to the boundaries of land or the ownership of property, which lead to a tortious entry or to conversion. He is also liable for torts resulting from a not too egregious error as to orders and for acts likely to be done by servants eager to serve the employer's interests, as by converting hay in order to feed a hungry team "borrowing" a pump to prevent a flood on master's building, taking plaintiff's property without his consent, instead of with it."

"91. (I) A principal is not liable for the harm caused by negligent physical activities of a non-servant agent.

"(II) A principal is liable to third persons for the other torts of any agent, whether or not a servant;

"(a) if the act was authorized, or, as to one relying upon the relation, was apparently authorized: or

"(b) if the tort was committed within the agent's inherent powers, or

"(c) if the agent's position enabled him to commit the tort."

"B. Authorized or apparently authorized acts. Obviously the principal is liable for authorized or intended results which are tortious, as where he authorized the buying of specific goods from one who, it later appears, had stolen them from the plaintiff. It has been held that the principal may also be responsible where the tort is caused by a mistake of fact or of interpretation in carrying out orders. The rules as to apparent authority in making contracts apply to torts committed by an agent which are made possible by his apparent authority.

"C. Inherent powers. An agent can bind the principal by an unauthorized transaction within his inherent powers. Thus a general selling agent can bind the principal by deceit in a transaction or a tort incidental to it, as if the transaction were authorized."

"92. A principal is liable in an action at law for misrepresentations by an agent in the course of transactions authorized or apparently authorized if "(a) the principal intends that the untrue statements shall be made, or

"(b) the statement is as to a matter upon which the principal would expect representations to be made and the agent's statement is one which it is not too unlikely that a fraudulent agent might make, or

"(c) the agent's position enabled him to deceive.

"D. Scope of agent's powers to bind the principal. Except where the principal has created a situation enabling the agent to deceive others, the principal is not bound by his agent's deceits unless the agent is authorized or apparently authorized to make the statements or it is within his inherent power to conduct the transaction in the course of which they are made."

"As for general agents, it would appear that if the principal is bound by their inherent powers to make contracts, he would be bound by misrepresentation incidental to them, and that an undisclosed principal would be liable equally with a disclosed principal."

"F. Motive of agent. The fact that the agent is acting from purely personal motives is immaterial unless this is known to the other party. [* * *] Special as well as general agents have an inherent power to bind the principal in transactions which would otherwise make the principal responsible, although the agent acts for a purely personal motive, if the other party has no notice of it."

"93. A principal is not immune from liability for the act of an agent because of the agent's immunity to civil liability to the plaintiff."

"A. Immunities. Immunity means the absence of civil liability for an act otherwise tortious. It results either from a relation between the parties, as that of husband and wife, or the status or position of a person, such as that of a municipality or a legislator acting as such. Immunities are always personal to the holder. Thus a negligent servant is not protected by the fact that his employer is immune from liability for his torts, (see Section 129C), and a master is not relieved from liability to a person injured by a servant who, because of a personal relation between the two, is immune from liability, as where a servant, while in the scope of employment, negligently runs over his wife or child."

"94. A principal who has acquired property as the result of the tort of an agent is subject to a restitutionary action, either for the specific return of the property or for its value."

"C. Unjust enrichment. One who has acquired property of another which it is inequitable for him to retain is subject to liability to the other for its value or its proceeds, or [sic] is appropriate."

"95. A person injured by the tort of an agent for which the principal is responsible can maintain an action against either or both."

"98. The principal may become responsible for the knowledge or lack of knowledge of an agent who fails to perform his duty to the principal in acquiring or in acting upon knowledge relevant to a transaction for which he is employed."

"A. Rationale. In each case dealt with in the following paragraphs the principal is liable to another because the agent has been guilty of some type of wrongful conduct which is a breach of duty to the principal, in the course of the performance of his duties."

"F. Knowledge of several agents combined. Knowledge may be held by a number of agents which, in combination, create liability of the principal, or a defense to the other party; the duty of the agent having the knowledge may be merely to report the condition to others who are to attend to the matter."

"J. Agent's knowledge of his own unauthorized act. If an agent makes an unauthorized contract within his apparent authority or inherent powers, or a servant does an unauthorized act within the scope of his employment, the principal is held liable, but not upon the ground that the agent's knowledge is imputed to him. Likewise the liability of a principal who receives a benefit as the result of his agent's conduct is based either on ratification or restitution. [* * *] Of course the real basis is unjust enrichment, the defendant not being a bona fide purchaser."

"K. Apparent authority. In a transaction conducted by the agent within his apparent authority, the principal is subject to the same liabilities to the other party as if the agent were authorized and hence is charged with the knowledge which the agent has to the same extent as in an authorized transaction."

"99. The time when, and the manner by which, an agent acquires knowledge is immaterial to the liability of the principal if the agent has it as a relevant time, except when it is acquired confidentially."

"B. Knowledge which agent should have. There are many situations in which the principal is subject to liability or is deprived of property because an agent should have discovered relevant facts."

Black's Law Dictionary: Restitution

"Restitution. An equitable remedy under which a person is restored to his or her original position prior to loss or injury, or placed in the position he or she would have been, had the breach not occurred. Act of restoring; restoration; restoration of anything to its rightful owner; the act of making good or giving equivalent for any loss, damage or injury; and indemnification. State v. Barnett, 110 Vt. 221, 3 A.2d. 521, 525, 526. Act of making good or giving an equivalent for or restoring something to the rightful owner. Antoine v. McCaffery, Mo.App., 335 S.W.2d. 474, 489. Compensation for the wrongful taking of property. Com. v. Fuqua, 267 Pa.Super. 504, 407 A.2d. 24, 25. Restoration of status quo and is amount which would put plaintiff in as good a position as he would have been if no contract had been made and restores to plaintiff value of what he parted with in performing contract. Explorers Motor Home Corp. v. Aldridge, Tex.Civ.App., 541 S.W.2d. 851, 852. See Restatement, Second, Contracts, §373.

"A person who has been unjustly enriched at the expense of another is required to make restitution to the other. Restatement of the Law, Restitution, §1.

"In torts, restitution is essentially the measure of damages, while in contracts a person aggrieved by a breach is entitled to be placed in the position in which he would have been if the defendant had not breached."

[Black's Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, 1990, p. 1313]

Restatement of the Law, Restitution

"§1. UNJUST ENRICHMENT.

"A person who has been unjustly enriched at the expense of another is required to make restitution to the other.

"Comment:

"a. A person is enriched if he has received a benefit (see Comment b). A person is unjustly enriched if the retention of the benefit would be unjust (see Comment c). A person obtains restitution when he is restored to the position he formerly occupied either by the return of something which he formerly had or by the receipt of its equivalent in money. Ordinarily, the measure of restitution is the amount of enrichment received (see Comment d), but as stated in Comment e, if the loss suffered differs from the amount of benefit received, the measure of restitution may be more or less than the loss suffered or more or less than the enrichment.

"b. What constitutes a benefit. A person confers a benefit upon another if he gives to the other possession of or some other interest in money, land, chattels, or choses in action, performs services beneficial to or at the request of the other, satisfies a debt or a duty of the other, or in any way adds to the other's security or advantage. He confers a benefit not only where he adds to the property of another, but also where he saves the other from expense or loss. The word "benefit," therefore, denotes any form of advantage. The advantage for which a person ordinarily must pay is pecuniary advantage; it is not, however, necessarily so limited, as where a physician attends an insensible person who is saved subsequent pain or who receives thereby a greater chance of living.

"c. Unjust retention of benefit. Even where a person has received a benefit from another, he is liable to pay therefor only if the circumstances of its receipt or retention are such that, as between the two persons, it is unjust for him to retain it."

"d. Where benefit and loss coincide. Ordinarily the benefit to the one and the loss to the other are co-extensive, and the result of the remedies given under the rules stated in the Restatement of this Subject is to compel the one to surrender the benefit which he has received and thereby to make restitution to the other for the loss which he has suffered."

"§ 3. TORTIOUS ACQUISITION OF A BENEFIT.

"A person is not permitted to profit by his own wrong at the expense of another.

"Comment:

"a. The principle stated in this Section underlies the more specific rules stated in Chapter 7, by which in many cases a person who receives property as the result of a tort committed by him against another has a duty of compensating the other for the loss suffered, at least to the extent of the benefit received."

"§ 4. REMEDIES.

"In situations in which a person is entitled to restitution, he is entitled, in an appropriate case, to one or more of the following remedies:

- "(a) the use of self-help to regain or to retain possession of land or chattels;
- "(b) a judgment by a court of law enforced by a writ directing a sheriff or other officer of the court to seize and restore the subject matter to him;
- "(c) a decree by a court of equity that the title or possession of the subject matter be transferred to him or that a cause of action or other right be reinstated;
- "(d) a decree by a court of equity that a lien upon the subject matter or its proceeds be established, enforced, discharged, or reduced;
- "(e) a judgment or decree by which the transferor is subrogated to the position of another claimant against the transferee;
- "(f) a judgment at law or decree in equity for the payment of money, directly or by way of set-off or counterclaim.

"§19. MISTAKEN BELIEF AS TO EXISTENCE OF A NONCONTRACTUAL DUTY TO PAY.

"A person who has paid money to another because of an erroneous belief induced by a mistake of fact that he was thereby performing in whole or in part a duty to the payee, other than a contract duty, is entitled to restitution of the amount so paid if such did not exist.

"Comment:

"a. The rule stated in this Section is applicable both where there was no original liability and where the liability has terminated, as where there has been a prior payment by the payor or by some other party."

"b. Tort claims. A person who pays money to another in satisfaction of a non-existent tort liability assumed to have been created by the conduct of the payor or of someone for whose conduct he is responsible, is entitled to recover it except where the payment is made by way of compromise. There are innumerable bases of tort liability and hence there are many kinds of mistakes of fact which may have caused the error as to liability."

"If the payment was made in mistaken belief as to the existence of a fact without which the tort liability would not exist, there can be recovery under the rule stated in this Section."

"§ 44. LIMITATIONS ON RESTITUTION. IN GENERAL.

"A person who has paid money or otherwise conferred a benefit upon another induced thereto by a mistake of law is not entitled to restitution if he would not have been so entitled had the mistake been one of fact."

"§ 45. SATISFACTION OF NON-EXISTENT OBLIGATION. WHEN RESTITUTION NOT GRANTED.

"Except as otherwise stated in §§46-55, a person who, induced thereto solely by a mistake of law, has conferred a benefit upon another to satisfy in whole or in part an honest claim of the other to the performance given, is not entitled to restitution."

"Comment on:

"a. The rule stated in this Section depends upon the policy against reopening settled transactions where the transferee has made an honest claim and payment has been made without coercion or mistake of fact."

"The rule is applicable to all kinds of supposed obligations, including those for taxes levied without proper authorization."

"c. Mistake of law and fact. Where money is paid another when it is not due because of two basic mistakes, one of law and one of fact, since the mistake of fact is one of the inducing causes, restitution will be granted irrespective of the fact that a mistake of law was also a cause."

"§46. SATISFACTION OF NON-EXISTENT OBLIGATION. WHEN RESTITUTION GRANTED.

"A person who has conferred a benefit upon another because of an erroneous belief induced by a mistake of law that he is under a duty so to do, is entitled to restitution as though the mistake were one of fact if:

- "(a) the benefit was conferred by a State or subdivision thereof, or
- "(b) the benefit was received on behalf of a court which has control over its disposition, or
- "(c) the mistake was as to the law of a State in which the transferor neither resided nor did business, except a mistake of law in the payment of taxes, or
- "(d) the mistake was as to the validity of a judgment subsequently reversed."

"Comment of Clause (c):

"c. The rule stated in this clause applies only in those situations where it may be assumed that the transferor is unfamiliar with the law of the jurisdiction which controls the transaction. A foreigner, if regularly doing business in the State, even though temporarily, is not entitled to restitution hereunder because of an error of law. On the other hand, if a person is domiciled in another State and does not regularly transact business in the State as to which he makes a mistake of law, the mistake of law has the same consequences as if it were a mistake of fact."

"§55. BENEFIT OBTAINED BY FRAUD OR MISREPRESENTATION.

"A person who has conferred a benefit upon another induced thereto by a mistake of law, is entitled to restitution thereof if his mistake was caused by "(a) reliance upon a fraudulent misrepresentation of law by the other, or

"(b) justifiable reliance upon an innocent misrepresentation of law by the other."

"§59. LACK OF CARE BY TRANSFEROR.

"A person who has conferred a benefit upon another by mistake is not precluded from maintaining an action for restitution by the fact that the mistake was due to his lack of care."

"Comment:

"a. The fact that the transferor fell below the standard of a reasonable man in ascertaining facts or in drawing inferences from facts, whether or not his failure was with respect to his own interests, those of the payee or those of third persons, is normally not decisive and does not prevent him from obtaining restitution. This is so because one is not penalized for lack of care unless this results in harm to someone else, and restitution is allowed because of mistake only to the extent that benefits have been received by one at the expense of the other."

"§61. EXISTENCE OF MORAL DUTY BY TRANSFEROR.

"A person who, in the mistaken belief that he is subject to a duty to another, has conferred a benefit upon such other intending to confer or manifesting that he is conferring the benefit as the performance of such duty, is not entitled to restitution therefor, in the absence of fraud, misrepresentation, or duress by the transferee, if the existence of an enforceable duty was prevented only by the Statute of Frauds, and Statute of Limitation, a discharge in bankruptcy, infancy or coverture at the time of the original transaction, or if otherwise it is not inequitable for the transferee to retain the benefit."

" §70. IN GENERAL.

"A person who has conferred a benefit upon another as the result of a transaction which is void or voidable because of duress or undue influence, is entitled to restitution under the same conditions as if the benefit had been conferred as the result of fraud."

"§73. VOID JUDGMENTS AND JUDICIAL PROCESSES.

"(1) Except as stated in Subsection (2), a person is entitled to restitution of a benefit which he has conferred upon another, induced thereto by a levy under or a threat of execution of a judgment or process which is void as to him, if the execution thereof would subject him to serious risk of substantial loss.

"(2) An action for restitution does not lie against an officer who, acting in good faith and in conformity with process which, although invalid, is fair on its face, has received payment and has paid it over to the person specified in the process.

"Comment:

"a. The rule stated in the Section is a special application of the rule stated in §70. It is applicable, and applicable only, to judgments or processes to which the payor has no duty of obedience or which, if executed by the seizure of his things, would affect his interests therein no more than would any wholly unauthorized and wrongful seizure. This is true where the judgment or process is void as to all persons and also where, although valid as to others, it is ineffective as to the payor. A void judgment cannot be the basis of a valid execution or process; however, under the conditions stated in Subsection (2), the enforcing officer is relieved from liability."

"§75. VOID TAXES AND ASSESSMENTS.

"(1) Except as otherwise provided for by statute, a person who without mistake of fact pays a tax or assessment to a municipal corporation, or to a State if a suit for restitution is permitted against the State, is entitled to restitution of the amount paid if, but only if,

"(a) the statute, ordinance, or administrative order by virtue of which the tax or assessment was levied and paid was void as to the payor, and

"(b) the payor reasonably believed that if the payment was not made the means taken to enforce collection of the tax or assessment would subject him to serious risk of imprisonment or of the loss of possession of his things or of other substantial loss.

"(2) A collecting officer who has received possession of the money is under a duty of restitution until he has paid the money over to the municipal corporation or State for which he received it; if the payor did not protest the tax before such payment over, the officer is thereafter relieved from liability; if the payor protested the tax before the payment over, the collecting officer is thereafter relieved from liability only if he is required by statute to make such payment over irrespective of protest."

"Comment on Subsection (1):"

"e. Void taxes. The most important situations in which a taxpayer is entitled to recover for a tax improperly collected are those where the statute, ordinance, or order upon which the tax is based is unconstitutional or where, although valid as to others, the tax is void as to the payor or with respect to his property because the State does not have jurisdiction to tax him or his property, or where an assessment is void because an unfair method of valuation has been used."

"Comment of Subsection (1, b):"

f Duress. Restitution is allowed only if payment is made because of a reasonable anticipation by the payor of substantial risk of loss or serious inconvenience if the payment is not made. The burden of proving this is on the payor. As in the case of other transactions set aside for duress, the question of whether or not there is sufficient coercion to require restitution is a matter of degree, but rules with respect to certain situations have become crystallized. Thus payment made a considerable time before it is necessary to do so in order to avert the threatened loss (see Illustration 7), or payment made to save interest at not much above the normal rate is not a sufficient basis for restitution (see Illustration 8).

"On the other hand, the payor is entitled to restitution if he makes payments immediately necessary to retain or regain possession of land or goods which otherwise would be taken from him (see Illustration 9); to prevent a lease from being forfeited or a condition from happening which would adversely affect his interests in the subject matter; to effectuate an impending transaction with a third person which would be prevented by his failure to pay (see Illustration 10); to continue or to retain a business which otherwise could not be operated; or to retain his personal freedom which he would otherwise lose. It is not necessary for the taxpayer to wait until the officer has taken possession of the goods, closed his business, or put him in prison. Where the tax official would be privileged to act in this way without further judicial process if the tax were valid, payments thus made are not voluntary, and the fact that the taxpayer could have secured an injunction against the enforcement of the tax does not preclude the right to restitution."

"g. Penalties and forfeitures. Under many tax laws which are of doubtful validity, a heavy penalty is imposed for failure to pay the tax. Where this is true, even though there is no attempt to seize the things or the person of the taxpayer, if he has a reasonable belief that upon failure to pay the tax there is a substantial chance of serious loss because of the imposition of the penalty, his payment is coerced and can be recovered. The threatened imposition of a substantial fine with a reasonable chance of its being imposed is to be distinguished from the likelihood of being required to pay interest, even though somewhat above the normal rate."

"§ 139. CAPACITY OF DEFENDANT.

"Incapacity to enter into a contract or to incur liability in tort is not in itself a defense in an action for restitution."

Comment:

"a. Reason for the rule. Certain persons are not subject to liability upon agreements into which they have entered. This is true of infants and insane persons and, to some extent even under some modern statutes, of married women. Likewise idiots and very young children who do not have sufficient mentality to form a purpose or to understand the consequences of their physical reactions, may have no capacity to incur liability in tort.

The reasons which cause incapacity to make contracts or to incur liability in tort do not apply to actions for restitution which are based upon unjust enrichment. It is fair that married women, insane persons and infants, even if they are not required to perform their promises or to pay for the harm which they do, should be required to return benefits which they have received, at least if they are still in possession of the subject matter or its proceeds."

"d. Benefits received other than by an agreement or tort.

Any person whether or not having capacity to be liable otherwise, is liable in an action for the restitution of benefits which he has received and which it would be unjust for him to retain."

"Irreparable injury is prerequisite for traditional equity jurisdiction to grant injunctive relief."

"Though remitting of employees to action for refund of income taxes withheld frustrated their chosen method of bearing witness to their religious convictions, inasmuch as they would not succeed in action for refund, bar of Anti-Injunction Act was not for such reason inapplicable to action for injunctive relief against withholding."

"Where complaint prayed that the Government be permanently enjoined from assessing any tax liability for 1971, from reexamining plaintiffs' tax returns for 1971 and from issuing further statutory notices of deficiency to plaintiffs for the tax year 1971, the complaint by its own terms fell within the literal prohibition of the antiinjunction section of the Internal Revenue Code and, therefore, federal district court did not have jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for."

"The statutory ban against judicial interference with the assessment or collection of taxes, embodied in the antiinjunction provision of the Internal Revenue Code, is equally applicable to activities that are intended to or may culminate in the assessment or collection of taxes."

"Plaintiffs who sought a permanent injunction restraining the Government from assessing any tax liability for one tax year and from reexamining plaintiffs' tax returns for that year did not establish extra-ordinary or exceptional circumstances bringing them within the judicially created exception to the antiinjunction provision of the Internal Revenue Code where no contortions of the fact would establish that irreparable injury would occur if the desired relief was not granted, so that plaintiffs had an adequate remedy at law, and where plaintiffs did not establish that the Government could under no circumstances prevail"

"Under the Declaratory Judgment Acts' specific exception barring declaratory judgments with respect to federal taxes, district court lacked jurisdiction to enter judgment declaring that certain already issued tax deficiency notices were illegal, invalid and void."

summary judgment to nonmoving party."

"Appellate court must carefully review record and determine that moving party against whom summary judgment was rendered had full and fair opportunity to ventilate issues involved in motion."

"While purpose of requirement that Internal Revenue Service send notice of deficiency to taxpayer by certified or registered mail is to provide taxpayer with actual notice, notice of deficiency will be sufficient if mailed to taxpayer's last known address."

"Under statute which provides that assessment may be enjoined by proceeding in proper court, and since injunctive relief against Internal Revenue Service is generally prohibited by Anti-Injunction Act, taxpayer was not entitled to injunctive relief based on showing alone that assessment had been made prior to valid notice of deficiency."

"Since payment of tax followed by suit for refund constitutes adequate remedy at law, since taxpayer presented to district court all that it deemed material on equitable issues inherent in its application for injunctive relief, and since its president stated that taxpayer had ability to pay alleged tax deficiency, taxpayer, which alleged that fact of assessment as well as possibility of collection would have deleterious effect on its business operations and credit rating, was not entitled to injunction preventing Internal Revenue Service from collecting tax deficiency."

9.4 Exceptions to the Anti-injunction Act

26 U.S.C. §7426

"(a) Actions permitted

"(1) Wrongful levy

"If a levy has been made on property or property has been sold pursuant to a levy, and any person (other than the person against whom is assessed the tax out of which such levy arose) who claims an interest in or lien on such property and that such property was wrongfully levied upon may bring a civil action against the United States in a district court of the United States. "(c) Validity of assessment

"For purposes of an adjudication under this section, the assessment of tax upon which the interest or lien of the United States is based shall be conclusively presumed to be valid.

"(d) Limitation on rights of action

"No action may be maintained against any officer or employee of the United States (or former officer or employee) or his personal representative with respect to any acts for which an action could be maintained under this section.

"(e) Substitution of United States as party

"If an action, which could be brought against the United States under this section, is improperly brought against any officer or employee of the United States (or former officer or employee) or his personal representative, the court shall order, upon such terms as are just, that the pleadings be amended to substitute the United States as a party for such officer or employee as of the time such action was commenced upon proper service of process on the United States.

"(f) Provision inapplicable

"The provisions of section 7422(a) (relating to prohibition of suit prior to filing claim for refund) shall not apply to actions under this section."

"Preliminary Injunction.

"(1) Notice. No preliminary injunction shall be issued without notice to the adverse party.

"(2) Consolidation of Hearing with Trial on Merits. Before or after the commencement of the hearing of an application for a preliminary injunction, the court may order the trial of the action on the merits to be advanced and consolidated with the hearing of the application. Even when this consolidation is not ordered, any evidence received upon an application for a preliminary injunction which would be admissible upon the trial on the merits becomes part of the record on the trial and need not be repeated upon the trial. F.R.C.P. Rule 65, Notes"1. Generally

"Equitable relief by injunction is remedial, not penal."

"Injunction is preventive remedy and cannot be invoked for purpose of punishment for wrongful acts already committed."

"2. Purpose

"Purpose of injunctions is to prevent future violations, and it can be utilized even without showing past wrongs, but moving party must satisfy court that relief is needed, and that there exists some cognizable danger of recurrent violations, something more than mere possibility which serves to keep case alive."

"Function of equitable remedy of injunctions is preventive, prohibitory, protective, or restorative, as law and circumstances of case warrant."

"4. Applicability; admiralty proceedings

"Courts sitting in admiralty may award injunctive relief in accordance with Rule 65 in situations where such relief would be appropriate on land."

"6. Temporary restraining injunction compared

"Rule 65(a) and (b) make restraining orders and injunctions."

"Where opposing party has notice of application for temporary restraining order, such order does not differ functionally from preliminary injunction."

"Rule 65(a) contemplates that issuance of preliminary injunction shall be upon notice to adverse party and after hearing."

"Temporary injunction is granted upon evidence after trial and is not governed by same rules which regulate and control granting of temporary restraining order."

"10. Generally

"Need for, and availability of, such equitable remedy as injunction must be reconsidered in view of existence of Declaratory Judgment Act as well as liberal joinder provision of Rules of Civil Procedure."

"Injunctive relief is not warranted pursuant to 42 U.S.C.S. §2000e et seq. where movant has not sustained its burden of proof that irreparable harm will result to it if preliminary relief is not granted, facts do not raise questions going to merits so serious, substantial, difficult and doubtful as to make them fair grounds for litigation and there is no strong or substantial likelihood or probability of success on merits on part of movant since criteria for granting injunctive relief under 42 U.S.C.S. §2000e et seq. is showing that prompt judicial action is necessary to carry out proposes of act." Elliott v. Swartwout (1836)

"It is the settled doctrine of the law that where money is illegally demanded and received by an agent, he cannot exonerate himself from personal responsibility by paying it over to his principal, when he has had notice not to pay it over."

"The payment of the illegal duties gave the collector no right to them, and the collector cannot discharge himself by paying over the money. (1 Camp. N. P., 396) This was a case in which money was illegally claimed by overseers, and was paid over to their successors; but they were not protected from personal responsibility by the payment. if [sic] it was illegally demanded, it was illegally paid over by the collector."

"It appears that the collector was instructed to demand the higher duties. While obedience to his instructions might give him a full claim to indemnity on the government, he is not the less responsible to individuals. Such instructions are no protection to him when he violates the law."

"But it is said the collector was an agent. He is agent of the law, to carry its provisions into effect. He is not an agent for any illegal purposes; and he is bound to disregard instructions from the department of the government having charge of the collection of the revenue, if they are contrary to law. If a collector is an agent of the treasury, then he is not an agent of the law of the land."

"The collector is responsible as a principal, when he compels the payment of duties; and he must answer to an injured individual for his actions. This is a responsibility from which he cannot escape."

.. where a man demands money of another, as matter of right, and that other, with a full knowledge of the facts upon which the demand is founded, has paid a sum of money voluntarily, ee voluntarily, he cannot recover it back."

"The case of Hearsey v. Pryn (7 Johns., 179)...the court says the law is well settled that an action may be sustained against an agent who has received money to which the principal had no right, if the agent has had notice not to pay it over."

"... in the case of Ripley v. Gelston...the cases which exempt an agent when the money is paid over to his principal without notice, do not apply to cases where the money is paid by compulsion, or extorted as a condition, &c. From this view of the cases, it may be assumed as the settled doctrine of the law that where money is illegally demanded and received by an agent, he cannot exonerate himself from personal responsibility by paying it over to his principal, if he has had notice not to pay it over."

"The Future Trading Act of August 24, 1921, which in its essence and on its face, is a complete regulation of boards of trade...cannot be sustained as a valid exercise of the taxing power of Congress, but is an unconstitutional interference with the rights reserved by U.S. Const., 10th Amend., to the several states."

Midwest Haulers v. Brady (June 2, 1942)

"Section 3653 of the [1939] Internal Revenue Code is not an absolute bar to every action to restrain the collection of an illegal tax. [Cites omitted.] The genesis of this statute is found in Section 10 of the Act of March 2, 1867, ch. 169, 14 Stat. 475. Originally, it was an amendment of the Internal Revenue Act of July 13, 1866, ch. 184, 14 Stat. 152. The Act of which it was made a part expressly provided for a remedy at law by suit to recover taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected. In its present language it appeared in the Revised Statutes independently of the Revenue Act as R.S. 3224. Its original and present setting require that it be construed in pari materia with other parts of the Internal Revenue Act which give to a taxpayer the unqualified right of recovery of all that has been illegally exacted from him under the guise of a tax. Snyder v. Marks, 109 U.S. 189, 3 S.Ct. 157, 27 L.Ed. 901. When it is made to appear that the rights and property of an alleged taxpayer will be utterly destroyed if he is compelled to pay a tax that is not in fact his obligation and the pursuit of his remedy by suit for the recovery will not adequately restore to him that which he has lost, a court of equity may take jurisdiction to grant relief in advance of payment notwithstanding the prohibition of Section 3653. The complaint in the case at bar, the allegations of which are admitted by the motion to dismiss, alleges facts which if true, show that the taxes sought to be collected by the appellee from appellant probably are not in fact due...."

Flora v. United States (Mar. 21, 1960)

"Frequently, the legislative history of a statute is the most fruitful source of instruction as to the proper interpretation of the statute."

"Our system of taxation is based upon voluntary assessment and payment, not upon distraint."

"I pass, then, to an examination of the history of the present jurisdictional provision, §1346(a), and the scheme of the present tax law to determine whether there is any real support for the Government's contention that a proper reading of the language of §1346(a) requires an implied qualification to its obvious self-explanatory meaning, so that full payment of an assessment, alleged to have been illegal, is made a condition upon the jurisdiction of a District Court to entertain a suit for refund."

"Judicial proceedings for refund of United States taxes in federal courts originated, without express statutory authority, by suits against Collectors (now District Directors), before the United States had made itself amenable to suit. Elliott v. Swartwout, 1836, 10 Pet. 137, 9 L.Ed. 373, recognized the existence of a right of action against a Collector of Customs for refund of duties illegally assessed and paid under protest. The doctrine of the action, based upon the common-law count of assumpsit for money had and received, was thus formulated: "[W]here money is illegally demanded and received by an agent, he cannot exonerate himself from personal responsibility by paying it over to his principal; if he has had notice not to pay it over." 10 Pet., at page 158. As a result of that case, Collectors of Customs who collected monies, paid under protest, resorted to the practice of withholding such amounts from the Government as indemnity against loss should a refund suit against them be successful. See Plumb, Tax Refund Suits Against Collectors of Internal Revenue, 60 Harv.L.Rev. 685, 688-689. That practice led to the guise of self-protection. Because of the wholesale frauds of Swartwout, the New York Collector (see Swartwout, 18 Dictionary of American Biography (1936), 238-239), Congress, in 1839, expressly prohibited such withholdings by Customs Collectors pending the possibility, or the result, of litigation against them. Act of March 3, 1839, c. 82, §2, 5 Stat. 348. Six years later, in 1845, this Court held that this Act, by reducing the Collector to "the mere bearer of those sums [duties] to the Treasury," terminated the right of action against the Collector for refund, for, being deprived of the right to withhold payment to his principal, he was no longer under an implied promise to refund illegally collected duties to the taxpayer. Cary v. Curtis, 1845, 3 How. 236, 241, 11 L.Ed. 576.

"This created the intolerable condition of denying to taxpayers any remedy whatever in the District Courts to recover amounts illegally assessed and collected, and--doubtless also influenced by the vigorous dissents of Mr. Justice Story and Mr. Justice McLean in that case--induced Congress to pass the Act of Feb. 26, 1845, c. 22, 5 Stat. 727, which was the first statute expressly giving taxpayers the right to sue for refund of taxes illegally collected. That Act, in substance, provided that nothing contained in the Act of March 3, 1839 (c. 82, §2, 5 Stat. 348), should be construed to take away or impair the right of any person who had paid duties under protest to any Collector of Customs, which were not lawfully "payable in part or in whole," to maintain an action at law against the Collector to recover such amounts. It is evident that Congress, by that statute, was merely concerned to reverse the consequences of Cary v. Curtis, supra, and to restore the right of action against Collectors which had originally been sustained in Elliott v. Swartwout, supra. Neither the terms of that statute nor such knowledge as is available of its history reveals any limiting purpose except that the protest be made in writing before or at the time of the payment.

"While that statute, the Act of Feb. 26, 1845, referred only to refunds of customs duties, this Court held in City of Philadelphia v. The Collector (Diehl) 1866, 5 Wall. 720, 730-733, 18 L.Ed. 614, that taxpayers had the same right of action against Collectors to recover illegally collected internal revenue taxes." [Brackets original with the court.]

Smith v. Flinn (Dec. 5, 1958)

"Extraordinary and exceptional circumstances render inapplicable provisions of federal statute prohibiting suits to restrain assessment or collection of taxes."

"What constitutes unusual and extraordinary circumstances so as to render the statute inapplicable is determined by no precise formula but is varied and each case must be decided on its own peculiar underlying facts. Courts have held that mere illegality of the exaction is not sufficient to make the statute inapplicable, Allen v. Shelton, 5 Cir., 1938, 96 F.2d. 102, certiorari denied 305 U.S. 630, 59 S.Ct. 94, 83 L.Ed. 404; nor will hardship upon the taxpayer suffice to stay the statute and grant the injunction, [cites omitted]. But the courts have on numerous occasions recognized, though dealing with situations coming within the statutory terms, that its provisions are inapplicable due to additional factors. ... and in Hirst & Co. v. Gentsch, 6 Cir., 1943, 133 F.2d. 247, 248, where it was shown that the taxes sought to be collected from appellant were probably not validly assessed taxes, and if collection was enforced by distraint the appellant would be ruined in its business and forced to close its mine, the court said:

"In that event no remedy provided by the Internal Revenue Law would be adequate to compensate the appellant for its loss. There is thus presented a case under the authorities, as we read them, for an interposition of a court of equity, and the exercise of its extraordinary equity power."

For other cases where the courts have found that these unusual circumstances exist see: Allen v. Regents, 1938, 304 U.S. 439, 58 S.Ct. 980, 82 L.Ed. 1448; Hill v. Wallace, 1922, 259 U.S. 44, 42 S.Ct. 453, 66 L.Ed. 822; Dodge v. Brady, 1916, 240 U.S. 122, 36 S.Ct. 277, 60 L.Ed. 560; *National Foundry Co. of New York v. Director of Int. "A nontaxpayer may obtain an injunction restraining federal government from levying on nontaxpayer's property for purpose of satisfying another's liability. 26 U.S.C.A. (I.R.C.1954) §7421."

"It would appear that in the many cases in which taxpayers have endeavored to restrain collection of a tax, the courts have consistently adhered to the rule laid down in the Miller case, that is, that not only must the element of illegality be present, but, additionally, there must exist special and extraordinary circumstances of sufficient importance to warrant court interference."

Enochs v. Williams Packing & Navigation Co. (May 28, 1962)

"The purpose of §7421(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is to withdraw jurisdiction from the state and federal courts to entertain suits seeking jurisdictions prohibiting the collection of federal taxes, to permit the United States to assess and collect taxes alleged to be due without judicial intervention, and to require that the legal right to the disputed sums be determined in a suit for refund." [Bold added.]

"Section 7421(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, which prohibits suits to restrain the assessment or collection of a federal tax, is inapplicable where it is clear that under no circumstances can the government ultimately prevail; only if it is apparent, on the basis of the information available to the government at the time of suit, that, under the most liberal view of the law and the facts, the United States cannot establish its claim, may the suit for an injunction be maintained, otherwise the District Court is without jurisdiction and the complaint must be dismissed."

"If it is clear that under no circumstances could government ultimately prevail in collection of federal taxes allegedly due, an attempted collection may be enjoined, if equity jurisdiction otherwise exists."

"In Enochs the Supreme Court said, 370 U.S. p. 7, 82 S.Ct. p. 1129,

"We believe the question of whether the Government has a chance of ultimately prevailing is to be determined on the "Statute providing that no suit for purpose of restraining assessment or collection of any tax shall be maintained by any person, whether or not such person is the person against whom such tax was assessed, did not bar plaintiff's suit to enjoin government from levying against plaintiff's real property for taxes assessed against corporations where no formal assessment ever issued against plaintiff."

Economy Plumbing & Heating v. United States (Dec. 12, 1972)

"In support of the foregoing conclusions, we wish to point out and emphasize that Congress has established a well-defined and comprehensive administrative system for the recovery of overpaid taxes by taxpayers. All taxpayers who have overpaid their taxes are within this system and must follow the appropriate procedures and regulations, including the timely filing of claims for refunds for overpayment of taxes, if they are to have the benefits of the system. On the other hand, persons who are not taxpayers are not within the system and can obtain no benefit by following the procedures prescribed for taxpayers, such as the filing of claims for refunds. For example, there have been many cases where parties have sued to enjoin the assessment or collection of their moneys to pay the taxes of another, notwithstanding Section 263 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 (26 U.S.C. §3653 (1952 ed.) that provided that "no suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax shall be maintained in any court" The courts have allowed these suits because the parties filing the suits were not taxpayers and were outside the revenue system of which the above statute is a part. See Long v. Rasmussen, 281 F. 236 (D.Mont. 1922); Rothensies v. Ullman, 110 F.2d. 590 (3rd Cir. 1940); Raffaele v. Granger, 196 F.2d. 620 (3rd Cir. 1952); and Bullock v. Latham, 306 F.2d. 45 (2d Cir. 1962). In Long v. Rasmussen, the court said:

"* * * They [the revenue laws] relate to taxpayers, and not to nontaxpayers. The latter are without their scope. No procedure is prescribed for nontaxpayers, and no attempt is made to annul any of their rights and remedies in due course of law. * * * [Id. 281 F. at 238.]

"In other cases suits have been filed by nontaxpayers whose property has already been taken to pay the taxes of others, without filing claims for refund, and such suits have been allowed against the Collector or District Director of Internal Revenue in actions similar to the old action in assumpsit for money had and received, even though lacking in statutory authority."

"Our plaintiffs are not taxpayers and could not sue for a tax refund as a taxpayer could. All they could do was to sue to recover their property, which was the funds due them as an equitable adjustment under the contract, and this is exactly what they have done.

"The above cases are illustrative of the proposition that a nontaxpayer is outside the administrative system set up for the collection of a refund of overpaid taxes, and is not required to file a claim for refund to recover money taken from him to pay the taxes of another." [Brackets original.]

"A "stay order" or a "stay of proceedings," is a stopping, the act of arresting a judicial proceeding by the order of a court or the temporary suspension of the regular order of proceedings in a cause by direction or order of the court."

"Supreme Court's authority to issue a stay order, in aid of its appellate or original jurisdiction, emanates from its inherent power, the State Constitution and the implementation thereof."

"A "stay order" or a "stay of proceedings," such as we are here concerned with is respectively defined in Black's Law Dictionary 1583 (4th ed.rev.1968) as:

"A stopping; the act of arresting a judicial proceeding by the order of a court. ... The temporary suspension of the regular order of proceedings in a cause, by direction or order of the court,...."

Canal Authority of State of Florida v. Callaway (Feb. 15, 1974)

"Preliminary injunction may be issued to protect plaintiff from irreparable injury and preserve district court's power to render a meaningful decision at trial on merits."

"Grant or denial of preliminary injunction rests in the discretion of district court; however, such discretion is not unbridled and must be exercised in light of the prerequisites for the extraordinary relief of preliminary injunction."

"Prerequisites for grant of preliminary injunction are: substantial likelihood that plaintiff will prevail on the merits, substantial threat that plaintiff will suffer irreparable injury if injunction is not granted, threatened injury to plaintiff outweighing threatened harm injunction may do to defendant and absence of disservice to the public interest if the injunction should be granted."

"Preliminary injunction is an extraordinary and drastic remedy which should not be granted unless the movant clearly carries burden of persuasion."

"Only those injuries that cannot be redressed by application of a judicial remedy after hearing on the merits can properly justify a preliminary injunction."

"In action to enjoin alleged wrongful termination of canal project, district court improperly placed burden of proof on defendants with respect to issue of whether plaintiff was entitled to preliminary injunction...; burden of persuasion as to requirements for the preliminary injunction was at all times upon plaintiff."

"Preliminary injunction should not be issued to protect status quo unless court's ability to render meaningful decision on merits would otherwise be in jeopardy."

"Preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy not available unless plaintiff carries burden of persuasion as to all four prerequisites."

"If currently existing status quo itself is causing one of parties to suit irreparable injury, it may be necessary to alter situation by grant of preliminary injunction so as to prevent injury, thereby returning to last uncontested status quo between parties, or by allowing parties to take proposed action that court finds will minimize irreparable injury; focus always must be on prevention of injury by proper order, not merely on preservation of status quo."

"Importance of requirement for preliminary injunction that plaintiff demonstrate substantial likelihood of prevailing on merits varies with relative balance of threatened hardships facing each of the parties."

"Failure of defendants to appeal from grant to plaintiff of preliminary injunction or from orders regarding subsequent motions to modify the injunction would not, in itself, give rise to modify the preliminary injunction was found to be erroneous; if plaintiff could establish that defendants' failure to take earlier appeal was relevant to prerequisites for preliminary injunction, that factor could be given appropriate consideration on remand, but, otherwise, delay was irrelevant to proper disposition of defendants' motion to modify the preliminary injunction."

"District court has continuing jurisdiction over a preliminary injunction and, in the exercise of that jurisdiction, is authorized to make any changes in the injunction that are equitable in light of subsequent changes in the facts or the law or for any other good reason."

"In view of possibility that erroneous grant of preliminary injunction preventing proposed drawdown of lake which had been created by dam constructed in connection with canal project had caused irreparable injury to trees in lake which remained flooded, district court would be expected to reexamine its order on remand without delay and no evidentiary hearing should be held before reexamination."

Medline Industries, Inc. v. Pascal (Nov. 18, 1974)

"A 'stay order' is synonymous with an injunctive order and is therefore appealable. Supreme Court Rules, rules 307, 307(a), S.H.A. ch. 110A, §§307, 307(a)."

"Illinois courts, as well as the United States Supreme Court, have held that a 'stay order' is synonymous with an injunctive order and therefore appealable. (Property Management, Ltd. v. Howasa, Inc. (1973), 14 Ill.App.3d. 536, 539, 302 N.E.2d. 754; Wiseman v. Law Research, Inc. (1971), 133 Ill.App.2d 790, 793, 270 N.E.2d. 77; School District No. 46 v. None of these cases, nor those cited by Medline, sets forth any requirement for an inquiry into, or consideration of, 'the substance rather than the form of the stay order to determine if it was an injunctive order and therefore appealable', as urged by Medline."

Laing v. United States (Jan. 13, 1976)

"Burden of proof"

"It has been held by the Supreme Court that under the exception to the Anti-Injunction Act's (26 U.S.C.S. §7421(a)) prohibition of suits to restrain the assessment or collection of federal taxes, whereby an injunction may be obtained if (1) it is clear that under no circumstances can the government ultimately prevail, and (2) equity jurisdiction otherwise exists (see §10[a], supra,) the question whether the government will ultimately prevail is to be resolved on the basis of the information possessed by the government at the time of the suit, and that while the burden of producing evidence is on the taxpayer, the government will be required to disclose, through discovery, facts in its sole possession, unless it voluntarily discloses the basis for its assessment, which, if sufficient, will terminate discovery proceedings and justify judgment for the government."

[Laing v. United States, 423 U.S. 161, 96 S.Ct. 473, 46 L.Ed.2d. 416 (1976), Annotation, by Romualdo P. Eclavea]

Commissioner v. Shapiro (Mar. 8, 1976)

"Normally, the Internal Revenue Service may not "assess" a tax or collect it, by levying on or otherwise seizing a taxpayer's assets, until the taxpayer has had an opportunity to exhaust his administrative remedies, which include an opportunity to litigate his tax liability fully in the Tax Court, 26 U.S.C. §§6212, 6213; and if the Internal Revenue Service does attempt to collect the tax by levy or otherwise, before such exhaustion of remedies in violation of §6213, the collection is not protected by the Anti-Injunction Act and may be restrained by a United States district court at the instance of the Taxpayer. §§6213, 7421."

"As the court understood the Williams Packing decision, the Anti-Injunction act does not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction to restrain collection of a tax, if (1) the taxpayer shows "extraordinary circumstances causing irreparable harm" for which he has no "adequate remedy at law," and (2) it is apparent that, under the most liberal view of the law and the facts, the United States "cannot establish its claim"."

"Respondent argues on the other hand that unless the Government has some obligation to disclose the factual basis for its assessments, either in response to a discovery request or on direct order of the court, the exception to the Anti-Injunction Act in Enochs v. Williams Packing Co., supra, is meaningless. The taxpayer can never know, unless the Government tells him, what the basis for the assessment is and thus can never show that the Government will certainly be unable to prevail."

"Our conclusion that the Court of Appeals correctly reversed the judgment of the District Court and remanded for further proceedings is fortified by the fact that construing the Act to permit the Government to seize and hold property on the mere good-faith allegation of an unpaid tax would raise serious constitutional problems in cases, such as this one, where it is asserted that seizure of assets pursuant to a jeopardy assessment is causing irreparable injury. This Court has recently and repeatedly held that, at least where irreparable injury may result from a deprivation of property pending final adjudication of the rights of the parties, the Due Process Clause requires that the party whose property is taken be given an opportunity for some kind of predeprivation or prompt post-deprivation hearing at which some showing of the probable validity of the deprivation must be made."

Elrod v. Burns (June 28, 1976)

"In respect to the political question doctrine, the fact that matters related to a state's, or even the federal government's elective process are implicated by the Supreme Court's resolution of a question is not sufficient to justify its withholding decision of the question."

"There can be no impairment of executive power, whether on the state or federal level, where actions pursuant to that power are impermissible under the Constitution."

"Supreme Court's determination of the limits on state executive power contain in the Constitution is in proper keeping with the Court's primary responsibility of interpreting that document."

"Prohibition on encroachment of First Amendment protections is not absolute; restraints are permitted for appropriate reasons."

"Denial of a public benefit may not be used by the government for the purpose of creating an incentive enabling it to achieve what it may not command directly."

"A significant impairment of First Amendment rights must survive exacting scrutiny."

"Though First Amendment rights are not absolute, they may be curtailed only by interests of vital importance, the burden of proving which rests on the government."

"Loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury."

[Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 96 S.Ct. 2673, 49 L.Ed.2d. (1976).]

United States v. Dema (Oct. 2, 1977)

.. held that statute prohibiting suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax was applicable to motion made by taxpayer to enjoin enforcement of IRS summonses, that injunction could be issued only upon showing that the Government could not ultimately prevail under any circumstances and that equity jurisdiction existed;...."

"Restraint placed on the courts with respect to enjoining the collection or assessment of taxes is not absolute; extraordinary or exceptional circumstances may exist which are of sufficient importance to warrant court interference. 26 U.S.C.A. (I.R.C. 1954) §7421(a)."

"The restraint placed on the courts in this regard, however, is not absolute. John M. Hirst & Co. v. Gentsch, 133 F.2d. 247, 248 (6th Cir. 1943). Extraordinary or exceptional circumstances may exist, for example, which are of sufficient importance to warrant court interference. Singleton v. Mathis, 284 F.2d. 616, 618 (8th Cir. 1960). Therefore, under certain circumstances, a taxpayer may maintain a suit to enjoin the collection of federal taxes. Martin v. Andrews, 238 F.2d. 552, 554 (9th Cir. 1956). In order that such a suit may be maintained, though, the taxpayer has the burden of proving: (1) that the government could not ultimately prevail under any circumstances; and (2) that equity jurisdiction otherwise exists. Enochs, supra, 370 U.S. at 7, 82 S.Ct. 1125; Pizzarello v. United States, 408 F.2d. 579, 582 (2d Cir. 1969)."

"The taxpayer, having once proved his case, should not be subjected to the further harassment of having to defend the same issues again."

"The irreparable injury' done the taxpayer when harassed by his government is but a part of the injury done a society attempting to live free. Arbitrary, arrogant and capricious action by a government agent, engaged in a vendetta and unfettered by law, does injustice to us all, including especially the government itself. Such action cries out for the healing power of judicial intervention."

Bothke v. Fluor Engineers and Constructors, Inc. (Jan. 24, 1983)

"Qualified immunity for federal executive officials is general rule and absolute immunity the exceptional' case."

"Absolute immunity is accorded only to those federal officials whose special function or constitutional status requires complete protection from suit, including members of legislature and judiciary performing their characteristic functions and President of United States."

.. Internal Revenue Service agents who are relatively low-level executive officers with correspondingly narrow range of official discretion are not entitled to absolute immunity."

"Violations of taxpayers procedural rights are exceptions to Anti-Injunction Act."

"For levy to be statutorily authorized, ten-day notice of intent to levy must have issued and taxpayer must be liable for tax."

"Because income tax system is based on voluntary self-assessment, rather than distraint, Internal Revenue Service may assess tax only in certain circumstances and in conformity with proper procedures. 26 U.S.C.A. §6331(a)."

"Internal Revenue Service, with its expertise, is obliged to know its own governing statutes and to apply them realistically."

"We recognize the government's interest in collecting taxes. Congress's taxing power is granted by the Constitution, U.S. Const. Art.I §8, cl. 1; Amend. XVI. The importance of tax collection is reflected in statutes which, for example, prohibit its injunction. See 26 U.S.C. §7421(a)."

"But the law reflects also a Congressional determination that the taxpayer should be afforded certain procedural rights, which the IRS is bound to respect. See, e.g., Laing v. United States, 423 U.S. 161, 96 S.Ct. 473, 46 L.Ed.2d. 416 (1976). In balancing these interests, Congress has determined that violations of the procedural rights at issue here are exceptions to the Anti-Injunction Act."

"With the IRS's broad power must come a concomitant responsibility to exercise it within the confines of the law. The Court has emphasized that no official is above the law, and that the broad powers present broad opportunities for abuse. Buttz, 438 U.S. at 505-06, 98 S.Ct. at 2910-11 (1978). *Ct. Mark v. When monetary compensation available through Tucker Act remedy is so inadequate that plaintiff would not be justly compensated for seizure of property by United States, injunctive remedy is not barred by sovereign immunity. 5 U.S.C.A. §702; 5 U.S.C.A. §1491."

"Duty of trial court is to decree relief that corrects condition offending Constitution or United States laws."

"It is important to remember that the plaintiffs do not challenge the defendants' actions merely because just compensation has not been paid; plaintiffs deny the existence of any constitutional or statutory power of the defendants to seize their private ranch. While courts may properly find that the only relief for an authorized taking of private property is compensation in accordance with the just compensation requirement of the fifth amendment, injunctive relief is available when the owner proves that government officials lack lawful authority to expropriate his property. In the latter situation, the landowner is entitled to equitable relief and need not rely on the asserted availability of a damages remedy. When government officials seize private property without constitutional or statutory authority, the trial court must apply general equitable principles to determine whether injunctive relief is proper. This involves determining whether monetary relief is adequate and whether a balancing of the equities favors relief." [Bold added.]

"After other deductions Jensen was left with $144.82 per month to support his family of five. Gulfstream Aerospace Corp. v. Mayacamas Corp. (March 22, 1988)

"The primary issue in this case is whether a district court order denying a motion to stay or dismiss a motion to stay or dismiss an action when a similar suit is pending in state court is immediately appealable."

"In Cohen v. Beneficial Industrial Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 69 S.Ct. 1221, 93 L.Ed. 1528 (1949), however, we recognized a "small class" of decisions that are appealable under §1291 even though they do not terminate the underlying litigation. Id. at 546, 69 S.Ct., at 1225. We stated in Cohen that a district court's decision is appealable under §1291 if it "finally determine[s] claims of right separable from, and collateral to, rights asserted in the action, too important to be denied review and too independent of the cause itself to require that appellate consideration be deferred until the whole case is adjudicated." [Brackets original.]

"We have articulated a three-pronged test to determine whether an order that does not finally resolve a litigation is nonetheless appealable under §1291. [Citations omitted.] First, the order must "conclusively determine the disputed question." Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S., AT 468, 98 S.Ct., at 2458. - Second, the order must "resolve an important issue completely separate from the merits of the action." Ibid. Third and finally, the order must be "effectively unreviewable on appeal from a final judgment." Ibid. (footnote omitted). If the order at issue fails to satisfy any one of these requirements, it is not appealable under the collateral-order exception to §1291."

"First, the action in which the order is entered must be an action that, before the merger of law and equity, was by its nature an action at law. Second, the order must arise from or be based on some matter that would then have been considered an equitable defense or counterclaim. [* * *] Thus, unless a stay order is made in a historically legal action on the basis of a historically equitable defense or counterclaim, the order cannot be analogized to a premerger injunction and therefore cannot be appealed under §1291(a)(1) pursuant to the Enelow-Ettelson doctrine."

"We refrained then from overruling the Enelow and Ettelson decisions, but today we take that step. A half century's experience has persuaded us, as it has persuaded an impressive array of judges and commentators, that the rule is unsound in theory, unworkable and arbitrary in practice, and unnecessary to achieve any legitimate goals."

"We therefore overturn the cases establishing the Enelow-Ettelson rule and hold that orders granting or denying stays of "legal" proceedings on "equitable" grounds are not automatically appealable under §1291(a)(1). This holding will not prevent interlocutory review of district court orders when such review is truly needed. Section 1291(a)(1) will, of course, continue to provide appellate jurisdiction over orders that grant or deny injunctions and orders that have the practical effect of granting or denying injunctions and have "serious, perhaps irreparable, consequence. Carson v. American Brands, Inc., 450 U.S. 79 84, 101 S.Ct. 993, 996, 67 L.Ed.2d. 59 (1981), quoting Baltimore Contractors, Inc. v. Bodinger, supra, 348 U.S., at 181, 75 S.Ct., at 252. As for orders that were appealable under §1291(a)(1) solely by virtue of the Enelow-Ettelson doctrine, they may, in appropriate circumstances, be reviewed under the collateral-order doctrine of §1291, see Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital v. Mercury Construction Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 103 S.Ct. 927, 74 L.Ed.2d. 765 (1983), and the permissive appeal provision of §1292(b), as well as by application for writ of mandamus. Our holding today merely prevents interlocutory review of district court orders on the basis of historical circumstances that have no relevance to modern litigation."

Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics (June 21, 1971)

"Petitioner's complaint states a federal cause of action under the Fourth Amendment for which damages"" are recoverable upon proof of injuries resulting from the federal agents' violation of that Amendment."

"The Fourth Amendment operates as a limitation upon the exercise of federal power regardless of whether the state in whose jurisdiction that power is exercised would prohibit or penalize the identical act if engaged in by a private citizen, and citizen who sustains damage as result of federal agents' violation of Fourth Amendment is not limited to action in tort, under state law, in state courts, to obtain money damages to redress invasion of Fourth Amendment rights."

"Damages may be obtained for injuries consequent upon a violation of the Fourth Amendment by federal officials."

.. power, once granted, does not disappear like a magic gift when it is wrongfully used. An agent acting--albeit unconstitutionally--in the name of the United States possesses a far greater capacity for harm than an individual trespasser exercising no authority other than his own. [Cites omitted.] Accordingly, as our cases make clear, the Fourth Amendment operates as a limitation upon the exercise of federal power regardless of whether the State in whose jurisdiction that power is exercised would prohibit or penalize the identical act if engaged in by a private citizen."

"Historically, damages have been regarded as the ordinary remedy for an invasion of personal interests in liberty? ... Of course, the Fourth Amendment does not in so many words provide for its enforcement by an award of monetary damages for the consequences of its violation. But "it is * * * well settled that where legal rights have been invaded, and a federal statute provides for a general right to sue for such invasion, federal courts may use any available remedy to make good the wrong done." Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S., at 684, 66 S.Ct. at 777 (footnote omitted)."

"Having concluded that petitioner's complaint states a cause of action under the Fourth Amendment, supra, at 2001-2004, we hold that petitioner is entitled to recover money damages for any injuries he has suffered as a result of the agents' violation of the Amendment."

"The contention that the federal courts are powerless to accord a litigant damages for a claimed invasion of his federal constitutional rights until Congress explicitly authorizes the remedy cannot rest on the notion that the decision to grant compensatory relief involves a resolution of policy considerations not susceptible of judicial discernment. Thus, in suits for damages based on violations of federal statutes lacking any express authorization of a damage remedy, this Court has authorized such relief where, in its view, damages are necessary to effectuate the congressional policy underpinning the substantive provisions of the statute."

"But I do not think that the fact that the interest is protected by the Constitution rather than statute or common law justifies the assertion that the federal courts are powerless to grant damages in the absence of explicit congressional action authorizing the remedy."

"If explicit congressional authorization is an absolute prerequisite to the power of a federal court to accord compensatory relief regardless of the necessity or appropriateness of damages as a remedy simply because of the status of a legal interest as constitutionally protected, then it seems to me that explicit congressional authorization is similarly prerequisite to the exercise of equitable remedial discretion in favor of constitutionally protected interests. Conversely, if a general grant of jurisdiction to the federal courts by Congress is thought adequate to empower a federal court to grant equitable relief for all areas of subject-matter jurisdiction enumerated therein, see 28 U.S.C. §1331(a), then it seems to me the same statute is sufficient to empower a federal court to grant a traditional remedy at law."

"To be sure, 'it must be remembered that legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts.' Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. Co. of Texas v. May, 194 U.S. 267, 270, 24 S.Ct. 638, 639, 48 L.Ed. 971 (1904). But it must also be recognized that the Bill of Rights is particularly intended to vindicate the interests of the individual in the face of the popular will as expressed in legislative majorities; at the very least, it strikes me as no more appropriate to await express congressional authorization of traditional judicial relief with regard to these legal interests than with respect to interests protected by federal statutes."

"Bivens, after all, has invoked judicial processes claiming entitlement to compensation for injuries resulting from allegedly lawless official behavior, if those injuries are properly compensable in money damages. I do not think a court of law--vested with the power to accord a remedy--should deny him his relief simply because he cannot show that future lawless conduct will thereby be deterred."

[Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 1999 (1971)]

Davis v. Passman (Jan. 3, 1977)

"Although Fourteenth Amendment's equal protection clause applies only to states, Fifth Amendment due process clause contains equal protection component applicable to federal government."

"Statutory actions may give breadth to constitutional rights, but congressional inaction cannot suffocate them."

"Among other things, the Constitution is a compendium of rights, and their enforcement does not depend upon statutory enrollment. As Bivens establishes, legislative inaction does not vitiate constitutional rights. Statutory actions may give breath to constitutional rights, but congressional inaction cannot suffocate them."

[Davis v. Passman, 544 F.2d. 865 (1977)]

Young v. IRS (Sept. 25, 1984)

"Summary judgment serves as vehicle with which court can determine whether exploration of fact is necessary."

"Because of limited nature of district court's jurisdiction, court may inquire into its jurisdiction sua sponte."

"Statute providing for equal rights of all citizens is restricted by import of its language to discrimination based on race or color, and was not appropriate basis for relief to plaintiff seeking to challenge taxes, in view of statutory provision that 'all persons' shall be subject to taxes."

"Actions of Internal Revenue Service officials, even if beyond scope of their official duties, are acts under color of federal law, and not state law, and thus 1871 civil rights statute is not appropriate basis for relief to plaintiff seeking to challenge Internal Revenue tax statutes."

"Statute granting to district court original jurisdiction of any civil action arising under any act of Congress providing for internal revenue does not create jurisdiction in and of itself, and suit must be based on some cause of action which the Internal Revenue Code recognizes and allows plaintiff to bring."

Sovereignty and Freedom Points and Authorities

"Where whole thrust of plaintiff's case was that he was outside scope of the Internal Revenue code so that actions of IRS officials were violations of his rights, statute granting district court original jurisdiction of any civil action arising under any act of Congress providing for internal revenue was inapplicable and did not provide plaintiff with jurisdiction."

"No Bivens-type cause of action lies against Internal Revenue Service or IRS officials and agents for collection and assessment of taxes."

"United States has specifically reserved its immunity with respect to claims arising out of tax collection and assessment, and, to extent that any part of plaintiff's complaint challenging Internal Revenue Code could be construed as claim against United States, it was barred by doctrine of sovereign immunity, and same was true despite contention that claim was not against the United States but rather against the Internal Revenue Service."

"Secretary of the Treasury created Internal Revenue Service pursuant to legislative grant of authority, and thus the IRS was not a 'private corporation' which would not be entitled to sovereign immunity."

"Although congress did not pass Internal Revenue Code as a title, it did enact the Code as separate Code, which was then denominated as Title 26 by House Judiciary Committee, and, as against contention that the Code was not positive law, district court had discretion to recognize the Code as applicable law, or require proof of underlying statute, and court in its discretion recognized Code as positive law applicable to disputes concerning whether taxes were owed by someone like the plaintiff, who claimed that he was a 'sovereign citizen.'"

"Federal district court has sufficient equitable power to assess sanctions for fees and costs if it finds that a plaintiff's claim is meritless and in bad faith."

"Federal Rule of Civil Procedure providing for imposition of sanctions was designed to discourage dilatory or abusive tactics and to help streamline litigation process by lessening frivolous claims or defenses, and rule applies to anyone who sign pleading, motion or other paper, and same standards apply to pro se litigants, although judicially expressed concerns can be taken into account."

"Assessment of attorney fees may be proper in cases involving parties who claim not to owe income taxes or who file frivolous tax appeals."

"Under both general equitable principles and provisions of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure, case in which plaintiff challenged Internal Revenue Code as being inapplicable to him because he was 'sovereign citizen' was one which merited imposition of sanctions against plaintiff."

[Young v. IRS, 596 F.Supp. 141 (N.D. Ind. 1984)]

Cameron v. I.R.S. (Sept. 6, 1985)

"Internal Revenue Service agents do not have absolute immunity from liability for damages arising out of performance of their duties; agents are immune only if they act in good faith, i.e., with reason to believe that they are acting lawfully."

"It is true that Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 1999, 29 L.Ed.2d. 619 (1971), created a private damage remedy for violations of the Fourth Amendment and that the remedy has been assumed to embrace violations of the Fourth Amendment by internal revenue agents. See, e.g., G.M. Leasing Corp. v. United States, 429 U.S. 338, 360, 97 S.Ct. 619, 632, 50 L.Ed.2d. 530 (1977); Capozzoli v. Tracey, 663 F.2d. 654, 656 n. 1 (5th Cir.1981). But this taxpayer is not complaining about a search or seizure. It is also true that some cases hold, suggest, or assume that the remedy extends to violations of other constitutional rights by such agents, including the right not to be deprived of liberty' or property without due process of law. See e.g., Hall v. United States, 704 F.2d. 246, 249 n. 1 (6th Cir.1983); Rutherford v. United States, 702 F.2d. 580, 583-84 (5th Cir.1983); Stonecipher v. Bray, 653 F.2d. 398, 401-03 (9th Cir.1981); but cf. Murray v. United States, 686 F.2d. 1320, 1325 n. 7 (8th Cir.1982)." [Bold added.]

"If in the course of enforcing the tax laws internal revenue agents ransack people's homes without a warrant, or otherwise violate the Fourth Amendment, the argument for a damage remedy against the agents is a powerful one, since a suit for a tax refund would not be an adequate substitute."

[Cameron v. I.R.S., 773 F.2d. 126 (1985)]

Rauschenberg v. Williamson (Apr. 2, 1986)

"A 'Bivens action' provides an action for damages to vindicate a constitutional right when a federal government official has violated such a right. The action is available if no equally effective remedy is available, no explicit congressional declaration precludes recovery, and when no 'special factors counsel hesitation.'"

[Rauschenberg v. Williamson, 785 F.2d. 985 (11th Cir. 1986)]

Stokwitz v. United States (Nov. 3, 1987)

Sovereignty and Freedom Points and Authorities

"Taxpayer who alleged unlawful seizure and subsequent use of his tax information could pursue remedy through Bivens action, or through other applicable tort action."

"Stokwitz was employed as a civilian attorney by the United States Navy at the Naval Ocean Systems Center ("NOSC"). Stokwitz's secretary and assistant gave a list of allegations of misconduct involving Stokwitz to his immediate supervisor. The supervisor requested a Naval Investigative Service ("NIS") inquiry. Stokwitz was informed of the investigation, ordered to surrender his access badge, and escorted off NOSC property. Shortly thereafter, Stokwitz's supervisor, his secretary, his assistant, and another NOSC employee acting without a warrant or prior authorization, searched Stokwitz's office and briefcase. They seized several items, including Stokwitz's personal copies of his federal and state tax returns for 1982 and 1983, the originals of which had been filed with the Secretary of the Treasury.

"The seized copies of Stokwitz's tax returns were audited by a NOSC employee and disclosed to various MS agents and other Navy employees, and Stokwitz was questioned about their contents. His employment was terminated the next day."

"This is not to say that the appellant has no remedy for the alleged unlawful seizure and subsequent use of his tax information. Those issues can be addressed in Stokwitz's Bivens action, or through any other applicable tort action." [Stokwitz v. United States, 831 F.2d. 893 (9th Cir. 1987)]

Mahoney v. National Organization for Women (Dec. 10, 1987)

"Plaintiff cannot invoke Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause as basis for Bivens claim against federal agents acting under color of federal law."

"Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Federal Bureau of Narcotics, [cite omitted], established a federal common-law cause of action for damages caused by a federal agent acting "under color of his authority" in violation of a claimant's fourth amendment right."

.. a Bivens action has two principal elements: first, a claimant must show he has been deprived of a right secured by the Constitution and the laws of the United States; second, he must show that in depriving him of that right the defendant acted under color of federal law."

[Mahoney v. National Organization for Women, 681 F.Supp. 129 (D.Conn. 1987)]

Kingsley v. Bureau of Prisons (June 24, 1991)

"In a Bivens action, "damages may be obtained for injuries consequent upon a violation of [the Constitution] by federal officials." 403 U.S. at 395, 91 S.Ct. at 2004." [Brackets original.]

[Kingsley v. Bureau of Prisons, 937 F.2d. 26 (2nd Cir. 1991)]

Janicki Logging Co. v. Mateer (Dec. 13, 1994)

"District courts have jurisdiction over Bivens actions brought against employees of federal government in their individual capacities to redress violations of citizens' constitutional rights."

"Logging company's failure to state Bivens cause of action against Forest Service officials did not deprive district court of jurisdiction."

"District court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to grant leave for logging company to amend its complaint against officers of Forest Service in their individual capacities in order to substitute Forest Service as defendant to allow transfer to Court of Federal Claims, in light of undue delay and prejudice that would have resulted from amendment...."

"It is clear that district courts do have jurisdiction over Bivens actions. Those actions are brought against employees of the federal government in their individual capacities and are brought to redress violations of citizens' constitutional rights. See Bivens, 403 U.S. at 395-96, 91 S.Ct. at 2004-05. They are firmly within the subject matter jurisdiction of the district courts."

"It is true that Janicki cannot state a cause of action in this case, but that inability did not deprive the district court of jurisdiction. See Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 682, 66 S.Ct. 773, 776, 90 L.Ed. 939 (1946) ("Jurisdiction ... is not defeated ... by the possibility that the averments might fail to state a cause of action on which petitioners could actually recover."); Mace v. Skinner, 34 F.3d. 854, 859-60, 860 n. 6 (9th Cir. 1994) (although plaintiff's Bivens-type complaint may be subject to dismissal, the district court did have subject matter jurisdiction to hear the claim)."

"Since then, the Court has returned to that theme and has declared that a Bivens action will not lie when Congress has created "comprehensive procedural and substantive provisions giving meaningful remedies against the United States...." [Cites omitted.] ...We have, of course, followed the Supreme Court's lead and have summed up the law as follows:

Sovereignty and Freedom Points and Authorities

"The Supreme Court has made clear the propriety of according great deference to Congress in devising remedial schemes.... When Congress has created a statutory remedy for potential harms, the courts must refrain from implying nonstatutory causes of actions such as Bivens. In obeying the Court's directive to show deference to Congress, we [have] held ... that if there is some statutory mechanism for remedying harm ... non-statutory claims are barred.

"Berry v. Hollander, 925 F.2d. 311, 316 (9th Cir.1991); see also Saul v. United States, 928 F.2d. 829, 940 (9th Cir.1991)."

[Janicki Logging Co. v. Mateer, 42 F.3d. 561 (9th Cir. 1994)]

Earnest v. United States (May 2, 1995)

"Assessed income tax deficiency must be paid in full before refund action may be brought in Court of Federal Claims"

"No suit for recovery of income taxes alleged to have been erroneously or illegally assessed or collected may be filed until claim for refund or credit has been duly filed with Secretary, according to provisions of law in that regard, and regulations of Secretary established in pursuance thereof."

"Even assuming that taxpayer's letters to Internal Revenue Service (IRS) requesting removal of income tax liens claimed refund and sufficiently stated basis for such claim, letters were not signed under penalty of perjury and were not submitted on correct form and, therefore, letters did not constitute filing of claim for income tax refund so that taxpayer could bring action to challenge income tax lien and levy imposed against his military retirement benefits."

"Internal Revenue Service (IRS) is entitled to insist on compliance with requirements for bringing suit for recovery of taxes allegedly erroneously or illegally assessed."

"Due Process Clause does not mandate payment of money for its violation and, therefore, does not support jurisdiction in Court of Federal Claims."

"If Internal Revenue Service (IRS) acted improperly in withholding of unpaid income taxes from taxpayer's military retirement benefits, then no taking occurred in violation of Fifth Amendment," for taking results only from authorized acts of government officials."

"Benefits owing military service member are governed by statutes and regulations, and not by general principles of contract law."

"Federal benefits are subject to Internal Revenue Code unless specifically exempted."

"Transfer of action from Court of Federal Claims to District Court due to Court of Federal Claims' lack of jurisdiction is not necessary to advance interests of justice when plaintiff may refile complaint in district court without penalty."

"Federal Claims Court was not required to transfer, in interest of justice, taxpayer's claim against United States for levying income tax lien on taxpayer's military retirement benefits in alleged violation of his due process rights, where limitations for filing actions in district court had not expired."

"Bivens claim against individual officers is not same claim as action against United States and, therefore, claim cannot be transferred .by Court of Federal Claims in interest of justice."

[Earnest v. United States, 33 Fed.Cl. 341 (1995)]

26 C.F.R. §301.6326-1

"(a) In general. Any person may appeal to the district director of the district in which a notice of federal tax lien was filed on the property or rights to property of such person for a release of lien alleging an error in the filing of notice of lien. Such appeal may be used only for the purpose of correcting the erroneous filing of a notice of lien, not to challenge the underlying deficiency that led to the imposition of a lien. If the district director determines that the Internal Revenue Service has erroneously filed the notice of any federal tax lien, the district director shall expeditiously, and, to the extent practicable, within 14 days after such determination, issue a certificate of release of lien. The certificate of release of such lien shall include a statement that the filing of notice of lien was erroneous."

"(b) Appeal alleging an error in the filing of notice of lien.

For purposes of Paragraph (a) of this section, an appeal of the filing of notice of federal tax lien must be based on any one of the following allegations:"

"(1) The tax liability that gave rise to the lien, plus any interest and additions to tax associated with said liability, was satisfied prior to the filing of notice of lien;

"(2) The tax liability that gave rise to the lien was assessed in violation of the deficiency procedures set forth in section 6213 of the Internal Revenue Code;

"(3) The tax liability that gave rise to the lien was assessed in violation of Title 11 of the United States Code (the Bankruptcy Code); or

"(4) The statutory period for collection of the tax liability that gave rise to the lien expired prior to the filing of notice of federal tax lien."

"(c) Notice of federal tax lien that lists multiple liabilities...."

"(d) Procedures for appeal.--(1) Manner. An appeal of the filing of notice of federal tax lien shall be made in writing to the district director (marked for the attention of the Chief, Special Procedures Function) of the district in which the notice of federal tax lien was filed.

"(2) Form. The appeal shall include the following information and documents:

"(i) Name, current address, and taxpayer identification number of the person appealing the filing of notice of federal tax lien;

"(ii) A copy of the notice of federal tax lien affecting the property, if available; and

"(iii) The grounds upon which the filing of notice of federal tax lien is being appealed.

"(A) If the ground upon which the filing of notice is being appealed is that the tax liability in question was satisfied prior to the filing, proof of full payment as defined in paragraph (e) of this section must be provided.

"(B) If the ground upon which the filing of notice is being appealed is that the tax liability that gave rise to lien was assessed in violation of the deficiency procedures set forth in section 6213 of the Internal Revenue Code, the appealing party must explain how the assessment was erroneous.

"(C) If the ground upon which the filing of notice is being appealed is that the tax liability that gave rise to the lien was assessed in violation of Title 11 of the United States Code (the Bankruptcy Code), the appealing party must provide the following:

"(1) The identity of the court and the district in which the bankruptcy petition was filed; and

"(2) The docket number and the date of filing of the bankruptcy petition.

"(3) Time. An administrative appeal of the erroneous filing of notice of federal tax lien shall be made within 1 year after the taxpayer becomes aware of the erroneously filed tax lien.

"(e) Proof of full payment. As used in paragraph (d)(2)(iii) of this section, the term "proof of full payment" means:

"(1) An internal revenue cashier's receipt reflecting full payment of the tax liability in question prior to the date the federal tax lien issue was filed;

"(2) A canceled check to the Internal Revenue Service in an amount which was sufficient to satisfy the tax liability for which release is being sought; or

"(3) Any other manner of proof acceptable to the district director.

"(f) Exclusive remedy. The appeal established by section 6326 of the Internal Revenue Code and by this section shall be the exclusive administrative remedy with respect to the erroneous filing of a notice of federal tax lien.

"(g) Effective date. The provisions of this section are effective July 7, 1989."

26 U.S.C. §6326 Administrative appeal of liens

"(a) In General.--In such form and at such time as the Secretary shall prescribe by regulations, any person shall be allowed to appeal to the Secretary after the filing of a notice of a lien under this subchapter on the property or the rights to property of such person for a release of such lien alleging an error in the filing of the notice of such lien.

"(b) Certificate of release.--If the Secretary determines that the filing of the notice of any lien was erroneous, the Secretary shall expeditiously (and, to the extent practicable, within 14 days after such determination) issue a certificate of release of such lien and shall include in such certificate a statement that such filing was erroneous."

31 U.S.C. §1304

"(a) Necessary amounts are appropriated to pay final judgments, awards, compromise settlements, and interest and costs specified in the judgments or otherwise authorized by law when--

"(1) payment is not otherwise provided for;

"(2) payment is certified by the Comptroller General;

"(3) the judgment, award, or settlement is payable--

"(A) under section 2414, 2517, 2672, or 2677 of title 28;

"(B) under section 3723 of this title;

"(C) under a decision of a board of contract appeals; or

"(D) in excess of an amount payable from the appropriations of an agency for a meritorious claim under section 2733 or 2734 of title 10, section 715 of title 32, or section 203 of the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (42 U.S.C. §2473).

"(b)(1) Interest may be paid from the appropriation made by this section--

"(A) on a judgment of a district court, only when the judgment becomes final after review on appeal or petition by the United States Government, and then only from the date of filing of the transcript of the judgment with the Comptroller General through the day before the date of the mandate or affirmance; or

"(B) on a judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit or the United States Claims Court under section 2516(b) of title 28, only from the date of filing of the transcript of the judgment with the Comptroller General through the day before the date of the mandate of affirmance.

"(2) Interest payable under this subsection in a proceeding reviewed by the Supreme Court is not allowed after the end of the term in which the judgment is affirmed."

10.1 Standing to Sue

Black's Law Dictionary: Standing to Sue Doctrine

"STANDING TO SUE DOCTRINE. Doctrine that in action in federal constitutional court by citizen against a government officer, complaining of alleged unlawful conduct there is no justiciable controversy unless citizen shows that such conduct invades or will invade a private substantive legally protected interest of plaintiff citizen. Associated Industries of New York State v. Ickes, C.C.A.2, 134 F.2d. 694, 702."

[Black's Law Dictionary, Fourth Edition, p. 1577]

Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife \(1992\)

Over the years, our cases have established that the irreducible constitutional minimum of standing contains three elements.

[1] First, the plaintiff must have suffered an "injury in fact"—an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized, see id., at 756; Warth v. Seldin, 422 U. S. 490, 508 (1975); Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U. S. 727, 740-741, n. 16 (1972);^[1] and (b) "actual or imminent, not 'conjectural' or 'hypothetical,' " Whitmore, supra, at 155 (quoting Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U. S. 95, 102 (1983)).

[2] Second, there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of—the injury has to be "fairly. . . trace[able] to the challenged action of the defendant, and not . . . th[e] result [of] the independent action of some third party not before the court." *Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare 561*561 Rights Organization*, 426 U. S. 26, 41-42 (1976).

[3] Third, it must be "likely," as opposed to merely "speculative," that the injury will be "redressed by a favorable decision." Id., at 38, 43.

The party invoking federal jurisdiction bears the burden of establishing these elements. See FW/PBS, Inc. v. Dallas, 493 U. S. 215, 231 (1990); Warth, supra, at 508. Since they are not mere pleading requirements but rather an indispensable part of the plaintiff's case, each element must be supported in the same way as any other matter on which the plaintiff bears the burden of proof, i. e., with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation. See Lujan v. National Wildlife Federation, 497 U. S. 871, 883-889 (1990); Gladstone, Realtors v. Village of Bellwood, 441 U. S. 91, 114-115, and n. 31 (1979); Simon, supra, at 45, n. 25; Warth, supra, at 527, and n. 6 (Brennan, J., dissenting). At the pleading stage, general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant's conduct may suffice, for on a motion to dismiss we "presum[e] that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim." National Wildlife Federation, supra, at 889. In response to a summary judgment motion, however, the plaintiff can no longer rest on such "mere allegations," but must "set forth" by affidavit or other evidence "specific facts," Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 56(e), which for purposes of the summary judgment motion will be taken to be true. And at the final stage, those facts (if controverted) must be "supported adequately by the evidence adduced at trial." Gladstone, supra, at 115, n. 31.

When the suit is one challenging the legality of government action or inaction, the nature and extent of facts that must be averred (at the summary judgment stage) or proved (at the trial stage) in order to establish standing depends considerably upon whether the plaintiff is himself an object of the action (or forgone action) at issue. If he is, there is ordinarily little question that the action or inaction has ^{562*562}caused him injury, and that a judgment preventing or requiring the action will redress it. When, however, as in this case, a plaintiff's asserted injury arises from the government's allegedly unlawful regulation (or lack of regulation) of someone else, much more is needed. In that circumstance, causation and redressability ordinarily hinge on the response of the regulated (or regulable) third party to the government action or inaction—and perhaps on the response of others as well. The existence of one or more of the essential elements of standing "depends on the unfettered choices made by independent actors not before the courts and whose exercise of broad and legitimate discretion the courts cannot presume either to control or to predict," ASARCO Inc. v. Kadish, 490 U.S. 605, 615 (1989) (opinion of Kennedy, J.); see also Simon, supra, at 41-42; and it becomes the burden of the plaintiff to adduce facts showing that those choices have been or will be made in such manner as to produce causation and permit redress ability of injury. E. g., Warth, supra, at 505. Thus, when the plaintiff is not himself the object of the government action or inaction he challenges, standing is not precluded, but it is ordinarily "substantially more difficult" to establish. Allen, supra, at 758; Simon, supra, at 44-45; Warth, supra, at 505. [Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555 (1992)]

Gaitor v. Peninsular & Occidental Steamship Co. (Feb. 8, 1961)

"We agree. First, the burden of establishing jurisdiction rests upon the party seeking to invoke it and cannot be placed upon adversary who challenges it. Carson v. Dunham, 121 U.S. 421, at page 425, 7 S.Ct. 1030, at page 1031, 30 L.Ed. 992; Gold-Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 96 U.S. 199, at page 202, 24 L.Ed. 656; Crehore v. Ohio & Mississippi Railway Co., 131 U.S. 240, at page 244, 9 S.Ct. 692, at page 693, 33 L.Ed. 144;" [Cites omitted.]

Rule 12. Defenses and Objections: When and How Presented; Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings; Consolidating Motions; Waiving Defenses; Pretrial Hearing

Rule 12. Defenses and Objections: When and How Presented; Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings; Consolidating Motions; Waiving Defenses; Pretrial Hearing

(b) How to Present Defenses. Every defense to a claim for relief in any pleading must be asserted in the responsive pleading if one is required. But a party may assert the following defenses by motion:

- (1) lack of subject-matter jurisdiction;
- (2) lack of personal jurisdiction;
- (3) improper venue;
- (4) insufficient process;
- (5) insufficient service of process;

(6) failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted; and

- (7) failure to join a party under Rule 19.

A motion asserting any of these defenses must be made before pleading if a responsive pleading is allowed. If a pleading sets out a claim for relief that does not require a responsive pleading, an opposing party may assert at trial any defense to that claim. No defense or objection is waived by joining it with one or more other defenses or objections in a responsive pleading or in a motion.

5 U.S.C. §702, Right of review

"A person suffering legal wrong because of agency action, or adversely affected or aggrieved by agency action within the meaning of a relevant statute, is entitled to judicial review thereof. An action in a court of the United States seeking relief other than money damages and stating a claim that an agency or an officer or employee thereof acted or failed to act in an official capacity or under color of legal authority- shall not be dismissed nor relief therein be denied on the ground that it is against the United States or that the United States is an indispensable party. The United States may be named as a defendant in any such action, and a judgment or decree may be entered against the United States: Provided, That any mandatory or injunctive decree shall specify the Federal officer or officers (by name or by title), and their successors in office, personally responsible for compliance. Nothing herein (1) affects other limitations on judicial review or the power or duty of the court to dismiss any action or deny relief on any other appropriate legal or equitable ground; or (2) confers authority to grant relief if any other statute that grants consent to suit expressly or impliedly forbids the relief which is sought."

49 C.J.S., Judgments §5

"As a general rule, judgments are to be distinguished from orders or rules; one does not include the other. ... As distinguished from a judgment, an order is the mandate or determination of the court on some subsidiary or collateral matter arising in an action, not disposing of the merits, but adjudicating a preliminary point or directing some step in the proceedings; and the term is commonly defined in codes of procedure as every direction of a court or judge, made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment. A judgement, on the other hand, is the determination of the court on the issue presented by the pleadings which ascertains and fixes absolutely and finally the rights of the parties in the particular suit with relation to the subject matter in litigation, and puts an end to the suit. The distinguishing characteristic of a judgment is that it is final, while that of an order, when it relates to proceeding in an action is that it is interlocutory...." p. 29.

"An order or rule ordinarily is not founded on the whole record in the case, but is granted on a special application to the court called a "motion;" the determination of such motion is an order, not a judgment." p. 30. [Bold added.]

"(d) The district courts shall not have jurisdiction under this section of any civil action or claim for a pension.

"(e) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action against the United States provided in section 6226, 6228(a), 7426, or 7428 (in the case of the United States district court for the District of Columbia) or section 7429 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

"(f) The district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of civil actions under section 2409a to quiet title to an estate or interest in real property in which an interest is claimed by the United States."

28 U.S.C. §2410, Actions affecting property on which United States has lien

"(a) Under the conditions prescribed in this section and section 1444 of this title for the protection of the United States, the United States may be named a party in any civil action or suit in any district court, or in any State court having jurisdiction of the subject matter--

"(1) to quiet title to,

"(2) to foreclose a mortgage or other lien upon,

"(3) to partition,

"(4) to condemn, or

"(5) of interpleader or in the nature of interpleader with respect to,

"real or personal property on which the United States has or claims a mortgage or other lien.

"(b) The complaint or pleading shall set forth with particularity the nature of the interest or lien of the United States. In actions or suits involving liens arising under the internal revenue laws, the complaint or pleading shall include the name and address of the taxpayer whose liability created the lien and, if a notice of the tax lien was filed, the identity of the internal revenue office which filed the notice, and the date and place such notice of lien was filed."

IA C.J.S., Actions §§1 - 14a"§2 Meaning of "Action"

"a. In General Many definitions of the term "action" have been given by the courts. In its ordinary use, it has been defined as the legal or lawful demand of one's right or rights; the lawful demand of one's right in a court of justice; the legal and formal demand of one's rights from another person or party, made and insisted on in a court of justice; a litigation between two parties."

"In addition, various authorities have defined it [action] as a remedial instrument of justice whereby redress is obtained for any wrong committed or right withheld; a proceeding at law to enforce a private right or to redress a private wrong; an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which one party prosecutes another for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense."

"b. Elements and Characteristics of Action It has been said that every action, however complicated, or however simple, must contain these essential elements: a primary right possessed by plaintiff; and a corresponding primary duty devolving upon defendant; a delict or wrong done by defendant which consisted in a breach of such primary right and duty; a remedial right in favor of plaintiff, and a remedial duty resting on defendant springing from this delict; and finally the remedy or relief itself, as there can be no resort to the courts except for the purpose of obtaining some form of relief."

"§ 3. --- Application and Scope of Term

"b. Other Terms Compared and Distinguished The term "action" has been defined or treated as synonymous with the term "case," consistent with the characterization discussed infra §5 of "cause" as coinciding in meaning with "case" and "action".

.. cause of action consists merely of the primary right, the primary duty, and the breach thereof, or, as otherwise stated, the action is the means of redress of the legal wrong described by the words "cause of action," and the cause of action precedes and affords the right to the remedy."

"§ 4. Classes and Kinds of Action

"b. Particular Species of Actions Defined

"Common-law action. A common-law action is an action which will lie on particular facts, at common law, without the aid of a statute."

"Criminal action. A criminal action is an action instituted and prosecuted by the state for the punishment of a crime."

"Personal action. A personal action is an action brought for the recovery of personal property, for the enforcement of a contract or to recover damages' for its breach, or for the recovery of damages for the commission of an injury". to the person or property."

"§ 5. Meaning of Related Terms

"a. In General

"The gist of an action is defined as the cause for which an action will lie...."

"Liability. "Liability" is an obligation to pay and arises only when all essential elements of an action are established."

"b. Cause

"In a legal sense, the meaning of the word "cause" coincides nearly with that of case, from cado, and of action, from ago, to urge and drive, and the term has been defined as any question, civil or criminal, contested before a court of justice, any legal process which a party institutes to obtain his demand...."

"§10. Meaning of Terms

"The term "remedy," when properly used in a legal sense, signifies and is limited to the judicial means or method whereby a cause of action may be enforced; the judicial means for enforcing a right or redressing a wrong."

"As distinguished from rights or matters of substance, the word "remedy" pertains more properly to those modes of procedure and pleading which lead up to and end in the judgment, including the application of the measure of damages' to the relief sought and the means provided after judgment for making it effective."

"The term "legal remedy" or, as otherwise called, a "remedy at law," has also been defined as a remedy on the law side of court, as distinguished from a remedy in equity. "Legal remedy" is distinguishable from "personal remedy.""

"§11. Correlation of Right, Wrong, and Remedy

"a. In General

.. for every right ... there is a remedy. In other words, wherever the law recognizes a right it gives a remedy to enforce it or to redress its violation; this principle has been expressly recognized by statute."

"The enforcement of a legal right therefore should be sought through legal procedure, and not summarily, nor by physical force or stealth. Right and remedy within the meaning of this rule, are reciprocal; there can be no right without a remedy, and to deny the remedy is, in substance, to deny the right."

"b. Scope of Rule

"Case of first impression. If, as discussed infra §33, the case can be sustained on some recognized principle of law, the fact that the circumstances are novel, and that it is a case of first impression and without direct precedent, does not make it one without a remedy, although the court will proceed with greater caution in such a case. If a case is entirely new in principle, the courts cannot afford a remedy without legislative interposition; but if it is only new in instance, and the question is one of applying a recognized principle to new facts and circumstances, the courts may apply such principle and afford a remedy as readily as if a similar case had been previously decided."

"c. Statutory and Constitutional Rights

"The rule, that wherever the law recognizes a right it gives a remedy, applies to rights conferred by statutory or constitutional provisions; and so wherever a statute or constitution creates a new right or duty, and does not prescribe any particular remedy for its enforcement, the party entitled to the benefit of the statute or constitution may resort to any existing common-law or statutory remedy which will afford adequate and proper redress."

"§12. - Nature and Form of Remedy

"In some cases, there may be more than one appropriate remedy, and plaintiff and no one else must choose his remedy and determine the form and character of his action."

[1A Corpus Juris Secundum, Actions §§1 - 14a]

70A American Jurisprudence 2d, Social Security and Medicare, §1

"§1. Generally

"The principal law governing the awarding of Social Security benefits is the Social Security Act. Rights to Social Security benefits derive solely from the statutory scheme and not from the United States Constitution or common law."

"The Act is, nonetheless, subject to constitutional scrutiny with respect to its specific provisions. Thus, an individual with a "colorable" constitutional argument can challenge the validity of specific provisions of the Act on grounds such as violations of equal protection under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment,...."

8 Federal Procedures, Proceedings in Forma Pauperis, §20:405

"Test of frivolousness. The U.S. Supreme Court has described a "frivolous" claim, subject to dismissal under 28 U.S.C.S. §1915 as (1) a claim based on an indisputably meritless legal theory, such as where it is clear that the defendants are immune from suit or claims of infringement of a legal interest which clearly does not exist; or (2) a complaint whose factual allegations are clearly baseless, such as claims describing fantastic or delusional scenarios."

[8 Federal Procedures, Proceedings in Forma Pauperis, §20:405]

Georgia v. Brailsford (Feb. 1794)

"It may not be amiss, here, gentlemen, to remind you of the good old rule, that on questions of fact, it is the province of the jury, on questions of law, it is the province of the court, to decide. But it must be observed that by the same law, which recognizes this reasonable distribution of jurisprudence, you have nevertheless a right to take upon yourselves to judge of both, and to determine the law as well as the fact in controversy. On this, and on every other occasion, however, we have no doubt, you will pay that respect, which is due to the opinion of the court. For, as on the one hand, it is presumed, that juries are the best judges of facts; it is, on the other hand, presumable, that the court are the best judges of law. But still, both objects are lawfully, within your power of decision.

"Some stress has been laid on a consideration of the different situations of the parties to the cause. The state of Georgia, sues three private persons. But what is it to justice, how many, or how few; how high, or how low; how rich or how poor; the contending parties may chance to be? Justice is indiscriminately due to all, without regard to numbers, wealth, or rank. Because to the state of Georgia, composed of many thousands of people, the litigated sum cannot be of great moment, you will not for this reason be justified, in deciding against her claim; if the money belongs to her, she ought to have it; but on the other hand, no consideration of the circumstances, or of the comparative insignificance of the defendants, can be a ground to deny them the advantage of a favorable verdict, if in justice they are entitled to it.

"Go then, gentlemen, from the bar, without any impressions of favor or prejudice for the one party or the other; weigh well the merits of the case, and do on this, as you ought to do on every occasion, equal and impartial justice."

[Georgia v. Brailsford, 3 U.S. 1 (1794)]

Cohens v. Virginia (1821)

.. for he who demands decision without permitting inquiry, affirms that the decision he asks does not depend on inquiry." [Bold added.]

"The constitution gave to every person having a claim upon a state, a right to submit his case to the court of the nation. However unimportant his claim might be, however little the community might be interested in its decision, the framers of our constitution thought it necessary, for the purposes of justice, to provide a tribunal as superior to influence as possible, in which that claim might be decided. Can it be imagined, that the same persons considered a case involving the constitution of our country and the majesty of the laws--questions in which every American citizen must be deeply interested--as withdrawn from this tribunal, because a state is a party?" [Bold added.]

"The constitution of the United States furnishes no security against the universal adoption of this principle. When we observe the importance which that constitution attaches to the independence of judges, we are the less inclined to suppose that it can have intended to leave these constitutional questions to tribunals where this independence may not exist, in all cases where a state shall prosecute an individual who claims the protection of an act of Congress. These prosecutions may take place even without a legislative act. A person making a seizure under an act of Congress, may be indicted as a trespasser, if force has been employed, and of this a jury may judge. How extensive may be the mischief if the first decisions in such cases should be final!

"These collisions may take place in times of no extraordinary commotion. But a constitution is framed for ages to come, and is designed to approach immortality as nearly as human institutions can approach it."

"It is a maxim not to be disregarded, that general expressions, in every opinion, are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used. If they go beyond the case, they may be respected, but ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit when the very point is presented for decision."

"The citizen who has paid his money to his state, under a law that is void, is in the same situation with every other person who has paid money by mistake. The law raises an assumpsit to return the money, and it is upon that assumpsit that the action is to be maintained."

"It is clear that Congress, as a legislative body, exercise two species of legislative power: the one, limited as to its objects but extending all over the Union; the other, an absolute, exclusive legislative power over the District of Columbia." [Bold added.]

"Every act of legislation must be limited by its subject-matter, and there is nothing to show that this power is to be exercised more extensively than the other powers of the corporation; nothing to show that this municipal power is to be carried beyond the city."

"A law cannot exceed the authority of the law-giver...."

"It cannot be denied that the character of the jurisdiction which Congress has over the district, is widely different from that which it has over the states; for, over them, Congress has not exclusive jurisdiction. Its powers over the states are those only which are specifically given, and those which are necessary to carry them into effect; whilst over the district it has all the powers which it has over the states, and in addition to these, a power of legislation exclusive of all the states."

"Does the corporate power to authorize the drawing of a lottery imply a power to authorize its being drawn without the jurisdiction of a corporation, in a place where it may be prohibited by law?"

"These, and all other laws relative to the district, have the authority which may be claimed by other acts of the national legislature; but their extent is to be determined by those rules of construction which are applicable to all laws. The act incorporating the city of Washington is, unquestionably, of universal obligation; but the extent of the corporate powers conferred by that act, is to be determined by those considerations which belong to the case."

[Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L.Ed. 257 (1821)]

Whitney v. Board of Delegates of the S. F. Fire Department (Jan. 1860)

"Whenever the rights of an individual are infringed by acts of persons clothed with authority to act, and who exercised that authority illegally and injuriously, the person injured may have redress by certiorari."

.. whenever any power, in its nature judicial, is illegally exercised, no matter by what body or individual, it is the subject of review and correction by the proper tribunals."

"This Board being a tribunal of limited powers, must show affirmatively, and on the face of their proceedings, that they acted in a case within their powers and within the law."

"We think it is well settled that a common law certiorari tries nothing but the jurisdiction, and, incidentally, the regularity of the proceedings upon which the jurisdiction depends. It brings up no issue of law or fact not involved in the question of jurisdiction. Under no circumstances, can the review be extended to the merits."

[Whitney v. Board of Delegates of the S. F. Fire Department, 14 Cal. 479 (1860)]

United States v. State National Bank of Boston (Jan. 21, 1878)

"Where the money or property of an innocent person has gone into the coffers of the nation by means of a fraud to which its agent was a party, such money or property cannot be held by the United States against the claim of the wronged and injured" party."

"An action will lie whenever the defendant has received money which is the property of the plaintiff, and which the defendant is obliged by natural justice and equity to refund. The form of the indebtedness or the mode in which it was incurred is immaterial. Bayne v. U.S., 93 U.S., 642 [XXIII., 997]."

"In these cases, and many others that might be cited, the rules of law applicable to individuals were applied to the United States. Here-the basis of the liability insisted upon is an implied contract by which they might well become bound in virtue of their corporate character. Their sovereignty is in nowise involved." [Bold added; brackets original.]

[United States v. State National Bank of Boston, 96 U.S. 647, 6 Otto 30; 24 L.Ed. 647 (1878)]

Phillips v. Pullen (Feb. 1, 1889)

"The provision in the eightieth section of the chancery act is peremptory, and prohibits the issuing of an injunction to restrain legal proceedings, after verdict or judgment, at the instance of the defendant therein, unless the money be paid into court, or a bond given according to the statutory requirement. "

"A temporary injunction, called in this case a "stay order," is within the statutory prohibition."

[Phillips v. Pullen, 45 N.J.Eq. 157, 16 A. 915 (1889)]

Reynolds v. Stockton (May 11, 1891)

"We quote from [Munday v. Vail, 34 N.J.L. 418] the opinion: "Jurisdiction may be defined to be the right to adjudicate concerning the subject matter in the given case. To constitute this there are three essentials: First, the court must have cognizance of the class of cases to which the one to be adjudged belongs; second, the proper parties must be present; and third, the point decided must be, in substance and effect, within the issue. That a court cannot go out of its appointed sphere, and that its action is void with respect to persons who are strangers to its proceedings, are propositions established by a multitude of authorities. A defect in a judgment arising from the fact that the matter decided was not embraced within the issue has not, it would seem, received much judicial consideration. And yet, I cannot doubt that, upon general principles, such a defect must avoid a judgment. It is impossible to concede that because A and B are parties to a suit, a court can decide any matter in which they are interested, whether such matter be involved in the pending litigation or not. Persons by becoming suitors do not place themselves for all purposes under the control of the court, and it is only over these particular interests, which they choose to draw in question that a power of judicial decision arises.""

Wohlford v. People (Dec. 12, 1892)

"In those jurisdictions where the juries are the judges of the law as well as the facts, it is a settled rule of practice to allow counsel to read books of law to the jury. 1 Thompson on Trials, Secs. 945, 949; Stout v. The People, 96 Ind. 407; Wade v. State, 65 Ga. 756. Considerable embarrassment must necessarily arise to trial courts in determining how much of reported cases it is proper to read to the jury. . . . It will not do to hold, as contended for her by counsel, that it is only proper to read such portions of reported cases from our Supreme Court as announced legal principles. Lawyers and trial judges often find it necessary to read the recital of facts and the reasoning thereon to comprehend the principle announced. How much more essential in such cases to the jury, who are the judges of the law, but whose habits of study and thought have not so well prepared them to grasp legal principles as trained legal minds? We can see no impropriety in reading to the jury the entire opinion of a case reported from our Supreme Court applicable to the case on trial, except wherein a principle is announced which has since been overruled. When objection is made to reading from text books or reported cases from other States, it is the duty of the court to examine the portions proposed to be read, and if he finds the principles therein stated to be in harmony with the law of this State and applicable to the case on trial, to permit them to be read; if he finds otherwise, he should exclude them."

[Wohlford v. People, 45 Ill.App. 188 (1892)]

Stanley v. Schwalby (February 6, 1893)

"Although the United States are not bound by the laws of a state, the word "person" in a state statute of limitations includes them as a body politic and corporate, and they may take advantage of such statute."

[Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U.S. 508, 13 S.Ct. 418 (1893)]

Evans v. United States (May 14, 1894)

"A rule of criminal pleading which at one time obtained in some of the circuits, and perhaps received a qualified sanction from this court in U.S. v. Mills, 7 Pet. 138, that an indictment for a statutory misdemeanor is sufficient if the offense be charged in the words of the statute, must, under more recent decisions, be limited to cases where the words of the statute themselves, as was said by this court in U.S. v. Carll, 105 U.S. 611, "fully, directly, and expressly, without any uncertainty or ambiguity, set forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense intended to be punished." The crime must be charged with precision and certainty, and every ingredient of which it is composed must be accurately and clearly alleged. U.S. v. Cook, 17 Wall. 174; U.S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U.S. 542, 558. "The fact that the statute in question, read in the light of the common law, and of other statutes on the like matter, enables the court to infer the intent of the legislature, does not dispense with the necessity of alleging in the indictment all the facts necessary to bring the case within that intent." U.S. v. Carll, 105 U.S. 611."

"Even in the cases of misdemeanors, the indictment must be free from all ambiguity, and leave no doubt in the minds of the accused and the court of the exact offense intended to be charged, not only that the former may know what he is called upon to meet, but that, upon a plea of former acquittal or conviction, the record may show with accuracy the exact offense to which the plea relates." [Bold added.]

Rich v. Braxton (May 6, 1895)

"The placing of lands upon the tax books according to a survey upon which no patent had ever been issued as the property of persons who had no title whatever thereto is unauthorized by law, and a tax sale had under such an assessment is void, and confers no title. 47 Fed. 178, affirmed."

 [Rich v. Braxton, 158 U.S. 375, 15 S.Ct. 1006 (1895)]

Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills (Apr. 8, 1898)

"By operation of the common law in the absence of any specific agreement, every person who has bestowed labor and skill on a chattel bailed to him for the purpose, and has thereby increased its value, has a lien on such chattel, and may retain it until paid his reasonable charges for his services."

"Such rule of the common law is in force in this state."

"The common-law lien to which we have just referred may, by force of special facts or circumstances, override or be superior to prior contractual or statutory liens."

[Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills, 54 Neb. 417, 74 N.W. 966 (1898)]

De Lima v. Bidwell (May 27, 1901)

"The case of Elliott v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. 137, 9 L.Ed. 373, was an action of assumpsit against the collector of the port of New York to recover certain duties upon goods alleged to have been improperly classified. It was held that as the payment was purely voluntary, by a mutual mistake of law, no action would lie to recover them back, although it would have been different if they had been paid under protest. Said Mr. Justice Thompson: "Here, then, is the true distinction: when the money is paid voluntarily and by mistake to an agent, and he has paid it over to his principal, he cannot be made personally responsible; but if, before paying it over, he is apprised of the mistake, and required not to pay it over, he is personally liable."

"A foreign country was defined by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall and Mr. Justice Story to be one exclusively within the sovereignty of a foreign nation, and without the sovereignty of the United States."

"That is, that, although Florida had by cession actually become a part of the United States, and was in our possession, yet under our revenue laws, its ports must be regarded as foreign until they were established as domestic by act of Congress."

"In the more recent case of National Bank v. Yankton County, 101 U.S. 129, 25 L.Ed. 1046, it was said by Mr. Chief Justice Waite that Congress "has full and complete legislative authority over the people of the territories and all the departments of the territorial governments. It may do for the territories what the people, under the Constitution of the United States, may do for the states.""

"Thus, a statute forbidding the sale of liquors to minors applies, not only to minors in existence at the time the statute was enacted, but to all who are subsequently born, and ceases to apply to such as thereafter reach their majority. So, when the Constitution of the United States declares in art. 1 §10, that the state shall not do certain things, this declaration operates, not only upon the thirteen original states, but upon all who subsequently become such; and when Congress places certain restrictions upon the powers of a territorial legislature, such restrictions cease to operate the moment such territory is admitted as a state. By parity of reasoning a country ceases to be foreign the instant it becomes domestic."

[De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 1 (1901)]

Hopkins v. Clemson Agricultural College (May 29, 1911)

"But immunity from suit is a high attribute of sovereignty--a prerogative of the State itself,--which cannot be availed of by public agents when sued for their own torts. The 11th Amendment was not intended to afford them freedom from liability in any case where, under color of their office, they have injured one of the State's citizens. To grant them such immunity would be to create a privileged class free from liability for wrongs inflicted or injuries threatened. Public agents must be liable to the law, unless they are to be put above the law. For how "can these principles of individual liberty' and right be maintained if, when violated, the judicial tribunals are forbidden to visit penalties upon individual offenders . . . whenever they interpose the shield of the State? . . . The whole frame and scheme of the political institutions of this country, state and Federal, protest" against extending to any agent the sovereign's exemption from legal process. Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U.S. 270, 291, 29 L.Ed. 185, 193, 5 Sup.Ct.Rep. 903, 962.

"The many claims of immunity from suit have therefore been uniformly denied, where the action was brought for injuries done or threatened by public officers. If they were indeed agents, acting for the state, they--though not exempt from suit--could successfully defend by exhibiting the valid power of attorney or lawful authority under which they acted.

Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co., 109 U.S. 446, 452, 27 L.Ed. 992, 994, 3 Sup.Ct.Rep. 292, 609. But if it appeared that they proceeded under an unconstitutional statute their justification failed, and their claim of immunity disappeared on the production of the void statute. Besides, neither a State nor an individual can confer upon an agent authority to commit a tort, so as to excuse the perpetrator. In such cases the law of agency has no application,--the wrongdoer is treated as a principle and individually liable for damages inflicted, and subject to injunction against the commission of acts causing irreparable injury."

"But a void act is neither a law or command. It is a nullity. It confers no authority. It affords no protection. Whoever seeks to enforce unconstitutional statutes, or to justify under them, or to obtain immunity through them, fails in his defense and in his claim of exemption from suit."

"Corporate agents or individual officers of the State stand in no better position than officers of the general government, and as to them it has often been held that 'the exemption of the United States from judicial process does not protect their officers and agents, civil or military, in time of peace, from being personally liable to an action of tort by a private person, whose rights of property they have wrongfully invaded or injured, even by authority of the United States.'" Belknap v. Schild, 161 U.S. 18, 40 L.Ed. 601, 16 Sup.Ct.Rep. 443."

"Protection against individual misconduct of municipal police officers not acting under any claim of Federal authority is not afforded by the guaranty of U.S. Const., 4th Amend., of immunity from unreasonable searches and seizures, but the limitations of such Amendment reach only the Federal government and its agents."

"The effect of the 4th Amendment is to put the courts of the United States and Federal officials, in the exercise of their power and authority, under limitations and restraints as to the exercise of such power and authority, and to forever secure the people, their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against all unreasonable searches and seizures under the guise of law. This protection reaches all alike, whether accused of crime or not, and the duty of giving to it force and effect is obligatory upon all intrusted under our Federal system with the enforcement of the laws."

"We therefore reach the conclusion that the letters in question were taken from the house of the accused by an official of the United States, acting under color of his office, in direct violation of the constitutional rights of the defendant; that having made a seasonable application for their return, which was heard and passed upon by the court, there was involved in the order refusing the application a denial of the constitutional rights of the accused, and that the court should have restored these letters to the accused. In holding them and permitting their use upon the trial, we think prejudicial error was committed. As to the papers and property seized by the policemen, it does not appear that they acted under any claim of Federal authority such as would make the amendment applicable to such unauthorized seizures. The record shows that what they did by way of arrest and search and seizure was done before the finding of the indictment in the Federal court; under what supposed right or authority does not appear. What remedies the defendant may have against them we need not inquire, as the 4th Amendment is not directed to individual misconduct of such officials. Its limitations reach the Federal government and its agencies."

United States v. Emery, Bird, Thayer Realty Co. (Apr. 5, 1915)

"The remedy by suit against the collector where internal revenue taxes have been wrongfully collected under the Federal corporation tax law of August 5, 1909 (36 Stat. at L. 11, 112, chap. 6, Comp. Stat. 1913, §6300), §38, is not made exclusive by the provision of that section that all laws relating to the collection, remission, and refund of internal revenue taxes, so far as applicable, are extended to this tax."

"Claims to recover back internal revenue taxes alleged to have been wrongfully collected under the Federal corporation tax law of August 5, 1909 (36 Stat. at L. 11, 112, chap. 6, Comp. Stat. 1913, §6300), §38, are founded upon that act within the meaning of the provision of the Judicial Code, §24, 1 20, conferring jurisdiction on the Federal district courts of 'all claims not exceeding $10,000 founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress.'"

"The objection to the jurisdiction pressed by the government is that the only remedy is a suit against the collector. As the United States has received and keeps the money, and would indemnify the collector if he had to pay (Rev. State. §3220, Comp. Stat. 1913, §5944), the least that can be said is that it would be adding a fifth wheel to the coach to require a circuitous process to satisfy just claims. It is true that this tax law provides that 'all laws relating to the collection, remission, and refund of internal revenue taxes, so far as applicable,' etc, are extended to this tax (§38, 36 Stat. at L. 117, chap. 6), but that is far from the case of a statute creating a new right and a special remedy to enforce it in such form as to make that remedy exclusive. The right to sue the collector for an unjustified collection was given by the common law. The jurisdiction over suits against the United States under §24 of the Judicial Code extends to 'all claims not exceeding ten thousand dollars founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress.' However gradually the result may have been approached in the earlier cases it now has become accepted law that claims like the present are

"founded upon" the revenue law. The argument that there is a distinction between claims "arising under" (Judicial Code, §24, first) and those "founded upon" (Id. §24, twentieth), a law of the United States, rests on the inadmissible premise that the great act of justice embodied in the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims is to be construed strictly and read with an adverse eye. Dooley v. United States, 182 U.S. 222, 228, 45 L.Ed. 1074, 1080, 21 Sup.Ct.Rep. 762; United States v. Hvoslef, March 22, 1915, [237 U.S. 1, 59 L.Ed. --, 35 Sup.Ct.Rep. 459.] Jurisdiction was taken for granted in United States v. New York & C. Mail S. S. Co. U.S. 488, 50 L.Ed. 569, 26 Sup.Ct.Rep. 327, and was upheld in Christie-Street Commission Co. v. United States, 69 C.C.A. 464, 136 Fed. 326; United States v. Hyams, 76 C.C.A. 523, 146 Fed. 15, 18; United States v. Finch, 119 C.C.A. 433, 201 Fed. 95, 97." [Brackets original.]

Sage v. United States (May 19, 1919)

"Judgment for part of the amount claimed in action against the collector of internal revenue to recover back taxes paid, not being a judgment for or against the United States, is not a bar to subsequent action against it for the balance."

"Were judgment for part only of the amount claimed, in action against the collector of internal revenue to recover back taxes erroneously collected under Act June 13, 1898, §29, otherwise a bar to action against the United States to recover the balance, the bar would be removed by the subsequent enactment of Act July 27, 1912, directing repayment of such taxes to claimants presenting their claims as prescribed."

"It is true that the statutes modify the common law liability for money wrongfully collected by duress so far as to require a preliminary appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue before bringing a suit. Rev.St. §3226 (Comp. St. §5949). It is true also that it is the duty of the District Attorney to appear for the collector in such suits, Rev.St. 771 (Comp. St. §1296); that the judgment is to be paid by the United States and the collector is exempted from execution if a certificate is granted by the Court that there was probable cause for his act, Rev.St. §989 (Comp. St. §1635); and that there was a permanent appropriation for the refunding of taxes illegally collected. Rev.St. §3689 (17) (Comp. St. §6799). No doubt too, if it appeared in a suit against a collector who had acted with probable cause and had turned over his money to the United States, that a part of the tax properly was due to the United States, unnecessary formalities might be omitted and the sum properly due might be retained. Of course, the United States in such a case could not require a second payment of that sum. Crocker v. Malley, March 17, 1919. 249 U.S. 223, 39 Sup.Ct. 270, 63 L.Ed. 573. But no one could contend that technically a judgment of a District Court in a suit against a collector was a judgment against or in favor of the United States. It is hard to say that the United States is privy to such a judgment or that it would be bound by it if a suit were brought in the Court of Claims. The suit is personal and its incidents, such as the nature of the defenses open and the allowance of interest, are different. It does not concern property in which the United States asserts an interest on its own behalf or as trustee, as in Minnesota v. Hitchcock, 185 U.S. 373, 388, 22 Sup.Ct. 650, 46 L.Ed. 954. At the time the judgment is entered the United States is a stranger. Subsequently the discretionary action of officials may, or it may not, give the United States a practical interest in the amount of the judgment, as determining the amount of a claim against it, but the claim would arise from the subsequent official act, not from the judgment itself. United States v. Frerichs, 124 U.S. 315, 8 Sup.Ct. 514, 31 L.Ed. 471."

"As the law stood before later statutes a collector was liable personally for duties mistakenly collected, if the person charged gave notice, at the time, of his intention to sue, and warning not to pay over the amount to the Treasury. Elliott v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. 137, 9 L.Ed. 373. But after an Act of Congress had required collectors to pay over such monies, it was held, against the dissent of Mr. Justice Story, that the personal liability was gone. Cary v. Curtis, 3 How. 236, 11 L.Ed. 576. Later statutes however recognize suits against collectors in such cases, and the plaintiff contends that they should be construed to create a new statutory liability attached to the office and passing to successors, as was held in this case, the formal defendant being saved from harm by the United States. This however is not the language of the statutes and hardly can be reconciled with the decision of this Court in Sage v. United States, 250 U.S. 33, 39 Sup.Ct. 415, 63 L.Ed. 828, and other cases to which we shall refer."

"The language of the most material enactment, Rev.St. §989 (Comp. St. §1635), gives no countenance to the plaintiff's argument. It enacts that no execution shall issue against the collector but that the amount of the judgment shall "be provided for and paid out of the proper appropriation from the Treasury," when and only when the Court certifies to either of the facts certified here, and "when a recovery is had in any suit or proceedings against a collector or other officer of the revenue for any act done by him, or for the recovery of any money exacted by or paid to him and by him paid into the Treasury, in the performance of his official duty."

Sovereignty and Freedom Points and Authorities

"In Patton v. Brady, 184 U.S. 608, 22 S.Ct. 493, 46 L.Ed. 713, a suit against a collector begun after the passage of this statute, it was held that it could be revived against his executrix, which shows again that the action is personal; as also does the fact that the collector may be held liable for interest."

Lipke v. Lederer (June 5, 1922)

"The Federal Supreme Court has jurisdiction of a direct appeal from a decree of a district court dismissing the bill in a suit to enjoin a collector of internal revenue from collecting the sum demanded under the provisions of the National Prohibition Act of October 28, 1919, §35, where complainant claims that such section, as construed and sought to be enforced by the collector, conflicts with the guaranties of the Federal Constitution respecting due process of law and trial by jury."

"The so-called tax imposed by the National Prohibition Act of October 28, 1919, §35, lacks all the ordinary characteristics of a tax, the primary function of which is to provide for the support of the government, and clearly involves the idea of punishment for infraction of the law,--the definite function of a penalty."

"The prohibition of U.S. Rev.Stat. §3224, against suits to restrain the assessment or collection of a tax, has no application to a suit to restrain the collector of internal revenue from collecting the sum demanded by him under the provisions of the National Prohibition Act of October 28, 1919, §35, as a penalty."

"Statutes granting the right to sue to recover back taxes paid under protest have no application, so as to afford an adequate remedy at law, where an internal revenue officer, without notice, was undertaken to assess a penalty for an alleged criminal act, and threatens to enforce payment by seizure and sale of property, without opportunity for a hearing of any kind."

"Relief by way of injunction should be granted where an internal revenue officer, without notice, has undertaken to assess a penalty for an alleged criminal act, and threatens to enforce payment by seizure and sale of property without opportunity for a hearing of any kind."

"Where sum is deposited to secure payment of prospective fine for violation of Immigration Law 1917, §9 (Comp. St. §4289%e), by bringing an illiterate alien into the United States, and the fine is thereafter unlawfully imposed and the deposit is paid into the Treasury of the United States, an action to recover the sum is maintainable as an action "founded upon * * * law of Congress," within the meaning of the Tucker Act U.S.C.A. §41 [20]; Comp. "Twentyeth--Concurrent with the Court of Claims, of all claims not exceeding ten thousand dollars founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, * * * or upon any contract, express or implied, with the government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect to which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States, either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty, if the United States were suable."

"The basis of the within causes of action is a 'law of Congress,' so that the discussion in the briefs as to whether there can be a recovery upon an implied contract is unimportant. For a long time claims to recover taxes illegally exacted have been recoverable under the first class provided for by the Tucker Act. As Justice Holmes said in United States v. Emery, Bird, Thayer Realty Co., 237 U.S. 28, 35 S.Ct. 499, 59 L.Ed. 825, when discussing a case where it was sought to recover taxes paid, under protest: 'Claims like the present are 'founded upon' the revenue law.' To limit the recovery in cases 'founded' upon a law of Congress to cases where the law provides in terms for a recovery would make that provision of the Tucker Act almost entirely unavailable, because it would allow recovery only in cases where laws other than the Tucker Act already created a right of recovery. 'Founded' must therefore mean reasonably involving the application of a law of Congress. Dooley v. United States, 182 U.S. 222, 21 S.Ct. 762, 45 L.Ed. 1074, is in accord with this reasoning. There custom duties were improperly exacted. Justice Brown there said:

"The first section" (of the Tucker Act) "evidently contemplates four distinct classes of cases: (1) Those founded upon the Constitution or any law of Congress, with an exception of pension cases; (2) cases founded upon a regulation of an executive department; (3) cases of contract, express or implied, with the government; (4) actions for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort. The words 'not sounding in tort' are in terms referable only to the fourth class of cases."

"In my opinion, the present case more nearly resembles actions like United States v. Emery, Bird, Thayer Realty Co., 237 U.S. 28, 35 S.Ct. 499, 59 L.Ed. 825, allowing recovery of taxes unlawfully exacted, than United States v. Holland-America Lijn, supra, where, upon the admitted facts, there seems to have been scarcely any color of right in attempting to collect expenses of detention of aliens from the transportation company. As Mr. Justice Holmes said in the Emery Case:

"However gradually the result may have been approached in the earlier cases it now has become accepted law that claims like the present are 'founded upon' the revenue law. The argument that there is a distinction between claims 'arising under' (Judicial Code, §24, first) and those 'founded upon' (Id. §24, twentieth), a law of the United States, rests on the inadmissible premise that the great act of justice embodied in the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims is to be construed strictly and read with an adverse eye."

First Nat'l. Bank of Key West v. H.H. Filer (Jan. 2, 1933)

"Whenever there is a wrong there is a remedy. And the general test to determine whether there is a liability in an action of tort is the question whether the defendant has by act or omission disregarded his duty. This applied to public officers who may become liable on common-law principles to individuals who sustain special damages from the negligent or wrongful failure to perform imperative or ministerial duties. Dillon on Municipal Corps. (5th Ed.) vol. 1, p. 762; 22 R.C.L. pars. 160-162, pp. 483, 484."

"That public officers should be held to a faithful performance of their official duties, and made to answer in damages to all persons who may have been injured through their malfeasance, omission, or neglect, to which the persons injured have in no respect contributed, cannot be denied. Lick v. Madden, 36 Cal. 208, 95 Am. Dec. 175, 180. And it is well settled that, where the law imposes upon a public officer the performance of ministerial duties in which a private individual has a special and direct interest, the officer will become liable to such individual for any injury which he may proximately sustain in consequence of the failure or neglect of the officer either to perform the duty at all, or to perform it properly. In such a case the officer is liable as well for nonfeasance as for misfeasance or malfeasance."

"An ambiguous pleading must be construed against the pleader."

"The practical interpretation of an ambiguous or doubtful statute by department of government charged with its administration will not be disturbed except for weighty reasons."

"A claim by ship owner for surveyor fees alleged to have been wrongfully exacted by collector of customs was a "claim founded upon law of Congress" within Judicial Code conferring concurrent jurisdiction on federal District Courts with Court of Claims of "all claims not exceeding $10,000 founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress."

"Appellee contends that this is a case sounding in tort, within the meaning of §24(20) of the Judicial Code, 28 U.S.C.A. §41(20), and that, therefore, the District Court had no jurisdiction. This contention, which the District Court upheld, must be rejected. It appears from the complaint that the surveyors' fees in question were exacted of appellant under and pursuant to §4186 of the Revised Statutes and were, in fact, the fees therein prescribed. Appellant's claim is that the fees were exacted, not tortiously, but illegally, in that they were exacted after §4186 had been repealed.

"Thus, in effect, appellant claims that the Collector misconstrued and misapplied §4186, that is to say, construed it as remaining in effect after it had been repealed, and so applied it to appellant; and that, therefore, the fees should be refunded. Such a claim does not sound in tort. It is a claim founded upon a law of Congress, within the meaning of §24(20) of the Judicial Code 28 U.S.C.A. §41(20)." [Cites omitted.]

"An action will lie whenever the United States has received money which is the property of the plaintiff and which the defendant is obligated by natural justice and equity to return, the form of the indebtedness or the mode in which it was incurred being immaterial. Tucker Act, 24 Stat. 505."

"Where the money or property of an innocent person has gone into the coffers of the nation by means of a fraud to which nation's agent was a party, such money or property cannot be held by the nation against the claim of the wronged and injured party. Tucker Act, 24 Stat. 505."

United States v. Kales (Dec. 8, 1941)

"The right of action thus continued is identical with that which existed before Congress had acted. Notwithstanding the provision for indemnifying the collector and protecting him from execution, the nature and extent of the right asserted and the measure of the recovery remain the same. It was payment to the collector which gave rise to the suit against him and limited the amount of the recovery. The judgment against the collector is a personal judgment, to which the United States is a stranger except as it has obligated itself to pay it.

"While the statutes have for most practical purposes reduced the personal liability of the collector to a fiction, the course of the legislation indicates clearly enough that it is a fiction intended to be acted upon to the extent that the right to maintain the suit and its incidents, until judgment rendered, are to be left undisturbed. Among its incidents are the right to a jury trial, which is not available in suits against the United States."

"By no possibility could the respondent in the suit brought against Collector Woodworth in 1925 recover taxes paid to Collector Grogan in 1920, which she demands here. Recovery from one collector of the payment to him does not bar recovery on the different cause of action arising upon payment to the other, even though the two collections are for taxes arising out of the same transaction. The right to pursue the common law action against the collector is too deeply imbedded in the statutes and judicial decisions of the United States to admit of so radical a departure from its traditional use and consequences as the Government now urges, without further Congressional action."

Ross Packing Co. v. United States (Jan. 20, 1942)

"The purpose of the Tucker Act was to give the District Courts the jurisdiction, previously vested in the Court of Claims, to hear cases against the government involving sums not exceeding $10,000."

An employer's action against the government to recover back moneys paid the Federal Treasury under an order of the National Labor Relations Board directing payment of an amount representing WPA earnings by a discharged employee ordered reinstated, the action being brought after a decision by the Supreme Court that such an order was illegal, was authorized by the Tucker Act providing for cases "founded upon any law of Congress," though neither the National Labor Relations Act nor any general statute provides for such refunding."

.. the well-established rule that courts will not set aside compromises entered into to effect the settlement of litigation."

"On numerous occasions, the Supreme Court has quoted with approval the following breakdown of the Tucker Act written by Mr. Justice Brown in Dooley v. United States, 182 U.S. 222, 21 S.Ct. 762, 763, 45 L.Ed. 1074:

""The 1st section evidently contemplates four distinct classes of cases:

-(1) Those founded upon the Constitution or any law of Congress, with an exception of pension cases; (2) cases founded upon a regulation of an executive department;

(3) cases of contract, express or implied, with the government;

(4) actions for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort. The words 'not sounding in tort' are in terms referable only to the fourth class of cases."

"There can be no doubt as to the similarity between the Carriso case and this one. In each the Government received money to which it was not entitled. There, the official misconstrued the law by construing it to be in effect after it had been repealed. Here, the Board misconstrued the law by construing that it had power to inflict a penalty on the plaintiff. In neither case was there any compulsion brought upon the plaintiff to make payment except the necessity of complying with an order of a legally constituted government official or agency. In each case the act of the government's agent was illegal. Clearly, if the acts of the Collector in the Carriso case were not tortious, then the action of the Board here was not tortious. There can be no essential difference between an act which is unauthorized because the power to do it has been repealed and one which is unauthorized because such power was not given by the law in the first place.

"There is one difference in the facts of the two cases. In the Carriso case, there is a statute, 18 U.S.C.A. §643, which makes specific provision for the refunding of exactions illegally imposed by the Collector of Customs. Authority therefor is given to the Secretary of the Treasury. There is no provision in the National Labor Relations Act for such refunding. Nor is there any general statute which is available for that purpose. The basic question in this case is whether the absence of such a provision or statute should prevent plaintiff's recovery under the Tucker Act. The answer to that question must come from determining what is meant by the words "founded upon * * * any law of Congress." Do they refer to the substantive portion of the laws, the misconstruction of which resulted in the illegal exaction? Or do they mean that, in addition to that, there must be either a provision in the same law or a provision in some general law showing congressional intent that there should be a refunding of the illegal exaction?

"Of the five cases cited in the Carriso decision, two show no indication that the court saw any need for a remedial statute on which to base its conclusion that the Tucker Act was available. In Dooley v. United States, supra, the action was to recover duties illegally exacted upon imports into Porto Rico [sic] after the signing of the treaty of peace. There was nothing to indicate the consideration of any refunding statute. Likewise, in United States v. Emery, Bird, Thayer Realty Co., supra, there was no provision for a refund. In that opinion, the following language by Justice Holmes is of interest [237 U.S. 28, 35 S.Ct. 500, 59 L.Ed. 825]: "However gradually the result may have been approached in the earlier cases it now has become accepted law that claims like the present are 'founded upon' the revenue law. The argument that there is a distinction between claims 'arising under' (Judicial Code, §24, First) and those 'founded upon' (Id. §24, Twentieth), a law of the United States, rests on the inadmissible premise that the great act of justice embodied in the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims is to be construed strictly and read with an adverse eye.

"The other three cases, United States v. Hvorslef, supra; United States v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, supra; and Christie-Street Commission Co. v. United States, supra, all refer to provisions for the refunding of sums illegally collected. In the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique case there is definite indication that it is upon this statute that the court rested its conclusion that the action was founded on a law of Congress.

"The Christie-Street Commission Co. decision, however, definitely supports the opposite view. In that opinion, Judge Sanborn points out specifically that the authorities submitted by the Government, as they do in the case here, "fail to consider the real question in this case--whether such claims are of the first class * * * claims founded on the Constitution or upon a law of Congress--and are devoted exclusively to the discussion of the issue whether or not they fall within the third class, in the class of claims founded upon any contract, express or implied, with the government." [136 F. 329.] Further in the opinion, this precise statement is made: "The demurrer in the case at bar admits that the taxes which are the subject of this action were illegally exacted from the plaintiff by virtue of the war revenue law of 1898, misconstrued by the collector of internal revenue. The claim to recover back these taxes was therefore founded upon, and its validity is conditioned by, that law."

"Any doubt I may have upon this question is foreclosed in the Ninth Circuit by the manner in which the provision of the revenue act providing for refunds is disposed of in the Carriso decision. In that case, the Government urged that the refunding statute afforded an exclusive remedy. The court answered the argument by saying, "It does not follow, however, that this was appellant's only remedy. Long before the administrative remedy was provided, Congress had, by §1 of the Act of February 24, 1855, c. 122, 10 Stat. 612, now embodied in §145 (1) of the Judicial Code, 28 U.S.C.A. §250 (1), provided a judicial remedy in such cases. That remedy was by suit or action in the Court of Claims, which had, and still has, jurisdiction to hear and determine claims such as appellant's. That jurisdiction was not impaired or in anywise affected by §26 of the Act of June 26, 1884, supra. By §2 of the Act of March 3, 1887, c. 359, 24 Stat. 505, now embodied in §24 (20) of the Judicial Code, 28 U.S.C.A. §41 (20), supra, concurrent jurisdiction of claims such as appellant's was vested in the district courts."

"Since the court thus clearly indicated that it was not considering the refunding statute as the Act of Congress upon which the appellant's cause of action was founded, it logically follows that it must have accepted the repealed statute as the basis of appellant's claim. That being true, the decision in the Carriso case is controlling here and defendant's motions must be denied." [Brackets original except for [sic]]

"The Constitution does not deny to Congress the necessary resources of flexibility and practicality to perform its function."

"The denial of a right to a restraining order or interlocutory injunction to one who has failed to apply for available administrative relief, not shown to be inadequate, is not a denial of "due process of law."

"The award of an interlocutory injunction by courts of equity is not a matter of right, even though irreparable injury may otherwise result to the plaintiff."

"Even in suits in which only private interests are involved, the award of an interlocutory injunction is a matter of sound judicial discretion, in the exercise of which the court balances the conveniences of the parties and possible injuries to them according as they may be affected by the granting or withholding of the injunction."

"Equity court will avoid inconveniences and injuries to parties so far as may be, by attaching conditions to award of an interlocutory injunction."

"Where an injunction is asked which will adversely affect a public interest for whose impairment, even temporarily, an injunction bond cannot compensate, the court may in the public interest withhold relief until a final determination of the rights of the parties, though the postponement may be burdensome to the plaintiff."

"There is no constitutional requirement that test of validity of administrative regulation be made in one tribunal rather than in another, so long as there is an opportunity to be heard and for judicial review which satisfies the demands of due process."

"Where the alleged violations of the Fourth and Fifth Amendments by defendants formed the sole basis of relief sought, and, if the allegations had any foundation in truth, plaintiff's legal right had been violated, the court could not dismiss the action for want of jurisdiction on ground that the cause of action was patently without merit. Raffaele v. Granger (May 14, 1952)

"Under Pennsylvania Law husband and wife who created bank accounts in their joint names "as tenants by the entireties" had a unity of ownership as if they were a single personality and interest of neither was severable except by consent of both, and Collector of Internal Revenue, in order to collect taxes allegedly owing by husband alone, could not issue a distraint against such bank accounts under statute conferring upon Collector remedy of distraint upon bank account of a person who neglects or refuses to pay taxes."

"United States cannot take property from an innocent spouse to satisfy tax obligation of delinquent spouse."

"Statute prohibiting suit to restrain collection of tax does not prevent judicial interposition to prevent Collector of Internal Revenue from taking property of one person to satisfy tax obligation of another."

"Statute prohibiting suit to restrain collection of tax did not prevent Federal District Court from quashing warrant of distraint on petition of husband and wife where Collector of Internal Revenue, in order to collect taxes allegedly owing by husband alone, issued warrant of distraint against bank accounts created by husband and wife, as tenants by the entireties and where interest of neither husband nor wife was severable under applicable State law."

""Distraint" is a summary extra judicial remedy having its origin in the common law under which it consisted of seizure and holding of personal property by individual action without intervention of legal process for purpose of compelling payment of debt."

"Relief of one aggrieved by levy of distraint, at common law, was by action of replevin against distrainor."

"Property taken or detained under any revenue law, unlike property seized at common law, is not repleviable but is deemed to be in custody of the law and is subject to orders and decrees of courts of United States having jurisdiction thereof."

"Court having jurisdiction of bank accounts against Collector of Internal Revenue issued distraint, purportedly under statute conferring upon Collector the remedy of distraint upon bank account of a person who neglects or refuses to pay taxes, was Federal District Court for District wherein bank accounts were situated and distraint occurred."

"Where due process of law was satisfied by notice to interested parties and opportunity to be heard, Federal District Court could proceed summarily to adjudicate rightfulness of action of Collector of Internal Revenue in issuing a distraint purportedly pursuant to statute conferring upon Collector remedy of distraint upon bank account of a person who neglects or refuses to pay taxes, and plenary civil suit was not necessary to enable court to exercise jurisdiction of bank accounts against distraint was issued."

"He who would employ distraint as a special extra judicial remedy and form of self-help must justify his seizure on basis of title as it is and not as he thinks in equity it should be."

"On petition to quash warrant of distraint issued by Collector of Internal Revenue against bank accounts created by husband and wife, as tenants by the entireties, to collect taxes allegedly owing by husband alone, Collector was not entitled to justify levy upon property of wife for taxes of husband by proving that into pre-existing bank accounts owned by husband and wife as tenants by the entireties the husband deposited personal funds after tax levy against husband's personalty became imminent."

Homan Mfg. Co. v. Long (Feb. 4, 1957)

"Government official has power to abate an income tax assessment even after the levy has been made. 26 U.S.C.A. (I.R.C.1954) §6861(g)."

"Where complainant shows that, in addition to illegality of an exaction in guise of a tax, there exists special and extraordinary circumstances sufficient to bring case within some acknowledged head of equity jurisprudence, action may be maintained to enjoin' the collector."

"Summary judgment proceeding is not a substitute for a trial but is rather a judicial search for determining whether genuine issues exist as to material facts."

"Trial court cannot try factual issues on motion for summary judgment."

"The Code does provide interim relief for a taxpayer if he is able to give a bond under §6863 and, of course, a review of the assessment is available in the tax court."

"Of course saddling an exempt taxpayer with a jeopardy assessment, for example, would be arbitrary."

"While a jurisdictional challenge meets us at the outset it can be resolved only by determining whether plaintiff's case qualifies for relief under some head of equity jurisdiction."

"For the Miller case principles to become operative "special and extraordinary circumstances" must combine with illegality."

"Summary judgment procedure enables district judges to nip in the bud litigation which would wilt, if the case went forward to a trial on the merits, because there was no genuine issue as to any material fact."

"A summary judgment proceeding is not a substitute for a trial, but rather a judicial search for determining whether genuine issues exist as to material facts. The lower court cannot try out factual issues on a motion for summary judgment because once such an issue is found the court's function on that aspect of the case ends. There is statutory power to make a jeopardy assessment and levy in this case."

"We are sending the case back without further comment on the issue or issues of fact necessitating our reversal. When litigants are to proceed again at the trial level with a cause after our review it is essential that the case arrive below without furnishing fuel to fire up preconceived notions on the fact issues that will need disposition at a trial on the merits."

Seattle Association of Credit Men v. United States (Feb. 7, 1957)

"The statute providing that United States may be named as party in civil action in federal District Court having jurisdiction thereof to quiet title or foreclose mortgage or other lien upon property on which United States claims mortgage or other lien is not limited to judicial sales and includes action by trustee for benefit of creditors to quiet title to funds on which District Director of Internal Revenue has levied."

"The statute providing that United States may be named party in civil action in United States District Court having jurisdiction of subject matter, to quiet title or to foreclose mortgage or other lien upon property on which United States has mortgage or claims lien, has for its purpose waiving sovereign immunity, presupposes that court in which suit is brought has jurisdiction, and does not confer jurisdiction to entertain quiet title actions."

"The United States District Court having jurisdiction over property on which District Director of Internal Revenue has levied is the District Court serving the geographical area wherein the property is situated."

"We are of the view that the consent to sue the United States, conferred by §2410, is not limited to judicial sales, and does include quiet title actions such as this. This section, however, does not confer jurisdiction upon district courts to entertain quiet title actions. As we pointed out in Wells v. Long, 9 Cir., 162 F.2d. 842, at page 844, the limited purpose of §2410 is to waive sovereign immunity from suit, and "presupposes that the court in which such suit is pending or brought has jurisdiction thereof on grounds independent of the statute."

"In its opening brief in this court, appellant relies not alone upon §2410 to establish jurisdiction, but also cites 28 U.S.C.A. §§1340, 1346(a) (2), and 2463. In its reply brief, appellant moves for leave to amend its complaint to include in its jurisdictional statement a reference to these additional statutes."

"It is provided in 28 U.S.C.A. §1653 that defective allegations of jurisdiction may be amended, upon terms, in either the trial or appellate court. We accordingly grant leave to amend the complaint in the manner requested, and will regard the complaint as so amended."

"We hold that, under the allegations of the complaint, and pursuant to §2463, the district court had jurisdiction to entertain this suit. As before indicated, the district court was not afforded an opportunity to consider the jurisdictional statute which we have found to be decisive."

Hoffman v. Stevens (Sept. 23, 1959)

"Depriving one of property without just compensation? is a denial of due process of law."

The measure of damages where there has been actual taking of land by state of Pennsylvania is difference in market value of whole tract of which land taken is a part before the taking and market value of land remaining after the taking, as affected by the taking."

To ascertain damages accruing to an owner from appropriation of his land for consequential injury that may follow from such appropriation, usual and ordinary standard under Pennsylvania law is difference in market before and after the taking and estimates as to injury to particular uses affected by the taking are not recoverable or admissible as distinct items of damages, but such losses may become useful as elements bearing on market value before and after the appropriation."

"Fundamental right guaranteed by Fourteenth Amendment to federal Constitution is that owner of property shall not be deprived of market value of his property under rule of law which makes it impossible for him to obtain just compensation."

"Where state officials, purporting to act under state authority, invade rights secured by federal Constitution, they are subject to process of federal courts in order that persons injured may have appropriate relief."

"Purpose of federal statute providing that any highway department which submits plans for a federal-aid highway project shall certify to Secretary that it has held public hearings or has afforded opportunity for such hearings and has considered economic effects of such a location was to insure wise and fair use of federal funds, and under Pennsylvania law and policy, absent federal aid, such hearings are not required to be held."

"Power of eminent domain of a state is an attribute of sovereignty and it cannot be surrendered, and if attempted to be contracted away, it may be resumed at will, and it is not dependent upon any specific grant, and the United States has no right to interfere by any of its departments with the exercise of such power."

"Where intended use of land is public, necessity and expediency of taking may be determined by an agency of state and in such mode as state may designate, and a hearing thereon is not essential to due process."

"Whether particular property is needed for public use is a legislative or executive, not a judicial, question."

Steiner v. Nelson (Oct. 16, 1958)

Chappell v. United States (Aug. 11, 1959)

"Under these circumstances it is clear that the giving of the instruction quoted above, in which after referring to the subject of criminal intent, the court said that "every person is presumed to intend the consequences of his own voluntary and deliberate acts" was likely to mislead the jury. In Bloch v. United States, 9 Cir., 221 F.2d. 786, 788, we said of a similar instruction that it was error which was "fundamental and goes to the very essence of the case." Precisely applicable here is the language of the Supreme Court in Morissette v. United States, supra, where the court had under consideration the same §641 which we deal with here. Said the Court (342 U.S. at 275, 72 S.Ct. at page 256): "We think presumptive intent has no place in this case. A conclusive presumption which testimony could not overthrow would effectively eliminate intent as an ingredient of the offense. A presumption which would permit but not require the jury to assume intent from an isolated fact would prejudice a conclusion which the jury should reach of its own violation. A presumption which would permit the jury to make an assumption which all the evidence considered together does not logically establish would give to a proven fact an artificial and fictional effect. In either case, this presumption would conflict with the overriding presumption of innocence with which the law endows the accused and which extends to every element of the crime. Such incriminating presumptions are not to be improvised by the judiciary.""

"The apparent conflict may be due partly to nomenclature and the application of too-general terms, so that a judgment is classified as all white or all black. Actually the very term "interlocutory judgment" is a technical misnomer, for if it is not final as the issues determined it is not a "judgment" at all, merely an interlocutory order."

[Thompson v. Hodge, 348 S.W.2d. 11 (1961)]

Perez v. United States (Dec. 21, 1961)

"It is elementary law that the defendant in a criminal case is entitled to have presented instructions relating to a theory of defense for which there is any foundation in the evidence. Tatum v. United States, 190 F.2d. 612 (D.C.Cir.1951). A charge is erroneous which ignores a claimed defense with such a foundation. Hyde v. United States, 15 F.2d. 816 (4th Cir.1926). The charge to which he is entitled, upon proper request, in such circumstances is one which precisely and specifically, rather than merely generally or abstractly, points to his theory of defense, Cf. United States v. Indiana Trailer Corp., 226 F.2d. 595, 598 (7th Cir. 1955); Apel v. United States, 247 F.2d. 277 (8th Cir. 1951), and one which does not unduly emphasize the theory of the prosecution, thereby deemphasizing proportionally the defendant's theory. It is also fundamental to our jurisprudence that instructions to the jury must be consistent with each other, and not misleading to the jurors. Smith v. United States, 230 F.2d. 935 (6th Cir. 1956). The fact that one instruction is correct does not cure the error in giving another that is inconsistent with it. Smith v. United States, supra. Most important, in no condition of proof is it permissible to leave with the jury the idea that it had become the duty of the defendant to establish his innocence to obtain an acquittal. See e. g., Ezzard v. United States, 7 F.2d. 808 (8th Cir. 1925)."

[Perez v. United States, 297 F.2d. 12 (1961)]

Bartell v. Riddell (Feb. 5, 1962)

"Federal court had jurisdiction of action which was essentially to determine title to certain stock seized and sold by United States under tax laws as between plaintiff and conflicting claimants, and incidentally for injunctive relief against Director of Internal Revenue and United States, by statute respecting actions affecting property on which United States has lien, consented to become party to action."

"Statute authorizing United States to be named as party in actions affecting property on which United States has lien does not of itself confer jurisdiction on district courts but presupposes existence of some independent ground of federal jurisdiction, and where independent basis of federal jurisdiction exists statute constitutes waiver of sovereign immunity"

"Statute making property taken under revenue laws not repleviable does not presuppose independent ground of federal jurisdiction but is in itself grant of jurisdiction in appropriate cases, and where property is taken or detained under any revenue law district court within whose district property is located has jurisdiction to decide claims of title and award possession of seized property to rightful owner."

"Where property is seized and detained under tax laws, district courts have jurisdiction over actions brought by taxpayer contesting propriety of levy or by third persons claiming that they and not delinquent taxpayer are rightful owners of property seized."

"Revenue laws are code or system in regulation of tax assessment collection and relate to taxpayers and not to nontaxpayers." [Bold added.]

"Statute requiring notice to taxpayer on public sale of property seized by government under tax law is intended to protect taxpayer and failure to comply gives taxpayer right to avoid sale."

"Complaint of purchaser at first government sale of property seized for tax liability against purchaser at second government sale of same property and other defendants to establish first purchaser's right to conveyance of property and to prevent conveyance to second purchaser was sufficient to state a claim upon which relief could be granted."

"The court is of the opinion that jurisdiction in such a case may be predicated on 28 U.S.C. §1340 (formerly 28 U.S.C.

§41(5)) and 28 U.S.C. §2463, and that the United States, or its duly authorized agent, has consented to become a party to an action of this type by virtue of 28 U.S.C. §2410."

"It is well settled in this Circuit that 28 U.S.C. §2410 does not, of itself, confer jurisdiction upon the district courts, but, rather, presupposes the existence of some independent ground of federal jurisdiction. (Wells v. Long, 162 F.2d. 842, 844 (9 Cir. 1947); Seattle Association of Credit Men v. United States, 240 F.2d. 906, 908 (9 Cir. 1957); United States v. Coson, 286 F.2d. 453, 455 (9 Cir. 1961); Gerth v. United States, 132 F.Supp. 894, 896 (D.C.S.C.Cal. 1955); Coson v. United States, 169 F.Supp. 671, 672-673 (D.C.S.C.Cal. 1958); Jones v. United States, 179 F.Supp. 456, 458 (D.C.S.C.Cal. 1959).) Where, however, an independent basis of federal jurisdiction exists, Section 2410 constitutes a waiver of sovereign immunity by the United States and a consent to be sued in quiet title actions arising out of tax sales." Russell v. United States (May 21, 1962)

""It is an elementary principle of criminal pleading, that where the definition of an offense, whether it be at common law or by statute, includes generic terms, it is not sufficient that the indictment shall charge the offense in the generic terms as in the definition; but it must state the species,--it must descend to particulars." United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U.S. 542, 558, 23 L.Ed. 588, 593. An indictment not framed to apprise the defendant with reasonable certainty, of the nature of the accusation against him . . . is defective, although it may follow the language of the statute." United States v. Simmons, 96 U.S. 360, 362, 24 L.Ed. 819, 820. "In an indictment upon a statute, it is not sufficient to set forth the offense in the words of the statute, unless those words of themselves fully, directly, and expressly, without any uncertainty or ambiguity, set forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense intended to be punished; ..." United States v. Carll, 105 U.S. 611, 612, 26 L.Ed. 1135. "Undoubtedly the language of the statute may be used in the general description of an offense, but it must be accompanied with such a statement of the facts and circumstances as will inform the accused of the specific offense, coming under the general description, with which he is charged." *United States v. De Masters v. Arend (Feb. 26, 1963)

"Where Internal Revenue Service personnel purported to act under provision of Internal Revenue Code in issuing summons to bank to investigate taxpayer account, and taxpayers challenged authority under that section on ground that inquiry was prohibited by another provision of code as well as by the Fourth Amendment, since taxpayers' suit to restrain such investigation involved a substantial controversy as to construction and effect of sections of the code, such action, if otherwise maintainable, fell within jurisdictional grant of statute giving district courts original jurisdiction of civil action arising under an act of Congress providing for internal revenue."

"The statute giving district courts original jurisdiction of civil action arising under an act of Congress providing for internal revenue is not a consent by the United States to suits against it, but if Internal Revenue Service employee were prohibited by provision of Internal Revenue Code or the Fourth Amendment from initiating inquiry regarding taxpayers' income tax liability for years as to which recovery would be barred by statute of limitations in absence of fraud, or the Fourth Amendment, a suit to restrain their unlawful conduct would not be barred by the doctrine of sovereign immunity."

"Where Internal Revenue Service employees commenced investigation of possible income tax liability for years as to which recovery would be barred by statute of limitations in absence of fraud, taxpayers' action to enjoin such investigation was neither one for declaratory judgment "with respect to federal taxes" precluded by statute, nor an action "for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax" precluded by another statute."

"Internal Revenue Service employees' conduct in causing a summons to issue directing a bank to produce records pertaining to taxpayers' transactions with the bank during certain years did not violate the Fourth Amendment as to taxpayers, since even assuming that administrative subpoena directed to a corporation may constitute an "unreasonable search and seizure," the right violated would be that of the bank which waived any right it might have had to resist production."

"Fourth Amendment rights do not depend upon nice distinctions of property law."

"The provision of Internal Revenue Code that 'No taxpayer shall be subjected to unnecessary examination or investigations' constitutes a limitation on power of tax collecting authorities, and if Internal Revenue Service employees violated such statutory limitation upon their power, taxpayers' suit to restrain such investigation was maintainable."

"The grant of power to Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make investigations concerning persons who might be liable to pay tax and authorizing examination of records, etc. are to be liberally construed in recognition of the vital public purposes which they serve, and the exception stated in provision prohibiting unnecessary examination or investigations is not to be read so broadly as to defeat them."

"Under provision of Internal Revenue Code that no taxpayer shall be subjected to unnecessary examination or investigations, an investigation cannot be said to be 'unnecessary' if it may contribute to the accomplishment of any purposes for which commissioner is authorized by statute to make inquiry, and, since these include making a return where none has been made and ascertaining the correctness of any that have, taxpayer will rarely be able to discharge his burden of showing that first investigation of a particular tax year is unnecessary."

"In providing that 'No taxpayer shall be subjected to unnecessary examination or investigations' Congress was primarily concerned with protecting taxpayers from examinations which were 'unnecessary' in sense that they followed prior investigations of the same matter which had established that there was no basis for liability, and the statutory stricture was designed to prevent uselessly repetitive procedures and investigations not relevant to possible tax liability, not to nullify preceding sections of that code."

"The investigative power granted administrative agencies is inquisitorial in nature; its exercise does not depend upon a showing of probable cause to believe that a violation of law has occurred."

"The power of inquiry vested in Commissioner of Internal Revenue does not depend upon a showing of probable cause to believe that a violation of law has occurred, and he may as a general rule check to determine whether a return should have been filed where one was not, or whether more tax was due than was actually paid, without first showing that there was probable cause, or any cause at all, to believe that these things were true."

"The Bureau of Internal Revenue, like other administrative agencies charged with enforcement of law, can investigate merely on suspicion that the law is being violated, or even just because it wants assurance that it is not."

"The power of Commissioner of Internal Revenue to investigate for purpose of 'determining the liability of any person for any internal revenue tax' includes liability which may be assessed on a finding of fraud, and even if no fraud exists, investigation of barred years' may be useful or even essential to establish a sound starting point for checking accuracy of returns filed in years that remain open, and a preliminary showing of probable cause is not necessary before initiating such investigations."

"The limitations imposed upon Commissioner of Internal Revenue by interdiction of 'unnecessary' investigations are essentially the same as those which may preclude judicial enforcement of administrative subpoenas, namely, that he may not act arbitrarily or in excess of his statutory authority, but that does not mean that his inquiry must be limited by forecasts of probable result of investigation."

"In determining right of Internal Revenue Service Employees to investigate possible income tax liability for years as to which recovery would be barred by statute of limitations in absence of fraud, proof that period for assessment absent fraud has expired is relevant to question of whether an investigation is 'unnecessary', just as it would be relevant to whether a court should enforce an administrative subpoena."

"If Commissioner of Internal Revenue asserted no purpose other than one which was then barred of accomplishment, or asserted a purpose not authorized by statute, proposed investigation would be 'unnecessary' within provision of Internal Revenue Code prohibiting unnecessary investigations and might be enjoined, just as an administrative subpoena issued by Commissioner in such circumstances would be denied judicial enforcement as in excess of his statutory authority."

"...When the words, "So unless the contrary appears from the evidence" were introduced, the burden of proof thereupon shifted from the prosecution to the defendant to prove lack of intent. If an inference from a fact or set of facts must be overcome with opposing evidence, then the inference becomes a presumption and places a burden on the accused to overcome that presumption. Such a burden is especially harmful when a person is required to overcome a presumption as to anything subjective, such as intent or willfulness, and a barrier almost impossible to hurdle results."

United States v. Powell (Nov. 23, 1964)

"Because of differing views in the circuits on standards Internal Revenue Service must meet to obtain judicial enforcement of its orders, certiorari was granted."

"Government need make no showing of probable cause to suspect fraud for enforcement of Internal Revenue Service administrative summons unless taxpayer raises substantial question that judicial enforcement of summons would be abusive use of court's process, predicated upon more than fact of re-examination and running of statute of limitations on ordinary tax liability."

"Four decisions of lower courts neither represented settled judicial construction of statute nor one which Supreme Court would be justified in presuming Congress by its silence impliedly approved, in view of other decisions."

"While power of Commissioner of Internal Revenue with respect to administrative summons is derived from different body of statutes than those of other agencies, analogies to other agency situations were not without force when scope of Commissioner's power was called into question."

"Commissioner of Internal Revenue need not meet any standard of probable cause to obtain enforcement of administrative summons, either before or after limitation on ordinary tax liabilities has expired, but must show that investigation will be conducted pursuant to legitimate purpose, that inquiry may be relevant to the purpose, that the information is in his possession and that administrative steps have been followed."

"At adversary hearing to which taxpayer is entitled before judicial enforcement of administrative summons under Revenue Code is ordered, taxpayer may challenge summons on any appropriate ground."

"Reading the statutes as we do, the Commissioner need not meet any standard of probable cause to obtain enforcement of his summons, either before or after the three-year statute of limitations on ordinary tax liabilities has expired. He must show that the investigation will be conducted pursuant to a legitimate purpose, that the inquiry may be relevant to the purpose, that the information sought is not already within the Commissioner's possession, and that the administrative steps required by the Code have been followed--in particular, that the "Secretary or his delegate," after investigation, has determined the further examination to be necessary and has notified the taxpayer in writing to that effect. This does not make meaningless the adversary hearing to which the taxpayer is entitled before enforcement is ordered. At the hearing he "may challenge the summons on any appropriate ground," Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440, at 449, 84 S.Ct. at 513. Nor does our reading of the statutes mean that under no circumstances may the court inquire into the underlying reasons for the examination. It is the court's process which is invoked to enforce the administrative summons and a court may not permit its process to be abused. Such an abuse would take place if the summons had been issued for an improper purpose, such as to harass the taxpayer or to put pressure on him to settle a collateral dispute, or for any other purpose reflecting on the good faith of the particular investigation. The burden of showing an abuse of the court's process is on the taxpayer, and it is not met by a mere showing, as was made in this case, that the statute of limitations for ordinary deficiencies has run or that the records in question have already been once examined."

"Mr. Justice DOUGLAS, with whom Mr. Justice STEWART and Mr. Justice GOLDBERG concur, dissenting.

"Congress, by the three-year statute of limitations that bars assessments of tax deficiencies except (so far as relevant here) in case of fraud, 26 U.S.C. §§6501 (a) and (c), has brought into being a "statute of repose" that I would respect more highly than my Brethren. I would respect it by requiring the District Court to be satisfied that the Service is not acting capriciously in reopening the closed tax period. Since the agency must go to the court for process to compel the production of the records for the closed tax period, I would insist that the District Court act in a judicial capacity, free to disagree with the administrative decision unless that minimum standard is met."

"Here we have a congressional "statute of repose" embodied in the three-year statute of limitations. I would make it meaningful by protecting it from invasion by mere administrative fiat. Where the limitations period has expired, an examination is presumptively "unnecessary" within the meaning of §7605(b)--a presumption the Service must overcome. That is to say, a re-examination of the taxpayer's records after the three-year period is "unnecessary" within the meaning of §7605(b), unless the District Court is shown something more than mere caprice for believing fraud was practiced on the revenue. Without that minimum safeguard the statutory status of repose becomes rather meaningless."

"It is well settled that a federal district judge is not relegated to complete silence and inaction during the course of a criminal jury trial. Many federal decisions recognize the power of the judge, within reasonable limits, to comment on the evidence and to express fair opinions. This privilege, however, has been limited to the point where the trial judge is under a strict duty to direct the jury clearly that they are the sole judges of the facts and are not bound by the judge's questions or comments. "Expressions in many opinions of this Court indicate that it has long been assumed that proof of a criminal charge beyond a reasonable doubt is constitutionally required. See, for example, Miles v. These rules are historically grounded rights of our system, developed to safeguard men from dubious and unjust convictions, with resulting forfeitures of life, liberty, and property".

"No man should be deprived of his life under the forms of law unless the jurors who try him are able, upon their consciences, to say that the evidence before them * * * is sufficient to show beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of every fact necessary to constitute the crime charged." p. 363.

"The reasonable-doubt standard plays a vital role in the American scheme of criminal procedure. It is a prime instrument for reducing the risk of convictions resting on factual error. The standard provides concrete substance for the presumption of innocence--that bedrock "axiomatic and elementary" principle whose "enforcement lies at the foundation of the administration of our criminal law." Coffin v. United States, supra, 156 U.S., at 453, 15 S.Ct., at 403. As the dissenters in the New York Court of Appeals observed, and we agree, "a person accused of a crime * * * would be at a severe disadvantage, a disadvantage amounting to a lack of fundamental fairness, if he could be adjudged guilty and imprisoned for years on the strength of the same evidence as would suffice a civil case." 24 N.Y.2d, at 205, 299 N.Y.S.2d, at 422, 247 N.E.2d, at 259."

"The requirement of proof beyond a reasonable doubt has this vital role in our criminal procedure for cogent reasons. The accused during a criminal prosecution has at stake interest of immense importance, both because of the possibility that he may lose his liberty upon conviction and because of the certainty that he would be stigmatized by the conviction. Accordingly, a society that values the good name and freedom of every individual should not condemn a man for commission of a crime when there is reasonable doubt about his guilt. As we said in Speiser v. Randall, supra, 357 U.S., at 525-526, 78 S.Ct., at 1342: "There is always in litigation a margin of error, representing error in factfinding, which both parties must take into account. Where one party has at stake an interest of transcending value--as a criminal defendant his liberty--this margin of error is reduced as to him by the process of placing on the other party the burden of * * * persuading the factfinder at the conclusion of the trial of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Due process commands that no man shall lose his liberty unless the Government has borne the burden of * * * convincing the factfinder of his guilt." To this end, the reasonable-doubt standard is indispensable, for it "impresses on the trier of fact the necessity of reaching a subjective state of certitude of the facts in issue." Dorsen & Rezneck, In Re Gault and the Future of Juvenile Law, 1 Family Law Quarterly, No. 4, pp. 1, 26 (1967).

"Moreover, use of the reasonable-doubt standard is indispensable to command the respect and confidence of the community in applications of the criminal law."

"It is also important in our free society that every individual going about his ordinary affairs have confidence that his government cannot adjudge him guilty of a criminal offense without convincing a proper fact finder of his guilt with utmost certainty." p. 364. [Brackets original.]

"In our complex tax system, uncertainty often arises even among taxpayers who earnestly wish to follow the law.

The Court has said, "It is not the purpose of the law to penalize frank difference of opinion or innocent errors made despite the exercise of reasonable care." Spies, 317 U.S., at 496, 63 S.Ct. at 367. Degrees of negligence give rise in the tax system to civil penalties. The requirement of an offense committed "willfully" is not met, therefore, if a taxpayer has relied in good faith on a prior decision of this Court. *James v. Miller v. United States (July 11, 1974)

"Statute authorizing' action against Government must generally be strictly construe as a waiver of sovereign immunity."

.. the government is not estopped by an unauthorized act of one of its agents."

"We would note in this regard that our holding does no violence to the fundamental purpose of any statute of limitations--the barring of stale claims. [Cite omitted.] The statutory limit of two years remains the same whichever triggering event is chosen, and the timing of that critical event remains completely within the control of the Commissioner. Indeed it is difficult to see how the Commissioner will be prejudiced by a seven-month "extension" on a claim which he did not disallow until four years after the contested taxes were paid and the initial refund claim was filed. The Commissioner must merely defend one more refund action for a not insubstantial amount."

"In sum, given that the relevant statute of limitations is by its very terms rather flexible, that there is no suggestion that anyone in the Service acted in collusion with the taxpayers to defraud the federal fist, and that the taxpayers' reliance on the erroneously issued disallowance notice was not unreasonable, we conclude that the government is estopped from raising the earlier deadline as a bar to this action."

Miller v. United States (Nov. 25, 1974)

"Even though corporation did not label $65,000 check made payable to its sole stockholder a dividend, check could constitute a dividend for tax purposes."

"Crucial concept in a finding that there is a constructive dividend for tax purposes is that corporation has conferred a benefit on stockholder in order to distribute available earnings and profits without expectation of repayment."

"Basic principle of tax law is that form into which a taxpayer" casts a transaction will not obliterate the tax consequence that emerge from the substance of the transaction."

"Burden was on individual taxpayers to establish that corporation did not have earnings and profits equal to amounts diverted and sought to be taxed as dividend income."

United States v. Neff (Feb. 28, 1980)

"The information that would be revealed by direct answer need not be such as would itself support a criminal conviction, however, but must simply "furnish a link in chain of evidence needed to prosecute the claimant for federal crime." Id. See also Hashagen v. United States, 283 F.2d. 345, 348 (9th Cir. 1960). Indeed, it is enough if responses would merely "provide a lead or clue" to evidence having a tendency to incriminate. Id at 348."

"The law does not require him ""to prove guilt to avoid admitting it."" [Cites omitted.]

"Thus the defendant is placed in a delicate position, well described by Judge Learned Hand:

"Obviously a witness may not be compelled to do more than show that the answer is likely to be dangerous to him, else he will be forced to disclose those very facts which the privilege protects. Logically, indeed, he is boxed in a paradox, for he must prove the criminatory character of what it is his privilege to suppress just because it is criminatory. The only practicable solution is to be content with the door's being set a little ajar, and while at times this no doubt partially destroys the privilege, and at times it permits the suppression of competent evidence, nothing better is available.

"The waiver of sovereign immunity found by the court was an amendment to the Administrative Procedure Act. The amendment provided in part:

"An action in a court of the United States seeking relief other than money damages and stating a claim that an agency or an officer or employee thereof acted or failed to act in an official capacity or under color of legal authority shall not be dismissed nor relief therein be denied on the ground that it is against the United States or that the United States is an indispensable party.

United States v. Miller (Dec. 1, 1980)

"The good-faith defense was not available to defendant whose "Fifth Amendment" income tax forms contained no income information and who thus made no return at all, where there was no evidence indicating that defendant believed that filing proper return would subject him to possible prosecution. 26 U.S.C.A. §7203."

"Defendant's conduct is not "willful" if he acted through negligence, even gross negligence, inadvertence, justifiable excuse, or mistake, or due to his good faith misunderstanding of the requirements of the law. However, mere disagreement with the law in and of itself does not constitute good faith misunderstanding of the requirements of the law, because it is the duty of all persons to obey the law whether or not they agree with it. Also, a person's belief that the tax laws violate his constitutional rights does not constitute a good faith misunderstanding of the requirements of the law. Furthermore, a person's disagreement with the Government's monetary system and policies does not constitute a good faith misunderstanding of the requirements of the law."

[United States v. Miller, 634 F.2d. 1134 (1980)]

United States v. Romero (Mar. 6, 1981)

"Defendant, who demanded that he be allowed to represent himself despite being advised by trial judge that self-representation would be extremely unwise, "knowingly and intelligently" waived assistance of appointed counsel." "Court must honor, upon proper request, defendant's constitutional right to represent himself."

"In prosecution for willful failure to file income tax returns, trial judge properly instructed jury on meaning of terms "income" and "person," despite defendant's proclaimed belief that he was not a "person" and that wages he earned as carpenter were not "income."

"Defendant's good-faith disagreement with statutory provisions of income tax laws did not excuse his failure to file returns, and such failure was "willful."

"Courts are established at public expense to try issues, not to play games."

"Romero also alleges bias and error on the part of the trial judge based upon the judge's comments and instructions concerning the legal meaning of the terms "income" and "person" in 26 U.S.C. §§61 and 7203. We find this allegation to be frivolous. 26 U.S.C. §61 provides in part: "(a) General definition.--Except as otherwise provided in this subtitle, gross income means all income from whatever source derived, including (but not limited to) the following items: (1) Compensation for services, including fees, commissions, and similar items[.]" In addition, the reference to the word "person" in section 7203 of title 26 is intended to encompass not only all individuals subject to income tax liabilities, but also legal entities liable for tax payments or required by law and regulations to make a tax return."

"In our system of government, one is free to speak out in open opposition to the provisions of the tax laws, but such opposition does not relieve a citizen of his obligation to pay taxes."

[United States v. Romero, 640 F.2d. 1014 (1981)]

Stonecipher v. Bray, et. al. (Aug. 10, 1981)

"Action was brought by taxpayer against his employer and Internal Revenue Service seeking injunction prohibiting employer from denying him exemption from federal income tax withholding, writ of mandamus directing IRS to order payment of withheld taxes, and punitive damages. The United States District Court for the District of Arizona, Walter Early Craig, J., dismissed action for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction and failure to state a claim, and taxpayer appealed."

"The only exception to the Anti-Injunction Act is where the taxpayer demonstrates that: (1) under no circumstance can the governmental defendant ultimately prevail; and (2) the taxpayer will be irreparably harmed if the injunction is not granted. Enochs v. Williams Packing & Navigation Co., 370 U.S. 1, 7, 82 S.Ct. 1125, 1129, 8 L.Ed.2d. 292 (1962)."

"Treasury Regulation §31.3402(f)(2)-1 requires an employee to file a W-4 with the employer upon commencement of employment. Bechtel [the employer] was not required, however, to ascertain whether Stonecipher was entitled to claim exemption from withholding but rather was obligated under Treasury Regulation §31.3402(n)-1 to contact the District Director of the IRS if it believed that the W-4 contained an incorrect statement."

"Stonecipher's argument that due process required the IRS to grant him a hearing before determining that he was not entitled to claim exemption from federal income tax is foreclosed by well-settled law. The prompt collection of taxes is necessary for the nation's continued existence and is an important governmental interest that justifies postponing notice and an opportunity for a hearing. See Phillips v. Commissioner, 283 U.S. 589, 595-97, 51 S.Ct. 608, 610-12, 75 L.Ed. 1289 (1931). Stonecipher's due process rights are adequately protected by the statutory scheme which allows him to contest his tax liability in the Tax Court prior to paying the disputed tax or to sue for a refund in federal district court or in the Court of Claims."

"Stonecipher's complaint further alleged that Bechtel breached his employment contract by withholding taxes from his wages. This argument is without merit. Stonecipher has not alleged that his employment contract contained a provision requiring Bechtel to refrain from withholding taxes from his paycheck. In the absence of any express provision to the contrary, we conclude that when an employer withholds taxes from an employee's wages and pays the employee the balance, the employer has discharged his contractual obligations. See United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States, 201 F.2d 118, 120 (10th Cir. 1952). Indeed, a contractual clause providing otherwise might very well be invalid as contrary to public policy". [Stonecipher v. Bray, et. al., 653 F.2d 398 (1981)]

Mitchell v. United States (Oct. 21, 1981)

"Congress' waiver of sovereign immunity with respect to money compensation must be clear or strong before court can say that statute mandates compensation."

"There was consent to suit against the United States for such claims as claims that government illegally kept some of Indians's own money or property and claims that there had been other illegal withdrawals from funds received from loggers for Indians, as well as for misapplication of trust funds required by law to be paid to Indians or applied for their benefit."

"Constitutional claims for taking under just compensation clause could be brought in court of claims."

"If there was failure to exhaust administrative remedies, it was waived by failure to earlier advance defense."

Deerfield Medical Center v. City of Deerfield Beach (Nov. 13, 1981)

"In order for plaintiffs to be granted preliminary injunctive relief they were required to show that there was a substantial likelihood that they would suffer irreparable injury if an injunction were not granted. An injury is "irreparable" only if it cannot be undone through monetary remedies. [Cites omitted.] It is well settled that the loss of First Amendment freedoms' for even minimal periods of time constitutes irreparable injury justifying the grant of a preliminary injunction. [Cites omitted.] Similarly the right of privacy must be carefully guarded for once an infringement has occurred it cannot be undone by monetary relief. [Cites omitted.]"

"The district court misapplied the controlling law to the facts before it, and thereby abused its discretion, when finding no irreparable injury' to pregnant women's rights of privacy because "other abortion facilities nearby [could] provide services to those women." Record at 113. We have already determined that the constitutional right to privacy is "either threatened or in fact being impaired", and this conclusion mandates a finding of irreparable injury. Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. at 373, 96 S.Ct. at 2689. That the injury resulting from defendants' actions is minimized by the presence of other abortion facilities does not eliminate or render harmless the potential continuing constitutional violation of a fundamental right." "Second, counsel must make diligent efforts to comply with the time limits applicable to pleadings, responses to discovery and other matters. An enlargement of time can be a useful device but should be viewed as the exception, not the rule."

"Fourth, counsel has a responsibility to file an enlargement motion as soon as the need therefor becomes apparent."

"However, any such motion must carefully explain the reasons why it could not have been filed in a more timely fashion." [Footnote to above paragraph.]

"Where a motion for enlargement is based on the occurrence of an unanticipated event, counsel must file the motion

Social Security Amendments of 1983, P.L. 98-21

"PROHIBIT WITHDRAWAL OF STATE AND LOCAL EMPLOYEES "Present law

"Employees of State and local governments may be covered under social security at the option of the State and in agreement with the Secretary of Health and Human Services. Coverage may be terminated if the State gives 2 years written notice of such intent, provided that the State or local group has been covered for at least 5 years. Once coverage is terminated, the group can never again be covered under social security."

"Committee Amendment

"The Committee amendment would prohibit State and local governments from terminating coverage for their employees. Pending terminations would be invalid, effective on enactment. In addition, the amendment would provide an opportunity for State and local governments which have withdrawn from the social security system to voluntarily rejoin. Once having rejoined, the governmental entity would be precluded from terminating coverage.

Kloes v. United States (Jan. 17, 1984)

"Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, and, particularly, penalty provision for filing of frivolous income tax return, was passed in compliance with the origination clause, even though, after the House of Representatives originally passed the legislation, the Senate substituted what amounted to entirely different bill."

"Statute providing for penalties for filing frivolous income tax returns is applicable only where taxpayer has filed what purports to be a tax return, return either fails to contain sufficient information to judge whether self-assessment of taxes is correct or contains information which, on its face, shows that self-assessment is incorrect, and deficiencies which appear on return are due to either position which is frivolous or desire, apparent from face of the return, to delay or impede administration of the tax laws."

"Taxpayer must make colorable showing that he is involved in some activity for which he could be criminally prosecuted in order to validly claim the Fifth Amendment privilege on his income tax return."

"Taxpayer's blanket assertion of constitutional privilege to decline to disclose any information requested on income tax form was ineffective and, absent any specification of legitimate reasons for the particular objections, return was of "frivolous" nature so as to warrant imposition of penalty."

United States v. Escobar De Bright (Sept. 18, 1984)

"As we noted earlier, we have consistently stated that if a defendant's theory of the case is supported by law, and if there is some foundation for the theory in the evidence, the failure to give the defendant's proposed jury instruction concerning his theory is "reversible error."

"The right to have the jury instructed as to the defendant's theory of the case is one of those rights "so basic to a fair trial" that failure to instruct where there is evidence to support the instruction can never be considered harmless error." Cameron v. Internal Revenue Service (Sept. 25, 1984)

"Pro se pleadings are to be liberally construed?"

"Pro se complaints are held to less stringent pleading requirements; technical rigor in the examination of such pleadings is inappropriate."

"Summary judgment serves as a vehicle with which court can determine whether further exploration of a fact is necessary."

"In making determination on motion for summary judgment, court must draw all inferences from established or asserted facts in favor of nonmoving party."

"In context of motion for summary judgment, party may not rest on mere allegations of pleadings or bare contentions that an issue of fact exists."

"Party moving for summary judgment must demonstrate absence of genuine issue of material fact."

"Court on motion for summary judgment views all evidence submitted in favor of nonmoving party."

"Even if there are some disputed facts, where undisputed facts are material facts involved and those facts show one party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, summary judgment is appropriate."

"If court resolves all factual disputes in favor of nonmoving party and still finds summary judgment in favor of moving party is correct as a matter of law, then moving party is entitled to summary judgment in his favor."

"Because of limited nature of a district court's jurisdiction, the court may inquire into its jurisdiction sua sponte."

"Statute providing district court with original jurisdiction of any civil action arising under any Act of Congress providing for internal revenue gives jurisdiction for an action arising under the Internal Revenue laws; as such, the suit must be based on some cause of action which the Internal Revenue Code recognizes and allows plaintiff to bring."

"Suit by plaintiff, who was seeking injunctive relief and damages against Internal Revenue Service and its agents for attempts to assess taxes against him and to levy on his wages and property, did not arise under the Internal Revenue Code, as plaintiff did not seek either to enforce any provision of the Code or to pursue a statutory remedy under the Code; therefore, district court had no jurisdiction under statute providing for original jurisdiction of any civil action arising under any act of Congress providing for internal revenue."

"There was no federal question jurisdiction of plaintiff's suit for injunctive relief and damages against Internal Revenue Service and its agents for attempts to assess taxes against him and to levy against his wages and property; while a federal question might have existed, it would have provided no basis for plaintiff to recover injunctive relief or damages, but at best would have allowed district court to declare Internal Revenue Code unconstitutional as a prelude to a refund suit, which plaintiff was not pursuing."

"Internal Revenue Code sections providing that a person cannot sue to enjoin assessment or collection of taxes, and relating to discharge of liens and to declaratory judgment actions concerning tax exempt status for organizations did not provide district court with jurisdiction of suit for injunctive relief and damages against plaintiff and to levy against his wages and property."

"Section 1983 did not provide district court with jurisdiction of suit for injunctive relief and damages against Internal Revenue Service and its agents for attempts to assess taxes against plaintiff and to levy against his wages and property, as the actions of IRS officials, even if beyond scope of their official duties, were acts done under color of federal law, not state law."

"United States is a sovereign and, as such, is immune from suit without its prior consent."

"Internal Revenue Service is immune from suit for tax collection or assessment activities."

"In order to present a situation where a federal official enjoys only qualified immunity, complaint must contain specific allegations of the unconstitutional conduct by the official and must allege the specific statutory provision under which the official exceeded his authority"

"Tenor of plaintiff's complaint was that he sought damages from individual Internal Revenue Service agents for acts done in their official capacities in handling his file; therefore, those individual defendants enjoyed absolute immunity from suit."

"While complaint claimed that individual Internal Revenue Service agents acted unconstitutionally and exceeded their authority in handling plaintiff's file, it did so in very conclusory terms, and therefore those defendants were not limited to qualified immunity on basis that they exceeded their official authority."

"It is entirely proper for Congress to delegate broad powers to executives to determine details of legislative scheme through implementing regulations."

"Doctrine of separation of powers is not violated by the Internal Revenue Code or by Internal Revenue Service regulations enacted pursuant to the Code."

"Wages are taxable as "income." 26 U.S.C.A. §61."

"Plaintiff's due process rights were not adversely affected by an insistence on appeal or suit only in the Tax Court."

"Internal Revenue Service did not violate plaintiff's Fourth Amendment rights by failing to obtain a warrant of seizure in order to withhold his personal property via a levy against his wages."

"Farmers in irrigation district failed to establish implied-in-fact contract under which Bureau of Reclamation would have been obligated to inform farmers of total amount of water expected to be supplied to them from water project in time of shortage."

"Negligent disclosure of information by Government concerning projected water allotments from federal irrigation project could not form basis for breach of contract claim within meaning of Tucker Act."

This survey leads us to conclude that the overwhelming weight of authority in the field of criminal prosecutions for failure to file tax returns and for tax evasion insists on a subjective standard for assessing willfulness."

"In short, we agree with the Fifth Circuit's holding in *Mann v. Gilbert v. DaGrossa (Apr. 5, 1985)

"United States, as sovereign, is immune from suit unless it has expressly waived such immunity and consented to be sued."

"Waiver, by United States, of its sovereign immunity cannot be implied, but must be unequivocally expressed." "Where suit has not been consented to by United States, dismissal of action is required."

"United States may not be sued without its consent and existence of such consent is prerequisite for jurisdiction."

"Bar of sovereign immunity cannot be avoided by naming officers and employees of United States as defendants."

"Suit against Internal Revenue Service employees in their official capacity is essentially a suit against United States, and, as such, absent express statutory consent to sue, dismissal is required."

"To extent that Internal Revenue Service employees were sued in their official capacity, claims were barred by doctrine of sovereign immunity, absent statutory waiver."

"Sovereign immunity does not bar damage action against federal officials in their individual capacity for violation of individual's constitutional rights."

"In order to bring damage action against federal official in his individual capacity, and thereby avoid bar of sovereign immunity, normal rules for establishing in personam jurisdiction apply."

"'Effects' doctrine may serve as basis for finding of in personam jurisdiction in state in which activities complained of had effect."

Public Agencies Opposed To Social Security Entrapment v. Heckler (May 29, 1985)

"For purposes of ruling on motion to dismiss for want of standing, both trial and reviewing courts must accept as true all material allegations of complaint, and must construe complaint in favor of complaining party."

"To comply with case and controversy requirement of Article III plaintiff must show distinct and palpable injury, causal connection between injury and defendant's conduct, and substantial likelihood that relief requested will redress injury."

"Taking of property of public agency of state without just compensation is a 'distinct and palpable' constitutional injury to local government redressable in action under the just compensation clause; local government or political subdivision is entitled to just compensation when the United States takes its property."

"In determining whether California public agencies possessed sufficient contractual rights under agreement between United States and California to have standing to assert claim that amendment to the Social Security Act, §218(g), as amended, 42 U.S.C.A. §418(g), preventing states and public agencies from withdrawing from participation in Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance Benefits program if they were participating on effective date of amendment was taking of contractual rights without just compensation, district court would rely exclusively on principles of general contract law, since applicable statutes were silent on issue."

"Generally, rights which arise out of contracts with the United States are 'property' within meaning of just compensation clause of the Fifth Amendment.”

"Agreement between California and United States, which provided that, upon request of California, Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance Benefits would be extended to public agencies, and which invested public agencies with contractual right to terminate participation in program, was so expressed as to give United States reason to know that benefit to public agencies arising from escape clause was contemplated by California as one of motivating causes for making contract, and thus, public agencies, as third-party beneficiaries of contract, had standing to allege taking of their contract rights under such agreement without just compensation."

"Complaint by California public agencies which alleged a contractual right to terminate participation in Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance Benefits program and that such right was taken by enactment of amendment to the Social Security Act, §218(g), as amended, 42 U.S.C.A. §418(g), alleged sufficient causal connection between injury and conduct of the United States to satisfy causal connection requirement of standing."

"For standing purposes, resolution of claim by California public agencies that enactment of amendment to the Social Security Act, §218(g), as amended, 42 U.S.C.A. §418(g), which prevents states and public agencies from withdrawing from participation in Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance Benefits Program if they were participating on effective date of amendment, was taking of agencies, contractual right to withdrawal from program without just compensation would redress injury as to which agencies complained."

"Money paid by California into the United States Treasury was assessed either pursuant to the agreement entered into between the United States and California, or pursuant to 1983 amendment to the Social Security Act, §218(g), as amended, 42 U.S.C.A. §418(g), which prevents states and public agencies from withdrawing from participation in Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance Benefits program; therefore, payments were not federal taxes, and actions challenging 1983 Amendment were not barred by the Anti-Injunction Act or Declaratory Judgment Acts."

"Even if the Social Security Act, §1104, as amended, 42 U.S.C.A. §1304, granted Congress right to amend Title II whenever and however it chooses, such statute does not authorize Congress to alter or amend contract with state dealing with benefits under such statute."

"Enactment of 1983 amendment to the Social Security Act, §218(g), as amended, 42 U.S.C.A. §418(g), which prevents states and public agencies from withdrawing from participation in Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance Benefits program if they were participating on effective date of amendment, was a taking, without just compensation, of contractual right of California and its public agencies to withdraw from program upon two years notice, and such amendment could not be saved from unconstitutionality by rewarding just compensation, in light of legislative history indicating that it was enacted to solve financial crisis relating to social security system."

"In the case before this court, the Congress has specifically divested the State and its public agencies of their contractual right to terminate their participation in the Program; it has further instructed the Secretary to effectuate that divestment by directing her to refuse to accept any otherwise properly tendered notifications of withdrawal. It is to this statutory scheme that the lawsuits are tendered and it is only this question which is addressed."

"They also seek "specific performance" of the government's contractual obligations."

"Plainly, the court may not decide the merits of the case in order to decide whether or not it may reach the merits."

"To get down to basics, "property" is that group of rights which inhere in a person's relation to a physical or intangible thing. See Ruckelshaus v. Monsanto Co., 467 U.S. 986, 104 S.Ct. 2862, 2873-74, 81 L.Ed.2d. 815 (1984) (quoting United States v. General Motors Corp., 323 U.S. 373, 377-78, 65 S.Ct. 357, 259, 89 S.Ed. 311 (1945)). It follows, therefore, that the rights arising out of a contract are "property" protected by the Fifth Amendment. The Supreme Court has so held. See Lynch v. United States, 292 U.S. at 579, 54 S.Ct. at 843."

"Both the Agreement and the statute provided that the State could withdraw after the giving of two years' advance notice. I assume arguendo that Congress would have had the power under §1304 (or otherwise) to divest the State of its right to withdraw if the right existed solely by virtue of the statute."

"By virtue of the Fifth Amendment, Congress is simply not free to deprive the State of its contractual right without just compensation."

"Congress clearly and explicitly intended to deprive the plaintiffs of their right to withdraw from the contract. See P.L. 98-21 §103(a) and (b), 97 Stat. 65, 71-72, reprinted at [1] U.S.Code Congr. & Admin.News (98th Congr. 1st Sess., 1983). Moreover, Congress provided no means of compensation for depriving plaintiffs of that right. Ordinarily, under such circumstances plaintiff's remedy is to seek "just compensation," in the Court of Claims rather than a declaration that the action of the Government must be set aside. Ruckelshaus, 104 S.Ct. at 2880-83. Cf. Robinson v. Ariyoshi, 753 F.2d. 1468, 1474-75 (9th Cir.1985). In this case I am not free simply to order "just compensation" to the plaintiffs, or to refer the case to the Court of Claims, thus possibly saving the statute from a declaration of unconstitutionality. The only rational compensation would be reimbursement by the United States to the State or public agencies, of the amount of money they currently pay to the United States for their participation in Title II, since that seems the only sensible measure of damages."

"IT IS HEREBY DECLARED that the challenged Act of Congress, P.L. 98-21, Section 103(a) and (b), is void and of no effect as it purports to affect these plaintiffs; and the State of California and its political subdivisions have the lawful right to withdraw from Title II so long as they have met the requirements of the Agreement and the law.

"The Secretary of Health and Human Services is hereby ORDERED to accept the notifications of withdrawal properly tendered to her."

"Where one of the affirmative acts of evasion relied upon by the government in proving attempted tax evasion under Section 7201 is the failure to file an income tax return, failure to file is a lesser included offense, and Congress did not intend for the defendant to be punished for both offenses: *United States v. Lojeski v. Boandl (Aug. 23, 1985)

"In this court's Memorandum Opinion and Order dated March 26, 1985, we held that defendants' sovereign immunity defense was inappropriate since suit was initiated against defendants in their individual capacities and not against the federal government. In that action involving issues of liability and damages, there existed no express statute permitting suit against the United States; however, this is not the case with the issues sub judice. Section 7430 expressly authorizes payment of attorney's fees by the United States in civil proceedings brought by or against the United States. In view of the explicit language of the statute and the intent of Congress in enacting this Section, we can only conclude that plaintiff's Application has been properly initiated pursuant to §7430. Congress intended that the awarding of fees under 26 U.S.C. §7430 will deter abusive actions and overreaching by the Internal Revenue Service and will enable individual taxpayers to vindicate their rights regardless of their economic circumstances." Kaufman v. Egger, 584 F.Supp. 872, 879 (D.Me.1984) quoting H.R.Rep. No. 404, 97th Cong., 2nd Sess. 16 (1982). Therefore, we must conclude that for purposes of reviewing an application for attorney's fees under section 7430, the action sub judice is, indeed, one against the United States, in furtherance of the stated and unambiguous intentions of Congress.

"Before a party may be awarded attorney's fees and expenses pursuant to §7430, that party must have met several criteria. First, all administrative remedies made available by the Internal Revenue Service must be exhausted prior to the pursuit of civil action." p. 531.

"Where defendants' unreasonable actions forced plaintiff to seek court relief, it is only equitable that defendants, rather than plaintiff, should have to bear the costs that their conduct generated." p. 533.

United States v. Phillips (Oct. 17, 1985)

"We find the First Circuit case of United States v. Aitken, 755 F.2d. 188 (1st Cir.1985), to be highly instructive on this issue. In that case, as in the case at hand, the defendant claimed that he sincerely believed wages not to be income." The court found that a subjective, rather than an objective, standard was the appropriate measure of this belief. In support of that finding, the court explicated a number of Supreme Court cases giving rise to an inference that a subjective standard should be employed in assessing "willfulness" in criminal tax prosecutions."

Gibson v. Farmers and Merchants Bank (Feb. 12, 1986)

"Law of the case doctrine" requires courts to follow findings of fact and conclusions of law made by Court of Appeals in prior appeal of same case; moreover, doctrine bars relitigation of all factors impliedly disposed of in prior appeal and all matters decided in prior appeal by necessary implication."

"The law of the case doctrine plays an important role in our judicial system. This self-imposed restriction is grounded upon the sound public policy that litigation must come to an end. Lehrman v. Gulf Oil Corp., 500 F.2d. 659 (5th Cir. 1974). Simply stated, the doctrine requires courts to follow the findings of facts and conclusions of law made by the court of appeals in a prior appeal of the same case. U.S. v. Robinson, 690 F.2d. 869 (11th Cir. 1982). The doctrine has been extended by case law to further bar relitigation of all factors impliedly disposed of in the prior appeal, Gulf Coast B & S Co. v. International Bro. of E.W., No. 480, 460 F.2d. 105 (5th Cir. 1972), and of all matters decided in the prior appeal by "necessary implication," Terrell v. Household Goods Carriers' Bureau, 494 F.2d. 16 (5th Cir. 1974). Otherwise, our system would have no finality and the same question could be relitigated and appealed over and over again. However, the reach and weight of the law of the case doctrine is not limitless. Terrell, 494 F.2d. at 19. It is simply a judicial policy and does not carry the same consequences as the rule of res judicata. The doctrine is not an inexorable command that rigidly binds courts to their former decisions, especially when circumstances may warrant a re-examination of the earlier decision. Id. Further, the policy applies only to issues that were decided, and "does not include determination of all questions which were within the issues of the case and which, therefore, might have been decided."

Celotex Corp. v. Catrett (June 25, 1986)

"Entry of summary judgment is mandated, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish that existence of an element essential to that party's case and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial."

"Where party will have burden of proof on an element essential to its case at trial and does not, after adequate time for discovery, make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of that element, there can be no genuine issue as to any material fact since a complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the nonmovant's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial."

"Party seeking summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion and identifying those portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact."

"There is no express or implied requirement in Rule 56 that the moving party support its motion with affidavits or other similar material negating the opponent's claim."

"Regardless of whether the moving party accompanies its summary judgment motion with affidavits, the motion may and should be granted so long as whatever is before the district court demonstrates that the standard for the entry of summary judgment set forth in Rule 56(c) is satisfied."

"Nonmoving party need not produce evidence in a form that would be admissible at trial in order to avoid summary judgment."

"Summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not a disfavored procedural shortcut but, rather, as an integral part of the federal rules as a whole, which are designed to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action."

Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc. (June 25, 1986)

"Mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; there must be no genuine issue of material fact."

"Substantive law will identify which facts are material for purposes of summary judgment, as only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment; factual disputes that are irrelevant or unnecessary will not be counted."

"Materiality determination on motion for summary judgment rests on the substantive law and it is the substantive law's identification of which facts are critical and which facts are irrelevant that governs."

"Summary judgment will not lie if the dispute about a fact is 'genuine,' i.e., if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party."

"At summary judgment stage, judge's function is not himself to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial."

"There is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for jury to return a verdict for that party; if the evidence is merely colorable or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted."

"There is no requirement that trial judge make findings of fact when granting summary judgment but, in many cases, findings are extremely helpful to a reviewing court."

"Standard for granting summary judgment mirrors the standard for a directed verdict which is that the trial judge must direct a verdict if, under the governing law, there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict."

"Inquiry involved in a ruling on a motion for summary judgment or for directed verdict necessarily implicates the substantive evidentiary standard of proof that would apply at the trial on the merits."

United States v. Turner (Aug. 26, 1986)

"A trial court's decision regarding the admissibility of evidence will be overturned only if it is clearly erroneous or an abuse of discretion. United States v. Rothbart, 723 F.2d. 752, 755 (10th Cir.1983); United States v. Neal, 718 F.2d. 1505, 1509-10 (10th Cir.1983), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 818, 105 S.Ct. 87, 83 L.Ed.2d. 34 (1984). Evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact of consequence to the action more or less probable is relevant evidence, Fed.R.Evid. 401, and relevant evidence of other crimes or wrongs may be admitted under Rule 404(b) unless it is introduced solely to prove criminal disposition, United States v. Naranjo, 710 F.2d. 1465, 1467 (10th Cir.1983), or its prejudice to the defendant substantially outweighs its probative value. *United States v. United States v. Crooks (Nov. 25, 1986)

"The expert advice upon which Laird apparently relied was that of a former IRS auditor, who was not a lawyer. ... Reliance on advice of counsel is not an absolute defense, but it is a factor to be considered in assessing good faith and intent. Counsel must, however, have been fully informed of all relevant facts, unbiased and competent. See United States v. Winans, 612 F.Supp. 827, 848 (S.D.N.Y.1985), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 791 F.2d. 1024 (2d Cir.1986). The jury, which was properly instructed on the defense of advice of counsel, could rationally have concluded that the nature of the advice was such that reliance upon it did not establish good faith or lack of intent."

Document Management Group, Inc., v. United States (Jan. 15, 1987)

"In determining applicable statute of limitations in a tax refund action, the court must first determine whether claimant is a taxpayer or a nontaxpayer within the meaning of Internal Revenue Code."

"Even though third party seeking refund for taxes paid on behalf of another could not obtain relief under Internal Revenue Code as a taxpayer, alternative forms of relief were available to him as a nontaxpayer under Claims Court's implied in fact contract jurisdiction."

"Although plaintiff's complaint mischaracterized his implied in fact contract action, in Claims Court, as a tax refund action, plaintiff's complaint sufficiently asserted implied in fact contract action."

"In view of the fact that in deciding IRS's motion to dismiss, all plaintiff's findings of uncontroverted fact were presumed to be true, plaintiff's assertions that its payments to IRS were involuntary and made under duress, for purpose of obtaining judicial relief under Claims Court's implied in fact contract jurisdiction, were sufficient to defeat motion where IRS merely alleged that payments were voluntary but failed to submit any evidence or affidavits in support."

"While waivers of sovereign immunity must be strictly construed, they must be fairly construed as well."

"In deciding defendant's motion to dismiss, all of the plaintiff's findings of uncontroverted fact are assumed to be true. RUSCC 56(d)."

"Mere conclusory statements and denials do not take on dignity sufficient to support opposition to motion for summary judgment by placing them in affidavit form."

"Party may not simply assert in its brief that discovery was necessary, and thereby overturn summary judgment, when it failed to comply with requirement to set out reasons for need for discovery in affidavit."

"No taking claim under Fifth Amendment arises when rights or property have been impaired through unlawful government action."

"Drug Enforcement Administration's seizure of aircraft, which had allegedly been used to facilitate sale of marijuana, was not a Fifth Amendment taking of property, even if there was no probable cause for seizure; no taking claim arises when rights of property have been impaired through unlawful government action."

"Fact that taxpayer does not learn until after limitations period has run that tax was paid in error, and that he or she has ground upon which to claim refund, does not operate to lift limitations bar."

United States v. Collins (Nov. 27, 1990)

"Good faith misunderstanding of duty to pay income taxes can negate willfulness element of tax evasion charge and misunderstanding need not have reasonable basis to provide defense; jury may however properly consider reasonableness of good faith defense in determining whether asserted beliefs are genuinely held."

"In tax evasion case, jury could consider objective reasonableness of defendant's belief that he was not obligated to pay taxes in determining whether his subjective belief was genuine even though defendant's subjective belief did not have to be reasonable to state valid good faith defense."

"Defendant's right to retain counsel of his choice represents right of constitutional dimension, denial of which may rise to level of constitutional violation since attorneys are not fungible."

"If court unreasonably or arbitrarily interferes with accused's right to retain counsel of his choice, conviction cannot stand, regardless of whether defendant has been prejudiced."

"Defendant's right to retain counsel of his choice is not absolute and may not be insisted on in manner which will obstruct orderly procedure in courts of justice or deprive courts of exercise of their inherent power to control procedure."

"Courts must balance defendant's constitutional right to retain counsel of his choice against need to maintain high standards of professional responsibility, public's confidence in integrity of judicial process, and orderly administration of justice."

"Although admission of attorney pro hac vice is committed to discretion of district court, denial of admission in criminal cases implicates constitutional right to counsel of choice."

"Attorneys admitted pro hac vice cannot be disqualified under standards and procedures any different or more stringent than those imposed on regular members of district court bar."

"Where district court in exercise of its discretion admitted counsel pro hac vice, subsequent revocation of status had to be evaluated as though court had disqualified regular member of district bar."

"Attorney may be dismissed for pursuing frivolous theories even if attorney acts at behest of defendant."

"Attorney's misconduct in open court may sufficiently impede orderly administration of justice to supersede defendant's Sixth Amendment right to retain counsel of choice."

"If district court disqualifies defendant's counsel of choice, it must make findings on record stating rationale for its action."

"Defense attorney in prosecution for federal tax evasion argued unsupportable theories which transformed legal argument from intellectual process to carnival of frivolity aimed at disseminating defendant's antitax views, and, thus, district court was justified in revoking attorney's pro hac vice admission."

Hafer v. Melo (Nov. 5, 1991)

"The Supreme Court, Justice O'Connor, held that: (1) state officers may be personally liable for damages under §1983 [of title 42] based 'upon actions taken in their official capacities; (2) officers' potential liability is not limited to acts under color of state law that are outside their authority or not essential to operation of state government, but also extends to acts within their authority and necessary to performance of governmental functions; and (3) Eleventh Amendment does not erect barrier against suits to impose individual and personal liability on state officers under §1983."

"State executive officials are not entitled to absolute immunity for their official actions...."

- .. the phrase "acting in their official capacities" is best understood as a reference to the capacity in which the state officer is sued, not the capacity in which the officer inflicts the alleged injury.

"A government official in the role of personal-capacity defendant thus fits comfortably within the statutory term "person.""

- Congress enacted §1983 "to enforce provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment against those who carry a badge of authority of a State and represent it in some capacity, whether they act in accordance with their authority or misuse it." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 243, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 1689, 40 L.Ed.2d. 90 (1974)(quoting Monroe v. Pape, supra, 365 U.S., at 171-172, 81 S.Ct., at 475-476). Because of that intent, we have held that in §1983 actions the statutory requirement of action "under color of" state law is just as broad as the Fourteenth Amendment's "state action" requirement. Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922, 929, 102 S.Ct. 2744, 2749, 73 L.Ed.2d. 482 (1982)."

"Rather, immunity from suit under §1983 is "predicated upon a considered inquiry into the immunity historically accorded the relevant official at common law and the interests behind it," Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409, 421, 96 S.Ct. 984, 990, 47 L.Ed.2d. 128 (1976), and officials seeking absolute immunity must show that such immunity is justified for the governmental function at issue, Burns v. Reed, 500 U.S. 478, 111 S.Ct. 1934, 114 L.Ed.2d. 547 (1991)."

"[S]ince Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123 [28 S.Ct. 441, 52 L.Ed. 714] (1908)," we said, "it has been settled that the Eleventh Amendment provides no shield for a state official confronted by a claim that he had deprived another of a federal right under the color of state law." Scheuer, 416 U.S., at 237, 94 S.Ct., at 1687. While the doctrine of Ex parte Young does not apply where a plaintiff seeks damages from the public treasury, damages awards against individual defendants in federal courts "are a permissible remedy in some circumstances notwithstanding the fact that they hold public office." 416 U.S., at 238, 94 S.Ct., at 1687. That is, the Eleventh Amendment does not erect a barrier against suits to impose "individual and personal liability" on state officials under §1983." [Brackets original.]

United States v. Fletcher (Mar. 4, 1991)

"In a prosecution for tax evasion, what counts is subjective belief of a defendant that his conduct will result in an unlawful evasion of taxes, not the degree to which tax laws are, or should be, objectively comprehensible to that defendant. Cheek v. United States, 498 U.S. 192, 111 S.Ct. 604, 112 L.Ed.2d. 617 (1991); United States v. MacKenzie, 777 F.2d. 811, 818 (2d Cir.1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1169, 106 S.Ct. 2889, 90 L.Ed.2d. 977 (1986). We hold, as we have in the past, that the trier of fact may properly consider general educational background and expertise of the defendant as bearing on the defendant's ability to form the requisite willful intent." United States v. Schmidt (June 11, 1991)

"Returning again to the jury instruction standard, a district court may not refuse a theory of defense instruction if such instruction has an evidentiary foundation and is an accurate statement of the law. Dornhofer, 859 F.2d. at 1199. As to the law itself, the essential elements of a reliance defense are 1) full disclosure of all pertinent facts and 2) good faith reliance on the expert's advice. United States v. Miller, 658 F.2d. 235, 237 (4th Cir.1981)."

United States v. Willie (Aug. 12, 1991)

""Willfulness" is defined as the "voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal duty." Cheek v. United States, 111 S.Ct. at 610 (emphasis added). To be a relevant defense to willfulness, then Willie, because of his belief or misunderstanding, must not have known he had a legal duty. Id. at 611 (defendant must be "ignorant of his duty"). Thus, his belief must be descriptive--he must believe the law does not apply to him. A normative belief that the law should not apply to him leaves Willie fully aware of his legal obligations and simply amounts to a disagreement with his known legal duty and a "studied conclusion ... that [the law is] invalid and unenforceable". Id. at 612-13. In Cheek, the Supreme Court stated that "a defendant's views about the validity [or constitutionality] of the tax statutes are irrelevant to the issue of willfulness [and] need not be heard by the jury.... [lit makes no difference whether the claims of invalidity are frivolous or have substance." Id. at 613. Thus, a defendant's good faith belief that he has no legal obligation to file and evidence showing the reasonableness of that state of mind is relevant. But, proof of the reasonableness of a belief that he should not have a duty only proves the reasonableness of the defendants disagreement with the existing law and is, therefore, properly excluded as irrelevant." [Brackets original.]

[United States v. Willie, 941 F.2d. 1384 (10th Cir. 1991)]

United States v. Harris (Aug. 30, 1991)

"We hold that the letters were not hearsay because they were offered to prove the Harris' lack of willfulness, not for the truth of the matters asserted. We further hold that the critical nature of the letters to Harris' defense precludes their exclusion under Rule 403."

"But the letters were not hearsay for the purpose of showing what Harris believed, because her belief does not depend on the actual truth of the matters asserted in the letters. Even if Kritzik were lying, the letters could have caused Harris to believe in good faith that the things he gave her were intended as gifts."

"But criminal prosecutions are a different story. These must rest on a violation of a clear rule of law, not on conflict with a "way of life." If "defendant [in a tax case] ... could not have ascertained the legal standards applicable to their conduct, criminal proceedings may not be used to define and punish an alleged failure to conform to those standards." United States v. Mallas, 762 F.2d. 361, 361 (4th Cir.1985). This rule is based on the Constitution's requirement of due process and its prohibition on ex post facto laws; the government must provide reasonable notice of what conduct is subject to criminal punishment. [Cites omitted.] The rule is also statutory in tax cases, because only "willful" violations are subject to criminal punishment. [Cites omitted.] In the tax area, "willful" wrongdoing means the "voluntary, intentional violation of a known"--and therefore knowable--"legal duty.""

James v. United States (July 23, 1992)

"Party bringing suit against United States bears burden of proving that sovereign immunity has been waived."

"Bulk of taxpayer's suit to quiet title to wages in face of federal tax levy was based on merits of underlying tax liability not procedures used to notify taxpayer of deficiency or to collect it, and district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over action to that extent."

"Claim of notice of intent to levy is prerequisite to valid lien absent finding of jeopardy."

"Genuine issue of material fact, as to whether taxpayers received notice of intention to levy for only one of the two tax years in question, precluded summary judgment in taxpayer's quiet title action challenging procedural irregularities in establishment of lien."

Significantly different rights, responsibilities, and expectations apply to civil audits and criminal tax investigations. It would be a flagrant disregard of individuals' rights to deliberately deceive, or even lull, taxpayers into incriminating themselves during an audit when activities of an obviously criminal nature are under investigation."

Clomon v. Jackson (Mar. 17, 1993)

"Debt collection practice can be false, deceptive, or misleading in violation of Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) even if practice does not fall within any of the statutory categories listed as being false or misleading representations. Consumer Credit Protection Act, §807, as amended, 15 U.S.C.A. §1692e."

"Single violation of Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) provision prohibiting debt collector from using any false, deceptive or misleading representation is sufficient to establish civil liability under FDCPA."

"Most widely accepted test for determining whether collection letter is false or misleading representation, thereby violating Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA), is objective standard based on 'least sophisticated consumer'; standard serves dual purpose in that it endures protection of all consumers, even naive and trusting, against deceptive debt collection practices and protects debt collectors against liability for bizarre or idiosyncratic interpretations of collection notices."

"Use of any false, deceptive or misleading representation in collection letter violates Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA), regardless of whether representation in question violates particular subsection of FDCPA prohibiting false or misleading representations."

"Computer-generated debt collection form letters bearing name and facsimile of signature of attorney who did not review collection letter or file of debtor to whom letter were [sic] sent violated Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) provision prohibiting false representation or implication that communication is from attorney; use of attorney's letterhead and signature on collection letters was sufficient to give least sophisticated consumer impression that letters were communications from attorney and this impression was false and misleading because attorney played virtually no day-to-day role in debt collection process."

"Language used in debt collection letter violated Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) provision prohibiting use of any false representation or deceptive means to collect debt; letters stating that attorney was suggesting certain measures be taken to further implement collection of debt, that attorney had received instructions from client to pursue matter to fullest extent, and that attorney told client that it could lawfully undertake collection activity false or misleading because they led debtor to believe that attorney had personally considered debtor's case before letters were sent when in fact attorney did not review letters or files of debtor."

"Computer-generated debt collection form letters which bore name and facsimile of attorney's signature and which stated that attorney was suggesting that certain measures be taken to implement collection of debt violated general ban on Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) on use of any false, deceptive or misleading representation or means in connection with collection of any debt; attorney did not review debtor's file or letters before they were sent out."

"No mass-mailing technique with respect to debt collection letters is permissible, regardless of how effective it might be, if that technique constitutes false, deceptive or misleading communication in violation of Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA)."

"There are few, if any, cases in which mass-produced debt collection letter bearing facsimile of attorney's signature will comply with restrictions imposed by Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) provision prohibiting false, deceptive or misleading representations; use of attorney's signature on collection letter implies that attorney directly controlled or supervised process through which letter was sent and that attorney signing letter formed opinion about how to manage case of debtor to whom letter was sent and in mass mailing, these implications are frequently false because attorney whose signature is used might play no role either in sending letters or in determining who should receive them." Hill v. Greene County School District (Feb. 2, 1994)

"Canal Authority of State of Florida v. Callaway, 489 F.2d. 567 (5th Cir. 1974), is the case most often cited for the four factors this court must consider when determining whether to issue a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction. Those factors are as follows:

"(1) a substantial likelihood that plaintiff will prevail on the merits,

"(2) a substantial threat that plaintiff will suffer irreparable injury if the injunction is not granted,

"(3) that the threatened injury to the plaintiff outweighs the threatened harm the injunction may do to the defendant, and

"(4) that granting the preliminary injunction will not disserve the public interest."

"A preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy. [Cites omitted.] Accordingly, the decision to grant a preliminary injunction is to be treated as the exception?" rather than the rule. [Cite omitted.]"

"Furthermore, injunctive relief should only be granted if the movant has clearly carried the burden of persuasion on all four prerequisites. [Cites omitted.] Failure to prove even one of the prerequisites means that the request for injunctive relief must be denied." [Cite omitted.]

"The Fifth Circuit has established no particular quantum of proof as to each of the four criteria. The district court should use a balancing-type approach in reviewing an application for injunctive relief. [Cite omitted.] The heavy burden of proof in justifying an injunction is wholly on the movant. [Cites omitted.] The non-moving party bears no burden to defeat the motion for injunctive relief. [Cite omitted.] In Treasure Salvors v. Unidentified Wrecked and Abandoned Sailing Vessel, 640 F.2d. 560 (5th Cir. 1981), the Fifth Circuit held that the four factors set forth in Canal Authority are inter-related, rather than independent, and compose a four-step analysis which serves as a mechanism to assist the court in determining whether an injunction is necessary to preserve the court's ability to render a meaningful decision on the merits."

"Irreparable harm in this instance would rest upon plaintiff's showing that their constitutional rights have been violated.

Violation of a constitutional right is irreparable harm, even for minimal periods of time. One who shows deprivation of a constitutional right need go no further in showing the requisite harm for injunctive relief." [Bold added.]

"It is axiomatic that the party seeking to invoke federal court jurisdiction bears the burden of establishing that such exists. [Cites omitted.] However, the determination of the appropriate quantum of the burden that the plaintiff must clear will rest upon such factors as the nature of the proceeding and the type of evidence the plaintiff is permitted to present. Id. Thus, the limits imposed by the trial judge upon pretrial proceedings will dictate the burden the plaintiff is required to meet. Id.

"For example, if the court limits the parties' submissions, with regard to the jurisdictional issue, to merely affidavits or affidavits plus discovery materials, "these very limitations dictate that a plaintiff must make only a prima facie' showing of jurisdictional fact through the submitted material in order to avoid a defendant's motion to dismiss." [Cite omitted.] This is equitable because any greater burden "would permit a defendant to obtain a dismissal simply by controverting the facts established by a plaintiff through his own affidavits and supporting materials."

"On the other hand, where, as in the instant case, the court exercises its discretion and takes evidence at a preliminary hearing in open court in order to resolve contested factual issues, the plaintiff must then be put to its full burden of proof. That is to say, "in [such] situation, ... plaintiff must establish the jurisdictional facts by a preponderance of the evidence, just as [it] would have to do at trial.'" [Brackets original.]

contention that their broad terms were intended to alter in any way the Cheatham principle of "pay first and litigate later."⁶⁰ For many years that principle has been reinforced by the rule that no suit can be maintained for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax.⁶¹ More recently, Congress took care to except from the operation of the Federal Declaratory Judgments Act any controversies "with respect to Federal taxes."⁶² To ameliorate the hardship produced by these requirements Congress created a special court where tax questions could be adjudicated in advance of any payment. But there is no indication of any intent to create the hybrid remedy for which petitioner contends.

It is suggested that a part-payment remedy is necessary for the benefit of a taxpayer too poor to pay the full amount of the tax. Such an individual is free to litigate in the Tax Court without any advance payment. Where the time to petition that court has expired, or where for some other reason a suit in the District Court seems more desirable, the requirement of full payment may in some instances work a hardship. But since any hardship would grow out of an opinion whose effect Congress in successive [357 U.S. 63, 76] statutory revisions has made no attempt to alter, if any amelioration is required it is now a matter for Congress, not this Court. [Flora v. United States, 357 U.S. 63, 78 S.Ct. 1079 (1958)]

Laing v. U.S. (1976)

At this point, Flora v. United States, 357 U.S. 63, 78 S.Ct. 1079, 2 L.Ed.2d. 1165 \(1958\), on rehearing, 362 U.S. 145, 80 S.Ct. 630, 4 L.Ed.2d. 623 \(1960\), deserves comment. In that case the Court held that a federal district court does not have jurisdiction of an action for refund of a part payment made by a taxpayer on an assessment. It ruled that the taxpayer must pay the full amount of the assessment before he may challenge its validity in the court action. Payment of the entire deficiency thus was made a prerequisite to the refund suit. The ruling, however, was tied directly to the jurisdiction of the Tax Court where litigation prior to payment of the tax was the usual order of the day. 362 U.S., at 158-163, 80 S.Ct., at 637-640. The holding thus kept clear and distinct the line between Tax Court jurisdiction and district court jurisdiction. The Court said specifically:

"A word should also be said about the argument that requiring taxpayers to pay the full assessments before bringing suits will subject some of them to great hardship. This contention seems to ignore entirely the right of the taxpayer to appeal the deficiency to the Tax Court without paying a cent." Id., at 175, 80 S.Ct., at 646.

This passage demonstrates that the full-payment rule applies only where a deficiency has been noticed, that is, *209 only where the taxpayer has access to the Tax Court for redetermination prior to payment. This is the thrust of the ruling in Flora, which was concerned with the possibility, otherwise, of splitting actions between, and overlapping jurisdiction of, the Tax Court and the district court. Id., at 163, 165-167, 176, 80 S.Ct., at 640, 641-642, 646. Where, as here, in these terminated period situations, there is no deficiency and no consequent right of access to the Tax Court, there is and can be no requirement of full payment in order to institute a refund suit. The taxpayer may sue for his refund even if he is unable to pay the full amount demanded upon the termination of his taxable period. Irving v. Gray, 479 F.2d, at 24-25, n. 6; Lewis v. Sandler, 498 F.2d. 395, 400 \(CA4 1974\).

I recognize that on occasion the refund procedure may cause some hardship for the terminated taxpayer whose entire assets may be seized and who may be required to wait as long as six months before filing his refund suit. Indeed, this hardship was one of the reasons for establishing the Board of Tax Appeals as a prepayment forum in the first place. See H.R.Rep. No. 179, 68th Cong., 1st Sess., 7 (1924); S.Rep. No. 398, 68th Cong., 1st Sess., 8 (1924).^{FN14} It is obvious, of course, that when one taxpayer dishonestly *210 evades his share of the tax burden, 498 that share is shifted to all those who comply with the law. This balance of "hardship" doubtless was in the minds of those who formulated the statutory structure. [Laing v. U.S., 423 U.S. 161, 96 S.Ct. 473 (U.S.Ky. 1976)]

Section 1402(a)(1) of the Judicial Code (28 U.S.C. §1402(a)(1)) provides that if an action is brought against the United States under section 1346(a) of the Judicial Code by an entity other than a corporation, it must be brought in the judicial district where the plaintiff resides. Accordingly, where an individual resides outside of the [federal] United States (e.g., a nonresident alien), he or she may not bring a refund suit in a district court. Malajalian v. United States, 504 F.2d. 842 (1st Cir. 1974). These cases may be brought only in the Court of Claims.

[Internal Revenue Manual, Section 35.18.10.1 (08-31-1982)]

[NOTE: The above provision is currently not found in the Internal Revenue Manual. Technically, the above provision is also incorrect, because the Court of Claims as of April 2, 1982, was reorganized to remove Article III jurisdiction from it and transfer it to the Court of International Trade. See Pub.L. 97-164, 96 Stat. 27.]

Malajalian v. U.S. (1974)

Taxpayer Malajalian, a resident of Beirut, Lebanon, entered the United States under a business visa on April 22, 1972, and remained as a non-resident alien until June 22, 1972, at which time he left this country. On June 20, as the taxpayer was preparing to depart for London from Logan Airport in Boston, a routine inspection of his baggage disclosed $147,595 in bills of small denomination. Notified of the discovery of this treasure-cache, the Internal Revenue Service terminated taxpayer's tax year under 6851 of the Internal Revenue Code and made two jeopardy assessments against him totaling $131,331. When this amount was levied upon and seized out of taxpayer's funds, still in the possession of the Customs Bureau, he filed a tax return declaring that he had no taxable income for his truncated 1972 tax year and requested a refund of the amount seized. After more than six months had passed without action on the claim by the Commissioner, taxpayer instituted suit for refund in the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts. The court granted the government's motion to dismiss on grounds of improper venue, and this appeal followed.

Section 1346 of the Judicial Code endows the district courts with jurisdiction, concurrent with the Court of Claims, over civil actions against the United States for the recovery of internal revenue taxes alleged to have been erroneously assessed and collected. Section 1402(a)(1) restricts venue in actions against the United States to the district where the plaintiff resides. Since taxpayer, an alien, concededly does not reside in Massachusetts, he cannot lay venue there if 1402(a)(1) is read literally.

Recently, in a patent infringement suit against an alien, Brunette Machine Works, Ltd. v. Kockum Industries, Inc., 406 U.S. 706, 710 & n. 8, 92 S.Ct. 1936, 1939, 32 L.Ed.2d 428 (1972), the Supreme Court reiterated its longstanding view that 'Congress does not in general intend to create venue gaps, which take away with one hand what Congress has given by way of jurisdictional grant with the other.' The Court reasoned that 'venue provisions are designed, not to keep suits out of the federal courts, but merely to allocate suits to the most appropriate or convenient federal forum.' However, it was easier for the Court in Brunette to avoid a venue gap than it is in the instant case. First, Brunette involved construction of conflicting statutory provisions rather than the necessity to read language into a single governing provision. Second, the traditional judicial view that suits against aliens are outside the scope of venue laws does not generally carry over to suits by aliens.

Taxpayer can derive little consolation from the holding of United States v. New York & O.S.S. Co., 216 F. 61 (2d Cir. 1914), an admiralty suit under the Tucker Act in which a non-resident alien was permitted to sue upon an express finding that respondent had waived its venue objection. See also Choremi v. United States, 28 F.2d. 913 (D.Mass.1928). The court declined to venture an opinion as to the result that would obtain if, as in the instant case, there had been no waiver.

Taxpayer next cites a series of cases decided under the Suits in Admiralty Act, 46 U.S.C. 741-752 (1970), which has its own venue provision permitting suits against the United States in the district where libelants reside or have their principal place of business or in which the vessel or cargo charged with liability may be found. 46 U.S.C. §742 (1970). Although there is at least one case to the contrary, The Elmac, 285 F. 665 (S.D.N.Y.1922), the courts construing this provision have generally allowed non-resident aliens to bring suit in any district on grounds that otherwise they would have no forum in which to sue. See McGhee v. United States, 154 F.2d. 101 (2d Cir. 1946); Metaxas v. United States, 68 F.Supp. 667 (S.D.Cal.1946); Middleton & Co. v. United States, 273 F. 199 (E.D.S.C.1921); Kulukundis v. United States, 132 F.Supp. 477, 132 Ct.Cl. 644 (1955). Apart from the fact that these decisions are predicated upon a special statutory provision, they are inapposite here because the taxpayer, unlike the claimants in the admiralty actions, may repair to the Court of Claims to press his suit, an alternative forum in which his alienage will pose no obstacle.

Legislative history of relevant statutory provisions in fact provides some evidence that Congress was aware of the venue gap existing as to tax refund suits by aliens against the United States in the district courts. Prior to 1966, an alien individual had two possible avenues open for a tax refund suit, without regard to the forum at issue here. An alien before 1966 could sue for a tax refund in the Court of Claims if the country of which he was a citizen permitted itself to be sued by citizens of the United States having claims against it. 28 U.S.C. 2502 (1970). But even without reciprocity an alien could sue the collecting director in the district court where the director resided, since suit against the collecting director is not, at least in form, a suit against the United States. See H.R.Rep. No. 1915, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. 6 (1966). In 1966 Congress abolished refund suits against collecting officers. Act of Nov. 2, 1966, Pub.L. 89-713, 3(a), 80 Stat. 1108, codified at 26 U.S.C. 7422(f) (1970). By thus restricting the taxpayer to his judicial district of residence (i.e., in suits against the United States), Congress sought to prevent forum-shopping by taxpayers looking to the district where the tax collector resided. H.R.Rep. 1915, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. 6 (1966). Congress apparently recognized the effect this abolition would have on aliens:

'... in order to preserve the right of aliens and foreign corporations to bring tax refund suits, the bill also modifies present law by permitting aliens and foreign corporations to bring such suits directly against the United States irrespective of whether the foreign country of citizenship or incorporation allows itself to be sued by U.S. citizens or corporations.' Id. Implicit in this statement is the awareness and conclusion that an alien not 'residing' in any judicial district could not sue the United States in any district court. In the view of the writers of the congressional reports, the 1966 legislation was enacted 'only because other adequate remedies either are already available, or are being made available by this bill, for the recovery of illegal collections.' Id. See also S.Rep. No. 1625, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. 6-7 (1966-2 Cum.Bull. 803, 807-08).

The taxpayer also adverts to several statutory provisions to support his position. Section 1402(a)(2) of the Judicial Code accords non-resident alien corporate taxpayers the privilege of bringing suit in the district where the tax return was filed. Nowhere in the meager legislative history of this provision do we find the slightest hint that Congress intended its benefits to extend to individuals. S.Rep. No. 2445, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., in U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News. 5263, 5265. In fact it was adopted in response to conflicting decisions in the federal courts concerning the residence of corporations. The legislators did recognize that the bill would cover the apparent problem of lack of venue for foreign corporations. H.R.Rep. No. 1715, 85th Cong., 2d Sess. 2 (1958); S.Rep. No. 2445, supra, citing Argonaut Navigation Co. v. United States, 142 F.Supp. 489 \(S.D.N.Y.1956\). Nor is venue proper in the district court for an alien, individual or corporate, in any other of the various types of suits brought under the Tucker Act. 7B Moore, Federal Practice 1402, at JC 598.1 (2d ed. 1974). Finally, the taxpayer cites language in the legislative history of an amendment to the Judicial Code eliminating the $10,000 ceiling on tax refund suits in the district courts, Act of July 30, 1954, Pub.L. No. 83-559, ch. 648, 2(a), 68 Stat. 589, codified in 28 U.S.C. 2402 (1970), to the effect that all taxpayers should have the benefit of a local remedy regardless of their financial status. H.R.Rep. No. 659, 83d Cong., 2d Sess., in U.S. Code Cong. & Admin.News 2716, 2717. Context indicates that the innocuous use of the word 'all' in a committee report was not intended to effect the major revision of the law which taxpayer seeks; neither the amendment nor the report makes any reference to alienage.

The district court's order dismissing the complaint is affirmed.

[NOTE; Consequently, non-resident non-persons protected by the Constitution and residing inside a constitutional state but outside the statutory "United States", being federal territory, and suing the U.S. government for a nonstatutory refund must file suit in the Court of International Trade instead of in a district court or the Court of Claims. Why? Because it is the ONLY Article III court dealing with international matters that can hear cases all over the country. The Court of Claims, like the U.S. Tax Court, is an Article I court (see 26 U.S.C. §7441 and 28 U.S.C. §171(a)) and therefore cannot hear cases involving NONtaxpayers or non-franchisees and if they do, they are violating the separation of powers.]

20 Federal Procedures, Tax Court Proceedings, §48:895

"Generally The Tax Court is a court of limited jurisdiction having such jurisdiction [USTC 1 9375] as is conferred under the Internal Revenue Code [26 U.S.C.S. §7442]. The statutory provisions conferring jurisdiction upon the Tax Court must be strictly construed. Although the Tax Court was upgraded from an executive agency to an Article I "legislative court" in 1969, that change did not extend the jurisdiction of the court to the full judicial power over all cases, in law and equity," that is vested in "constitutional courts" under Article III."

[Black's Law Dictionary, Revised Fourth Edition, 1968, p. 1045]

United States v. Roundtree (Apr. 20, 1969)

"Proceedings in tax court do not extinguish commissioner's summons power."

"If taxpayer can prove that summons by Internal Revenue Service constitutes harassment, court will not enforce summons."

"Taxpayer has burden of proving harassment by Internal Revenue Service."

"Proceeding to enforce summons issued by Commissioner is adversary proceeding."

"In absence of other statutory directions, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure apply to proceeding to enforce summons issued by Commissioner."

"Taxpayer against whom government was attempting to enforce summons and who claimed harassment was entitled to take deposition of internal revenue agent in charge of case in order to investigate Internal Revenue Service's purpose."

"If Internal Revenue Service's investigation is civil investigation, mere fact that evidence might be used against taxpayer in later prosecution would not support claim of self-incrimination."

"If taxpayer can show that Internal Revenue Service's investigation has become inquiry with dominant criminal overtones, he is entitled to raise his Fifth Amendment' objections. "

"Even if danger of self-incrimination is great, taxpayer cannot voice blanket refusal to produce his records or testify and must appear pursuant to commissioner's summons and make objection as to each question or record."

"Attorney-client relationship existing between taxpayer and his wife may be meritorious defense to some questions asked during Internal Revenue Service's investigation but objection must be raised to each question and record."

"When compliance with district court's order that was later vacated would have required surrender of individual's defenses, and when individual effectively appealed that order before failing to comply, failure to secure stay did not, in absence of willfulness, justify contempt conviction."

"The individual taxpayer on whom an audit has focussed is no doubt reluctant to see his records disclosed to the taxing authorities, but we are unable to say that the public has exhibited a strong animosity toward this method of securing proper compliance with the revenue laws. The significance of the public interest, governmental revenue, is beyond dispute. The fact is that Congress built the tax code upon the principle of self-assessment and voluntary compliance with the Code's rules and regulations. To determine deviations from its rules, the IRS must place unusual reliance upon the taxpayer's own records and statements."

In light of the fact that the IRS has filed deficiency notices for all of the years in question, the taxpayer faces a difficult task in proving that the sole purpose of the summons was criminal prosecution. Of course, if he proves harassment, we will not allow the judicial process to be abused by assisting in that harassment."

Morse v. United States (Mar. 27, 1974)

.. the tax court...lacked jurisdiction to order a refund or to determine who was entitled to the refund. The tax court's jurisdiction, which exists only to the extent specifically enumerated by statute, is confined to determining the amount of deficiency or overpayment for the particular tax year' for which the commissioner has sought a deficiency and the taxpayer has filed a petition for review. The tax court has no jurisdiction to order or to deny a refund, or to decide equitable questions. ...The taxpayer must resort to the district court or the court of claims for a resolution of such disputes or for an order granting a refund." [Cites omitted.]

"There is a big difference between the factual conclusion that Mrs. Morse did not pay the tax and the legal conclusion that Mrs. Morse was not the taxpayer. Under section 3797(a)(14) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, "[t]he term 'taxpayer' means any person subject to a tax imposed by this title." Under this definition it is not necessary that a person actually be liable for the tax; it is sufficient that he is potentially liable for it, even if it is ultimately determined that he in fact owes no tax. Accordingly, when returns were filed in Mrs. Morse's name declaring income to her for 1944 and 1945, and making her potentially liable for the tax due on that income, she became a taxpayer within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Code. When she was subsequently named in the commissioner's notice of deficiency, she became the only person who could petition the tax court for review of her tax liability." [Brackets original.]

Victor D. McMahan v. Commissioner (Apr. 18, 1985)

"An award of damages to the United States in two consolidated tax-protester cases was limited to $5,000. Although the arguments in both dockets were frivolous and made simply to delay the payment of taxes, a maximum of $5,000 in each docket was not awarded because the court was not dealing with radically different sets of petitioners. There was a distinction between the tax liability in the two dockets, but every step in the two dockets was performed in lockstep with each other."

"Victor's first argument is that wages are not income. This argument has long been dismissed as nonsense. Sec. 61; Rowlee v. Commissioner [Dec. 40,228], 80 T.C. 1111 (1983).

"He next has argued that he is neither a person subject to the Code nor an employee as defined in the Code. Among his claims is that only corporations and those engaged in 'privileged professions' are statutorily subject to the 'excise' tax. He also reads the definition of employee in section 3401(a) as excluding individuals from liability for the income tax. The language of that subsection does not support such a claim." "Section 7421(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 ('I.R.C.') states: 'No suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax shall be maintained in any court by any person, whether or not such person is the person against whom such tax was assessed', with certain exceptions, one of which is a civil action by a nontaxpayer who claims that his or her property has been the subject of a wrongful levy. Casper v. C.I.R. (Nov. 18, 1986)

"Money received by taxpayer from employers for labor was taxable income, rather than equal, nontaxable exchange of property. 26 U.S.C.A. §61(a)(1, 3)."

"Taxpayer's contention that amounts he received from his employers for labor performed constituted equal, nontaxable exchange of property rather than taxable income was not warranted by existing law or good-faith argument for extension, modification or reversal of existing law and, thus, $5,000 in damages were properly awarded to Commissioner of Internal Revenue for taxpayer's filing and maintaining factually groundless and legally frivolous action."

"Sanction for filing and maintaining factually groundless and legally frivolous Internal Revenue action is easily avoided by advancing claims or defenses which have factual basis and are warranted by existing law or good-faith argument for extension, modification or reversal of existing law; additionally, such claims should not be interposed for any improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in cost of litigation."

"Taxpayer's merely raising argument that value received for labor was not taxable income, but rather was nontaxable exchange of property, justified imposition of sanctions for filing frivolous appeal."

"By notice of deficiency dated October 24, 1983, the Commissioner notified appellant that he owned taxes for the years 1980 and 1981, as well as additions to tax for those same years due to his failure to file a return, I.R.C. §6651(a), his negligence in failing to pay any tax, I.R.C. §6653(a), and his underpayment of estimated tax payments, I.R.C. §6654. On January 26, 1984, appellant filed his petition in Tax Court, alleging that the Commissioner erroneously determined the deficiencies and additions to tax, and that the Commissioner failed to follow Internal Revenue Code procedures."

"The Tax Court also awarded damages to the Commissioner in the amount of $5,000 pursuant to I.R.C. §6673. This section allows an award of damages "[w]henver it appears to the Tax Court that proceedings before it have been instituted or maintained by the taxpayer primarily for delay or that the taxpayer's position in such proceedings is frivolous or groundless." Appellant has not advanced the weary tax protester arguments that income taxes are unconstitutional or that receipt of currency cannot be taxable because Federal Reserve notes are not money. He has been content with a closely-related frivolous argument: that value received for labor is an exchange of property which is not taxable. The fact that appellant's wages constitute taxable income is as true as, well ..., as true as taxes. See United States v. Lawson, 670 F.2d. at 925; Rowlee v. Commissioner, 80 T.C. at 1119-22.

"Appellant's position is not warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification or reversal of existing law. A review of the record discloses no effort on the part of appellant to distinguish existing case law, to bring about a reasoned extension or change in the law, or to point out actual errors in the Commissioner's determination of deficiency. Rather, our review simply uncovers appellant's total rejection of well-established precedent and a refusal to accept "the other certainty." We affirm the Tax Court's award of damages for filing and maintaining a factually groundless and legally frivolous action. See Coleman v. Commissioner, 791 F.2d. 68, 71 (7th Cir.1986). Such a sanction is easily avoided by advancing claims or defenses which have a factual basis and are warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification or reversal of existing law."

"We now choose to adopt a rule awarding a flat fee of $1,500 as a sanction for a frivolous appeal from a Tax Court decision. See Coleman v. Commissioner, 791 F.2d. at 73."

"On appeal, the Commissioner informs us that the average amount of direct costs associated with defending legally frivolous appeals exceeds $1,400. We now choose to adopt a rule awarding a flat fee of $1,500.00 as a sanction for a frivolous appeal from a Tax Court decision. See Coleman v. Commissioner, 791 F.2d. 73. ... The award will (1) provide an effective sanction for the bringing of a frivolous appeal, (2) serve as an effective deterrent to the bringing of future frivolous appeals, and (3) recompense the government for at least the direct costs of the appeal."

"Again, the sanction is easily avoided by litigants advancing claims on appeal which have a factual basis and are warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification or reversal of existing law. Additionally, such claims should not be interposed for any improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation. "An appeal that lacks merit is not always--or often--frivolous. However, we are not obliged to suffer in silence the filing of baseless, insupportable appeals presenting no colorable claims of error and designed only to delay, obstruct, or incapacitate the operations of the courts or any other governmental authority." Crain v. Commissioner, 737 F.2d. 1417, 1418 (5th Cir. 1984). We hope that the increased sanction adopted in this case will sound a "cautionary note to those who would persistently raise arguments against the income tax which have been put to rest for years." Id. (quoting Parker v. Commissioner, 724 F.2d. 469, 472 (5th Cir. 1984)."

Murray v. C.I.R. (May 13, 1994)

"Tax Court lacked jurisdiction over taxpayer's petition to redetermine deficiency where Internal Revenue Service did not send taxpayer a notice of deficiency before taxpayer petitioned for redetermination."

"Notice of intent to levy on account of disallowance of withholding credit claimed by taxpayer could not be deemed notice of deficiency for purpose of conferring jurisdiction upon Tax Court; notice did not meet even minimal requirements for notice of deficiency, and IRS was authorized by statute to proceed against taxpayer's property without providing him with notice of deficiency."

10.7 Court of International Trade

COMPOSITION OF THE COURT

The President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoints the nine judges who constitute the United States Court of International Trade, which is a national court established under Article III of the Constitution.

The judges, who are appointed for life, as are all judges of Article III courts, may be designated and assigned temporarily by the Chief Justice of the United States to perform judicial duties in a United States Court of Appeals or a United States District Court.

The chief judge of the Court of International Trade is a statutory member of the Judicial Conference of the United States, and convenes a judicial conference of the Court of International Trade periodically for the purposes of considering the business and improving the administration of justice in the court.

The Judicial Conference of the United States serves as the principal policy making body concerned with the administration of the United States Courts.

The chambers of the judges, the courtrooms, and the offices of court are located at One Federal Plaza in New York City at the Courthouse of the United States Court of International Trade.

JURISDICTION OF THE COURT

The geographical jurisdiction of the United States Court of International Trade extends throughout the United States. The court can and does hear and decide cases which arise anywhere in the nation. The court also is authorized to hold hearings in foreign countries.

The different types of cases the court is authorized to decide--that is, its subject matter jurisdiction--are limited and defined by the Constitution and specific laws enacted by the Congress.

The subject matter jurisdiction of the court was greatly expanded by the Customs Courts Act of 1980. Under this law, in addition to certain specified types of subject matter jurisdiction, the court has a residual grant of exclusive jurisdictional authority to decide any civil action against the United States, its officers, or its agencies arising out of any law pertaining to international trade.

This broad grant of subject matter jurisdiction is complemented by another provision in the Customs Courts Act of 1980 which makes it clear that the United States Court of International Trade has the complete powers in law and equity of, or as conferred by statute upon, other Article III courts of the United States. Under this provision, the court may grant any relief appropriate to the particular case before it, including, but not limited to, money judgments, writs of mandamus, and preliminary or permanent injunctions.

The Congressional intent for these broad grants of authority was explained by the Honorable Peter W. Rodino, Jr., then Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, and a sponsor of the Customs Courts Act of 1980:

"The essential purpose of this legislation is best summarized by the following quote from the committee report:

"(P)ersons adversely affected or aggrieved by agency actions arising out of import transactions are entitled to the same access to judicial review and judicial remedies as Congress had made available for persons aggrieved by actions of other agencies."

In addition to these lawsuits against the United States, the court also has exclusive subject matter jurisdiction of certain civil actions brought by the United States under the laws governing import transactions, as well as counterclaims, cross-claims, and third-party actions relating to actions pending in the court.

10.8 U.S. Court of Federal Claims

28 U.S.C.S. §1491

"(a)(1) The United States Court of Federal Claims shall have jurisdiction to render judgment upon any claim against the United States founded either upon the Constitution [USCS, Constitution], or any Act of Congress or any regulation of an executive department, or upon any express or implied contract with the United States, or for liquidated or unliquidated damages in cases not sounding in tort. For the purpose of this paragraph, an express or implied contract with the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Navy Exchanges, Marine Corps Exchanges, Coast Guard Exchanges, or Exchange Councils of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration shall be considered an express or implied contract with the United States.

"(2) To provide an entire remedy and to complete the relief afforded by the judgment, the court may, as an incident of and collateral to any such judgment, issue orders directing restoration to office or position, placement in appropriate duty or retirement status, and correction of applicable records, and such orders may be issued to any appropriate official of the United States. In any case within its jurisdiction, the court shall have the power to remand appropriate matters to any administrative or executive body or official with such direction as it may deem proper and just."

District of Columbia v. Barnes (Feb. 27, 1905)

"This court does not sit to review findings of fact made in the court of claims. They are regarded as conclusive here, and our jurisdiction is limited to a determination of such questions of law as are properly brought to our attention upon the record."

"It is true that the purpose of the various acts conferring jurisdiction upon the court of claims has been held to be to permit the adjudication of money demands against the United States, and it may be that under this act, as under others, there was no intention to confer equity jurisdiction beyond that which is required to enable a court to determine whether money relief should be granted. The intent of the act was to enable parties to submit the justice of their claims against the United States to adjudication in a competent court. For that purpose the act conferred in terms, equitable as well as legal jurisdiction."

"The court of claims is not bound by special rules of pleading. The main purpose is to arrive at and adjudicate the justice of alleged claims against the United States."

was a consideration for release of plaintiff from any contract obligation to operate the ship only under United States registry,...."

"Where Maritime Administration, acting under provision of Shipping Act enabling it to prescribe conditions under which vessels acquired from Administration could be sold to aliens, conditioned its approval for sale of such a vessel by plaintiff to a Finnish corporation upon payment by plaintiff to the Administration of $7,500, and such exaction was not justified, plaintiff was not estopped from seeking recovery of the $7,500 by reason of having received permission to sell the vessel upon making the payment."

"The Government asserts that this court does not have jurisdiction to entertain the suit. In the discussion of the question of jurisdiction, we assume that there was no legal authority in the Maritime Administration to demand or receive the $7,500. The plaintiff says that his claim is "founded upon any Act of Congress", and that we therefore have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §1491(2). The Government says that, assuming the illegality of the exaction, the claim is one sounding in tort, as to which 28 U.S.C. §1491(5), denies our jurisdiction." [Bold added.]

"The plaintiff asserts that this statutory provision does not authorize a money charge to be imposed as a condition upon the grant of permission to sell a ship to an alien purchaser."

"In Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L.Ed. 257, Chief Justice Marshall, in construing the Judicial Article of the Constitution and the 25th Section of the Judiciary Act said:

""A case in law or equity consists of the right of the one party, as well as the other, and may truly be said to arise under the constitution or a law of the United States whenever its correct decision depends on the construction of either.""

"In Dooley v. United States, 182 U.S. 222, 21 S.Ct. 762, 764, 45 L.Ed. 1074, Mr. Justice Brown said, for the court:

In the cases under consideration the argument is made that the money was tortiously exacted; that the alternative of payment to the collector was a seizure and sale of the merchandise for the nonpayment of duties; and that it mattered not that at common law an action for money had and received would have lain against the collector to recover them back. But whether the exactions of these duties were tortious or not, whether it was within the power of the importer to waive the tort and bring suit in the court of claims for money had and received, as upon an implied contract of the United States to refund the money in case it was illegally exacted, we think the case is one within the first class of cases specified in the Tucker act, of claims founded upon a law of Congress, namely, a revenue law, in respect to which class of cases the jurisdiction of the court of claims, under the Tucker act, has been repeatedly sustained."" [Bold added.]

"In Carriso, Inc. v. United States, 9 Cir., 106 F.2d 707, 712, the plaintiff sued to recover surveyors' fees which the Collector of Customs had collected from it under the supposed authority of a statute which had, in fact, been repealed. The Court of Appeals, in reversing the District Court's dismissal of the complaint, said:

""Appellee contends that this is a case sounding in tort, within the meaning of §24(20) of the Judicial Code, 28 U.S.C.A. §41(20), and that, therefore, the District Court had no jurisdiction. This contention, which the District Court upheld, must be rejected. [* * *] Appellant's claim is that the fees were exacted, not tortiously, but illegally, in that they were exacted after §4186 had been repealed.

"Thus, in effect, appellant claims that the Collector misconstrued and misapplied §4186, that is to say, construed it as remaining in effect after it had been repealed, and so applied it to appellant; and that, therefore, the fees should be refunded. Such a claim does not sound in tort. * * * "" [Bold added.]

"In Compagnie General Transatlantique v. United States, D.C. 21 F.2d. 465, 466, Judge Augustus Hand said, for the court:

""* * *. To limit the recovery in cases 'founded' upon a law of Congress to cases where the law provides in terms for a recovery would make that provision of the Tucker Act almost entirely unavailable, because it would allow recovery only in cases where laws other than the Tucker Act already created a right of recovery. 'Founded' must therefore mean reasonably involving the application of a law of Congress. * * *

"In Ross Packing Co. v. United States, 42 F.Supp 932, 936, Judge Schwellenbach of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington, Southern Division, said:

"There can be no doubt as to the similarity between the Carriso case and this one. In each the Government received money to which it was not entitled. There, the official misconstrued the law by construing it to be in effect after it had been repealed. Here, the Board misconstrued the law by construing that it had power to inflict a penalty on the plaintiff. In neither case was there any compulsion brought upon the plaintiff to make payment except the necessity of complying with an order of a legally constituted government official or agency. In each case the act of the government's agents was illegal. Clearly, if the acts of the Collector in the Carriso case were not tortious, then the action of the Board here was not tortious. There can be no essential difference between an act which is unauthorized because the power to do it has been repealed and one which is unauthorized because such power was not given by the law in the first place.""

"Our best estimate of the present law is that a claim to recover an illegal exaction made by officials of the Government, which exaction is based upon a power supposedly conferred by a statute, is a claim "founded upon any Act of Congress".

"The Government urges that if the collection of the money in question from the plaintiff was wrongful, it was a tort, and therefore outside our jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §1491(5). It has not explained the nature of the tort, and we have difficulty in fitting it into the categories of torts with which we are familiar. It might rather be a claim for damages," "not sounding in tort" of which Section 1491(5) gives us jurisdiction. But we do not so decide. We suppose that the exceptions recited in Section 2680(a) of 28 U.S.C., in the Federal Tort Claims Act, exempts the Government from liability on this claim as a tort claim. If so, the plaintiff's right, if he has one, must be enforced in the instant suit."

"We find it hard to imagine a case where the Government can take a citizen's money, by refusing him something to which he is entitled, and then keep the money on the ground of estoppel. This defense is beneath the dignity of the Government." [Bold added.]

Catalina Properties v. United States (Oct. 8, 1958)

"Landlord's complaint against United States which had made a jeopardy assessment against landlord as transferee of person against whom assessments in that amount had been made for income taxes, interest and penalties, to recover amount of subtenant's lease payments which Director of Internal Revenue had failed to collect and which had become uncollectible, failed to state a cause of action over which Court of Claims had jurisdiction."

"If landlord was neither a taxpayer nor a transferee of a taxpayer against whom assessments for income taxes, penalties and interest had been made, action of Director of Internal Revenue in levying jeopardy assessment against landlord and distraining rentals was unauthorized but if no money was collected by government, no implied contract could exist requiring government to return amount of rentals not collected by landlord."

"Where Director of Internal Revenue levied jeopardy assessment against landlord and distrained rentals due him, even if action was unauthorized, where no money was actually collected from rentals by government it could not be said that there was a taking of private property for public use requiring government to pay just compensation."

"The Government argues, in its cross-motion for full summary judgment, that the whole case must be dismissed because the remaining claims (not dealt with in Part II, supra) sound in tort (fraud, misrepresentation, and constructive fraud) and are therefore beyond this court's jurisdiction. [Cites omitted.] Plaintiff responds that the alleged fraud and misrepresentations are so closely bound up with the lease and the contractual relationship between RLA and L'Enfant Properties that they lie in contract rather than tort. [Cites omitted.] For this principle to apply, there must be a "tortious" breach of contract rather than a tort independent of the contract. [Cite omitted.] Plaintiff has been unable to show a connection between the alleged wrongful misrepresentations and fraud and any contractual obligations owed to it by the RLA. "

United States v. Mitchell (June 27, 1983)

"By giving court of claims jurisdiction over specified types of claims against United States, Tucker Act constitutes waiver of sovereign immunity with respect to those claims."

"Tucker Act does not create any substantive right enforceable against United States for money damages."

"Not every claim invoking Constitution, federal statute, or regulation is cognizable under Tucker Act; claim must be one for money damages against United States and claimant must demonstrate that source of substantive law he relies upon can fairly be interpreted as mandating compensation by federal government for damages sustained."

"Because Tucker Act supplies waiver of immunity for claims under statutes or regulations that create substantive rights to money damages, separate statutes and regulations need not provide second waiver of sovereign immunity nor need they be construed in manner appropriate to waivers of sovereign immunity."

"Trustee is accountable in damages for breaches of trust."

"Existence of trust relationship between United States and Indian or Indian tribe include as fundamental incident right of injured beneficiary to sue trustee for damages resulting from breach of trust."

"It is axiomatic that the United States may not be sued without its consent and that the existence of consent is a prerequisite for jurisdiction. The terminology employed in some of our prior decisions has unfortunately generated some confusion as to whether the Tucker Act constitutes a waiver of sovereign immunity. The time has come to resolve this confusion. For the reasons set forth below, we conclude that by giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction over specified types of claims against the United States, the Tucker Act constitutes a waiver of sovereign immunity with respect to those claims."

"Before 1855 no general statute gave the consent of the United States to suit on claims for money damages; the only recourse available to private claimants was to petition Congress for relief. In order to relieve the pressure caused by the volume of private bills and to avoid the delays and inequities of the private bill procedure, Congress created the Court of Claims. Act of Feb. 24, 1855, 10 Stat. 612. The 1855 Act empowered that court to hear claims and report its findings to Congress and to submit a draft of a private bill in each case which received a favorable decision. §7, 10 Stat. 613. The limited powers initially conferred upon the court failed to relieve Congress from "the laborious necessity of examining the merits of private bills." Glidden Co. v. Zdanok, 370 U.S. 530, 553, 82 S.Ct. 1459, 1474, 8 L.Ed.2d. 671 (1962) (opinion of Harlan, J.). Thus, in his State of the Union Message of 1861, President Lincoln recommended that the court be authorized to render final judgments. He declared that it is "as much the duty of Government to render prompt justice against itself, in favor of citizens, as it is to administer the same between private individuals." Cong. Globe, 37th Cong., 2d Sess., App. 2 (1861). Congress adopted President Lincoln's recommendation and made the court's judgments final. Act of Mar. 3, 1863, 12 Stat. 765.

"In 1886 Representative John Randolph Tucker introduced a bill to revise in several respects the jurisdiction and procedures of the Court of Claims and to replace most provisions of the 1855 and 1863 Acts. H.R. 6974, 49th Cong., 1st Sess. (1886). The House Judiciary Committee reported that the bill was a "comprehensive measure by which claims against the United States may be heard and determined." H.R.Rep. No. 1077, 49th Cong., 1st Sess., 1 (1886). The measure was designed to "give the people of the United States what every civilized nation of the world has already done--the right to go into the courts to seek redress against the Government for their grievances." 18 Cong.Rec. 2680 (1887) (remarks of Rep. Bayne). See id., at 622 (remarks of Rep. Tucker); id., at 2679 (colloquy between Reps. Tucker and Townshend); id., at 2680 (remarks of Rep. Holman). The eventual enactment thus "provide[d] for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States." Act of Mar. 3, 1887, 24 Stat. 505."

"In United States v. Testan, 424 U.S. 392, 398, 400, 96 S.Ct. 948, 954, 47 L.Ed.2d. 114 (1976), and in United States v. Mitchell, 445 U.S., at 538, 100 S.Ct., at 1351, this Court employed language suggesting that the Tucker Act does not effect a waiver of sovereign immunity. Such language was not necessary to the decision in either case. See infra, at 2968. Without in any way questioning the result in either case, we conclude that this isolated language should be disregarded. If a claim falls within the terms of the Tucker Act, the United States has presumptively consented to suit."

"It nonetheless remains true that the Tucker Act "does not create any substantive right enforceable against the United States for money damages." United States v. Mitchell, supra, at 538, 100 S.Ct., at 1351, quoting United States v. Testan, supra, 424 U.S., at 398, 96 S.Ct., at 953. A substantive right must be found in some other source of law, such as "the Constitution, or any Act of Congress, or any regulation of an executive department."

"Thus, for claims against the United States "founded either upon the Constitution, or any Act of Congress, or any regulation of an executive department," 28 U.S.C. §1491, a court must inquire whether the source of substantive law can fairly be interpreted as mandating compensation by the Federal Government for the damages sustained. In undertaking this inquiry, a court need not find a separate waiver of sovereign immunity in the substantive provision, just as a court need not find consent to suit in "any express or implied contract with the United States." Ibid. The Tucker Act itself provides the necessary consent."

"In this case, however, there is simply no question that the Tucker Act provides the United States' consent to suit for claims founded upon statutes or regulations that create substantive rights to money damages. If a claim falls within this category, the existence of a waiver of sovereign immunity is clear. The question in this case is thus analytically distinct: whether the statutes or regulations at issue can be interpreted as requiring compensation. Because the Tucker Act supplies a waiver of immunity for claims of this nature, the separate statutes and regulations need not provide a second waiver of sovereign immunity, nor need they be construed in the manner appropriate to waivers of sovereign immunity." "Similarity of jurisdictional facts with facts on merit of claim against United States which alleged breach of contract and which claimed jurisdiction based on express or implied contract with United States would justify Claims Court's decision to delay determination of jurisdiction to give law firm opportunity to develop facts, even if existence in fact of contract, as opposed to claim founded upon contract, were determinative of jurisdiction."

"Federal courts are not courts of general jurisdiction;" they have only the power that is authorized by Article of the

For that reason, every federal appellate court has a special obligation to "satisfy itself not only of its own jurisdiction, but also that of the lower courts in a cause under review," even though the parties are prepared to concede it."

"(Moreover, even if the parties remain silent, it is well settled that a federal court, whether trial or appellate, is obliged to notice on its own motion the want of its own jurisdiction, or the lower court's lack of subject matter jurisdiction when a case is on appeal.)" Bowen v. Johnston (Jan. 30, 1939)

"First.--Jurisdiction is conferred upon the District Courts "of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States." Judicial Code, §24, 28 U.S. C. A. §41(2).

"Crimes are thus cognizable--

""When committed within or on any lands reserved or acquired for the exclusive use of the United States, and under the exclusive jurisdiction thereof, or any place purchased or otherwise acquired by the United States by consent of the legislature of the State....

"The last clause covers cases where exclusive jurisdiction is acquired by the United States pursuant to Article 1, §8, 1 17 of the Constitution."

"hi applying this principle, we have said that the court "has jurisdiction to render a particular judgment only when the offense charged is within the class of offenses placed by the law under its jurisdiction." Re Bonner, 151 U.S. 242, 38 L.Ed. 149, 14 S.Ct. 323, supra. As it is the duty of the District Court, when the prosecution is brought before it, to examine the charge and ascertain whether the offense is of that class, the District Court is thus empowered to pass upon its own jurisdiction. This, under the applicable statute, may require consideration of the place where the offense is alleged to have been committed. The answer to that question may require the examination and determination of questions of fact and law and the determination may be the appropriate subject of appellate review. Thus if, construing a statute, a question of law is determined against the Government on demurrer to the indictment, the case may fall within the provisions of the Criminal Appeals Act. United States v. Sutton, 215 U.S. 291, 54 L.Ed. 200, 30 S.Ct. 116; United States v. Soldana, 246 U.S. 530, 62 L.Ed. 870, 38 S.Ct. 357. Or, if decided against the accused, the question may be reviewed by the Circuit Court of Appeals on appeal from the judgment of conviction."

"And, on removal proceedings, we have observed that in a case where the question "whether the locus of the alleged crime was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States demands consideration of many facts and seriously controverted questions of law," these matters "must be determined by the court where the indictment was found" and that "the regular course may not be anticipated by alleging want of jurisdiction and demanding a ruling thereon in a habeas corpus proceeding." Rodman v. Pothier, 264 U.S. 399, 402, 68 L.Ed. 759, 761, 44 S.Ct. 360. See also Henry v. Henkel, 235 U.S. 219, 229, 59 L.Ed. 203, 206, 35 S.Ct. 54."

"Despite the action of the trial court, the absence of jurisdiction may appear on the face of the record (see Re Snow, 120 U.S. 274, 30 L.Ed. 658, 7 S.Ct. 556, supra; Re Nielsen, supra (131 U.S. p. 183, 33 L.Ed. 120, 9 S.Ct. 672)), and the remedy of habeas corpus may be needed to release the prisoner from a punishment imposed by a court manifestly without jurisdiction to pass judgment."

Rothensies v. Ullman (Mar. 15, 1940)

"A joint bank account held by husband and wife as tenants by entireties, against which warrant of distraint had been issued for husband's income taxes, was "property taken or detained by any officer" and in the "custody of the law" within terms of statute giving federal courts jurisdiction thereof, and hence federal court had jurisdiction to quash the warrant of distraint."

"The Federal District Court had jurisdiction to quash warrant of distraint for husband's income taxes issued against joint bank account held by husband and wife as tenants by entireties, notwithstanding statute prohibiting suits to restrain assessment or collection of tax, where court was not called upon to determine validity of the assessment but only to determine that the account was not subject to seizure for obligation due by husband alone."

"The statute prohibiting suit to restrain assessment or collection of tax was not intended to deprive courts of jurisdiction to restrain revenue officers from illegally collecting taxes out of property which does not belong to the taxpayer."

"Where collector of internal revenue did not within 10 days apply for or obtain supersedeas to suspend operation of order quashing warrant of distraint for husband's income taxes, issued against joint bank account of husband and wife, and husband and wife withdrew funds from the account more than 10 days after entry of such order and long before appeal was taken, there was no subject matter upon which judgment of reviewing court could operate, and appeal from such order must be dismissed."

Holland v. United States (Dec. 6, 1954)

"Before proceeding with a discussion of these cases, we believe it important to outline the general problems implicit in this type of litigation. In this consideration we assume, as we must in view of its widespread use, that the Government deems the net worth method useful in the enforcement of the criminal sanctions of our income tax laws. Nevertheless, careful study indicates that it is so fraught with danger for the innocent that the courts must closely scrutinize its use.

"One basic assumption in establishing guilt by this method is that most assets derive from a taxable source, and that when this is not true the taxpayer is in a position to explain the discrepancy. The application of such an assumption raises serious legal problems in the administration of the criminal law. Unlike civil actions for the recovery of deficiencies, where the determinations of the Commissioner have prima facie validity, the prosecution must always prove the criminal charge beyond a reasonable doubt."

"Trial courts should approach such cases in the full realization that the taxpayer may be ensnared in a system which, though difficult for the prosecution to utilize, is equally hard for the defendant to refute. Charges should be especially clear, including, in addition to the formal instructions, a summary of the nature of the net worth method, the assumptions on which it rests, and the inferences available both for and against the accused. Appellate courts should review the cases, bearing constantly in mind the difficulties that arise when circumstantial evidence as to guilt is the chief weapon of a method that is itself only an approximation."

"The Government must still prove every element of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt though not to a mathematical certainty. The settled standards of the criminal law are applicable to net worth cases just as to prosecutions for other crimes. Once the Government has established its case, the defendant remains quiet at his peril. Cf. Yee Hem v. United States, 268 U.S. 178, 185, 69 L.Ed. 904, 906, 45 S.Ct. 470."

The language of the Fourth Amendment, that '... no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing ... the persons or things to be seized,' of course applies to arrest as well as search warrants. See Ex parte Burford, (US) 3 Cranch 448, 2 L.Ed. 495; McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135, 154-157, 71 L.Ed. 580, 584-586, 47 S.Ct. 319, 50 A.L.R. 1. "We treat such suits as based upon a breach of contract implied in fact under which the government agrees to refund to nontaxpayer's property of those persons upon which the government improperly has levied. The doctrine apparently was first announced in Kirkendall v. United States, 90 Ct.Cl. 606, 31 F.Supp. 766 (1940). Its rationale was as follows:

"When the government has illegally received money which is the property of an innocent citizen and when this money has gone into the Treasury of the United States, there arises an implied contract on the part of the Government to make restitution to the rightful owner under the Tucker Act and this court has jurisdiction to entertain this suit. 90 Ct.Cl. at 613, 31 F.Supp. at 769."

"An important reason for the Kirkendall decision, although not explicitly set forth in the opinion, would appear to be that unless there were such a contract implied in fact, there might be no method by which the nontaxpayer effectively could recover the property the government improperly had taken from him through a levy. With the enactment of section 110(a), however, that situation no longer exists."

"District court had subject matter jurisdiction over charges of willful failure to file income tax returns and filing false withholding statements."

"Wages are 'income.'" [The headnote states this, but it is not stated in the published opinion of the court; however, it is stated in a footnote provided below.]

"In prosecution for willful failure to file income tax returns and filing false withholding statements, district court properly instructed jury that willful means 'a voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal obligation.'"

"A suit naming the United States as a party may be brought in district court 'to quiet title to ... property on which the United States has or claims a mortgage or other lien.'" 28 U.S.C. §2410(a). If a taxpayer seeks to quiet title to property upon which the United States has a lien, he may bring a quiet title action under §2410(a), without paying the tax. Section 2410(a) waives the United States' sovereign immunity for actual quiet title actions. See United States v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 364 U.S. 301, 81 S.Ct. 1, 5 L.Ed.2d. 1 (1960). Waivers of sovereign immunity under §2410(a) must be read narrowly. See, e.g., Estate of Johnson, 836 F.2d. 940, 943-44 (5th Cir.1988).

"Typically, a taxpayer with a valid quiet title action will admit any assessed taxes are due." [Bold added.]

"The Taxpayers in this case do not challenge the procedures used to enforce the tax lien. Rather, they attacked the procedures of the assessment and notice and demand and, ultimately, the adjudication of whether they owe taxes. Section 2410 does not extend to challenges for procedural irregularities in assessment or collection of taxes. Thus, the taxpayers were required to pay their taxes first before filing an action in district court."

Yeary v. United States (Jan. 8, 1991)

"Federal Tort Claims Act constitutes limited waiver of sovereign immunity and authorizes suit against United States, making federal government liable in same manner and to same extent as private party would be for certain torts of federal employees acting within scope of their employment. 28 U.S.C.A. §§1346, 2671-2680."

"United States district courts have exclusive jurisdiction of civil actions on claims against United States for money damages caused by negligent or wrongful acts of any employee of government while acting within scope of employment. 28 U.S.C.A. §1346(b)."

"In civil actions on claims against United States for any damages caused by negligent or wrongful act of any employee of government while acting in scope of employment, courts must follow law of state in which allegedly negligent or wrongful act occurred."

United States v. Powell (Feb. 6, 1992)

"Although a district court may exclude evidence of what the law is or should be, see United States v. Poschwatta, 829 F.2d. 1477, 1483 (9th Cir.1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1064, 108 S.Ct. 1024, 98 L.Ed.2d. 989 (1988), it ordinarily cannot exclude evidence relevant to the jury's determination of what a defendant thought the law was in §7203 cases because willfulness is an element of the offense. In §7203 prosecutions, statutes or case law upon which the defendant claims to have actually relied are admissible to disprove that element if the defendant lays a proper foundation which demonstrates such reliance. See United States v. Harris, 942 F.2d. 1125, 1132 (7th Cir.1991); United States v. Willie, 941 F.2d. 1384, 1391-99 (10th Cir.1991). Legal materials upon which the defendant does not claim to have relied, however, can be excluded as irrelevant and unnecessarily confusing because only the defendant's subjective belief is at issue: the court remains the jury's sole source of the law."

Rose Acre Farms, Inc. v. Madigan (Feb. 10, 1992)

"Prevailing party is entitled to advance in support of its judgment all arguments it presented in district court, and it need not and should not file cross appeal just because district judge rejected one of its arguments on way to deciding in its favor."

"It is within subject matter jurisdiction of district court to enjoin enforcement of regulations, thereby eliminating need for damages under regulations, even if it is not empowered to award damages."

[Rose Acre Farms, Inc. v. Madigan, 956 F.2d. 670 (7th Cir. 1992)]

United States v. Moore (Apr. 6, 1992)

"When reviewing an appeal based on the insufficiency of the evidence, the evidence and all reasonable inferences that may be drawn must be viewed in the light most favorable to the verdict. U.S. v. Lechuga, 888 F.2d. 1472, 1476 (5th Cir.1989). The evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict if a reasonable trier of fact could have found that the government proved all of the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. Id. The government must prove that the defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, not merely that he could have been guilty. See U.S. v. Littrell, 574 F.2d. 828, 832 (5th Cir.1978); U.S. v. Sacerio, 952 F.2d. 860 (5th Cir.1992)."

O'Brien v. Harrington (Apr. 12, 1956)

"Until order or judgment is entered in civil docket, case is still in District Court, and there is no finality, and there can be no appeal. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc. rules 58, 79(a), 28 U.S.C.A."

[O'Brien v. Harrington, 233 F.2d. 17 (1956)]

Goodwin v. United States (June 11, 1991)

"Appeal of district court's grant of summary judgment to Government in taxpayer's action to quiet title to property seized and sold for delinquent payroll taxes was not moot on ground that taxpayer failed to obtain order enjoining sale pending appeal and that the Government had sold the property to a third party, where taxpayer filed notice of lis pendens prior to recording of quitclaim deed to the third party."

"District court's grant of summary judgment and statutory interpretations are reviewed de novo."

"There must be strict compliance with notice requirements of statute governing seizure and sale of property for delinquent taxes, and thus taxpayer does not have burden of demonstrating prejudice from absence of strict compliance."

"Court of Appeals would not apply literal reading of statute that requires a result demonstrably in conflict with drafter's intentions."

"As between taxpayer and the Government, seizure and sale of taxpayer's property for delinquent payroll taxes was invalid where the Government did not provide notice by personal service or leaving written notice at usual place of abode, as required by statute, even though notice was served by certified mail and taxpayer had actual notice.

"Taxpayer who obtained determination that Government's seizure and sale of his property for delinquent payroll taxes were invalid for failure to strictly comply with notice requirement was not entitled to fees and costs on ground that the Government's position was not substantially justified, in case in which taxpayer was served by certified mail and had actual notice."

"Although we would not apply a literal reading of a statute that required a result demonstrably in conflict with the drafter's intentions, no such apparent conflict exists here. Congress has set forth precise requirements for notice of seizure and sale of property in tax deficiency situations. "[W]hen the government seeks to enforce the laws, it must follow the steps which Congress has specified." Reese, 506 F.2d. at 971. The government did not give Goodwin the notice required by §6335. Accordingly, as between Goodwin and the government, the seizure and sale of the Gladstone property was invalid."

11.1 Virtue, Morality, Character and the Supreme Law. . .

"A strict observance of the written laws is doubtless one of the high duties of a good citizen, but it is not the highest. The laws of necessity, of self-preservation, of saving our country when in danger, are of a higher obligation . . . To lose our country by a scrupulous adherence to written law would be to lose the law itself, with life, liberty, property and all those who are enjoying them with us; thus absurdly sacrificing the ends to the means."

[Thomas Jefferson to John B. Colvin, September 20, A. D. 1810]

"A thing moderately good is not so good as it ought to be. Moderation in temper is always a virtue, but moderation in principle is always a vice."

[Thomas Paine, The Rights of Man (1791)]

"Most people prefer to believe that their leaders are just and fair, even in the face of evidence to the contrary, because once a citizen acknowledges that the government under which he lives is lying and corrupt, the citizen has to choose what he or she will do about it. To take action in the face of corrupt government entails risks of harm to life and loved ones. To choose to do nothing is to surrender one's self-image of standing for principles. Most people do not have the courage to face that choice. Hence, most propaganda is not designed to fool the critical thinker but only to give moral cowards an excuse not to think at all."

[Michael Rivero (1952 -) Composer, production engineer]

"It is not the critic who counts, not the man who points out how the strong man stumbled or where the doer of deeds could have done them better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena; whose face is marred by dust and sweat and blood; who strives valiantly; who errs and comes short again and again; who knows the great enthusiasms, the great devotions, and spends himself in a worthy cause; who, at best, knows the triumph of high achievement, and who, at the worst, if he fails, at least fails while daring greatly, so that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who know neither victory nor defeat."

[Theodore Roosevelt, April 23, 1917]

"By the blessing of God, may our country become a vast and splendid monument, not of oppression and terror, but of wisdom, of peace, and of liberty upon which the world may gaze with admiration forever."

[First Bunker Hill Oration, Daniel Webster [inscribed on a bronze plaque on the quarterdeck of the USS Bunker Hill, CG-52]

"[T]he [federal] government . . . can never be in danger of degenerating into a monarchy, and oligarchy, an aristocracy, or any other despotic or oppressive form so long as there shall remain any virtue in the body of the people. "

[George Washington, The Writings of George Washington, John C. Fitzpatrick, editor (Washington: U. S. Government Printing Office, 1939), Vol. XXIX, p. 410. In a letter to Marquis De Lafayette, February 7, 1788]

"It is certainly true that a popular government cannot flourish without virtue in the people."

[Richard Henry Lee, The Letters of Richard Henry Lee, James Curtis Ballagh, editor (New York: The MacMillan Company, 1914), Vol. II, p. 411. In a letter to Colonel Mortin Pickett on March 5, 1786]

"Without morals a republic cannot subsist any length of time; they therefore who are decrying the Christian religion, whose morality is so sublime & pure, [and] which denounces against the wicked eternal misery, and [which] insured to the good eternal happiness, are undermining the solid foundation of morals, the best security for the duration of free governments."

[Bernard C. Steiner, The Life and Correspondence of James McHenry (Cleveland: The Burrows Brothers, 1907), p. 475. In a letter from Charles Carroll to James McHenry of November 4, 1800.]

"Give up money, give up fame, give up science, give the earth itself and all it contains rather than do an immoral act. And never suppose that in any possible situation, or under any circumstances, it is best for you to do a dishonorable thing, however slightly so it may appear to you. Whenever you are to do a thing, though it can never be known but to yourself, ask yourself how you would act were all the world looking at you, and act accordingly. Encourage all your virtuous dispositions, and exercise them whenever an opportunity arises, being assured that they will gain strength by exercise, as a limb of the body does, and that exercise will make them habitual. From the practice of the purest virtue, you may be assured you will derive the most sublime comforts in every moment of life, and in the moment of death."

[Thomas Jefferson, The Writings of Thomas Jefferson, Albert Bergh, editor (Washington, D.C.: Thomas Jefferson Memorial Assoc., 1903), Vol. 5, pp. 82-83, in a letter to his nephew Peter Carr on August 19, 1785]

"As religion towards God is a branch of universal righteousness (he is not an honest man that is not devout), so righteousness towards men is a branch of true religion, for he is not a godly man that is not honest, nor can he expect that his devotion should be accepted; for, 1. Nothing is more offensive to God than deceit in commerce. A false balance is here put for all manner of unjust and fraudulent practices [of our public dis-servants] in dealing with any person [within the public], which are all an abomination to the Lord, and render those abominable [hated] to him that allow themselves in the use of such accursed arts of thriving. It is an affront to justice, which God is the patron of, as well as a wrong to our neighbour, whom God is the protector of. Men [in the IRS and the Congress] make light of such frauds, and think there is no sin in that which there is money to be got by, and, while it passes undiscovered, they cannot blame themselves for it; a blot is no blot till it is hit, Hos. 12:7, 8. But they are not the less an abomination to God, who will be the avenger of those that are defrauded by their brethren. 2. Nothing is more pleasing to God than fair and honest dealing, nor more necessary to make us and our devotions acceptable to him: A just weight is his delight. He himself goes by a just weight, and holds the scale of judgment with an even hand, and therefore is pleased with those that are herein followers of him. A balance cheats, under pretence of doing right most exactly, and therefore is the greater abomination to God."

[Matthew Henry's Commentary on the Whole Bible; Henry, M., 1996, c1991, under Prov. 11:1]

"A wise man can see more from the bottom of a well than a fool can from a mountain top."

[Unknown]

"Finally, brethren, whatever things are true, whatever things are noble, whatever things are just, whatever things are pure, whatever things are lovely, whatever things are of good report, if there is any virtue and if there is anything praiseworthy—meditate on these things."

[Phil. 4:8, Bible, NKJV]

"If you think of yourselves as helpless and ineffectual, it is certain that you will create a despotic government to be your master. The wise despot, therefore, maintains among his subjects a popular sense that they are helpless and ineffectual."

[Frank Herbert, The Dosadi Experiment]

"Altruism does not mean mere kindness or generosity, but the sacrifice of the best among men to the worst, the sacrifice of virtues to flaws, of ability to incompetence, of progress to stagnation--and the subordinating of all life and of all values to the claims of anyone's suffering."

[Ayn Rand]

"Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports in vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens."

[George Washington Farewell Address]

"The sum of all is, if we would most truly enjoy the gift of heaven, let us become a virtuous people; then shall we both deserve and enjoy it. While on the other hand, if we are universally vicious and debauched in our manners, though the form of our constitution carries the face of the most exalted freedom, we shall in reality be the most abject slaves."

[Wells, Life of Samuel Adams, 1:22-23]

"To suppose that any form of government will secure liberty or happiness without any virtue in the people is a chimerical idea."

[Elliot's Debates, James Madison 3:537]

"Pragmatism is the convenient conclusion reached by those who lack the patience or intelligence to formulate a consistent ideology."

[Mark G. Hanley]

"Only a Virtuous people are capable of freedom. As nations become corrupt and vicious, they have more need of masters."

[Smyth, Writings of Benjamin Franklin. 9:569]

"I believe that justice is instinct and innate, that the moral sense is as much a part of our constitution as that of feeling, seeing, or hearing; as a wise Creator must have seen to be necessary in an animal destined to live in society."

[Thomas Jefferson to John Adams, 1823]

"No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the invisible hand, which conducts in the affairs of men more than the people of the United States. Every step, by which they have been advanced to the character of an independent nation, seems to have been distinguished by some token of providential agency."

[George Washington]

"Yes, we did produce a near perfect Republic. But will they keep it, or will they, in the enjoyment of plenty, lose the memory of freedom? Material abundance without character is the surest way to destruction."

[Thomas Jefferson]

"[N]either the wisest constitution nor the wisest laws will secure the liberty and happiness of a people whose manners are universally corrupt. He therefore is the truest friend of the liberty of his country who tries most to promote its virtue."

[Samuel Adams]

"A vitiated state of morals, a corrupted public conscience, is incompatible with freedom."

[Patrick Henry]

"And can the liberties of a nation be thought secure when we have removed their only firm basis, a conviction in the minds of the people that these liberties are of the gift of God?"

[Thomas Jefferson in "Notes on Virginia".]

"No free government can stand without virtue in the people, and a lofty spirit of patriotism ..."

[Andrew Jackson]

"Indeed, I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just."

[Thomas Jefferson]

"Our Constitution was made only for a moral and religious people. It is wholly inadequate to the government of any other."

[John Adams; The Works of John Adams, ed. CF Adams, Boston: Little Brown Co., 1851,4:13]

"A nation as a society forms a moral person, and every member of it is personally responsible for his society."

[Thomas Jefferson]

"True law is right reason in agreement with Nature, it is of universal application, unchanging and everlasting; it summons to duty by its commands, and averts from wrong-doing by its prohibitions. And it does not lay its commands or prohibitions upon good men in vain, although neither have any effect upon the wicked. It is a sin to try to alter this law, nor is it allowable to attempt to repeal a part of it, and it is impossible to abolish it entirely. We cannot be freed from its obligations by Senate or People, and we need not look outside ourselves for an expounder or interpreter of it. And there will not be different laws at Rome and at Athens, or different laws now and in the future, but one eternal and unchangeable law will be valid for all nations and for all times, and there will be one master and one rule, that is God, over us all, for He is the author of this law, its promulgator, and its enforcing judge"

[Cicero]

"Liberty will not long survive the total extinction of morals."

[Samuel Adams]

"Religion, morality, and knowledge ... [are] necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind."

equivocation

EQUIVOCATION, n. Ambiguity of speech; the use of words or expressions that are susceptible of a double signification. Hypocrites are often guilty of equivocation, and by this means lose the confidence of their fellow men. Equivocation is incompatible with the Christian character and profession.

[SOURCE: <http://1828.mshaffer.com/d/search/word/equivocation>]

Equivocation ("to call by the same name") is an informal logical fallacy. It is the misleading use of a term with more than one meaning or sense (by glossing over which meaning is intended at a particular time). It generally occurs with polysemic words (words with multiple meanings).

Albeit in common parlance it is used in a variety of contexts, when discussed as a fallacy, equivocation only occurs when the arguer makes a word or phrase employed in two (or more) different senses in an argument appear to have the same meaning throughout.

It is therefore distinct from (semantic) ambiguity, which means that the context doesn't make the meaning of the word or phrase clear, and amphiboly (or syntactical ambiguity), which refers to ambiguous sentence structure due to punctuation or syntax.

"The moral of the story is that words are mankind's greatest weapon; as shown in this quote: 'There are weapons that are simply thoughts, attitudes, prejudices to be found only in the minds of men.'"
[Rod Serling, The Monsters Are Due on Maple Street, S01E22 of the TWILIGHT ZONE]

The vigilant protection of constitutional freedoms is nowhere more vital than in the community of American schools. "By limiting the power of the States to interfere with freedom of speech and freedom of inquiry and freedom of association, the Fourteenth Amendment protects all persons, no matter what their calling. But, in view of the nature of the teacher's relation to the effective exercise of the rights which are safeguarded by the Bill of Rights and by the Fourteenth Amendment, inhibition of freedom of thought, and of action upon thought, in the case of teachers brings the safeguards of those amendments vividly into operation. Such unwarranted inhibition upon the free spirit of teachers . . . has an unmistakable tendency to chill that free play of the spirit which all teachers ought especially to cultivate and practice; it makes for caution and timidity in their associations by potential teachers." Wieman v. Updegraff, 344 U.S. 183, 195 (concurring opinion). "Scholarship cannot flourish in an atmosphere of suspicion and distrust. "Our schools have been scientifically designed to prevent overeducation from happening. The average American (should be) content with their humble role in life, because they're not tempted to think about any other role."

[U.S. Commissioner of Education, William T. Harris, 1889]

"A general State education is a mere contrivance for molding people to be exactly like one another; and as the mold in which it casts them is that which pleases the dominant power in the government, whether this be a monarch, an aristocracy, or a majority of the existing generation; in proportion as it is efficient and successful, it establishes a despotism over the mind, leading by a natural tendency to one over the body."
[John Stuart Mill, 1859]

"Ideas are more powerful than guns. We would not let our enemies have guns, why should we let them have ideas."

"Independent self-reliant people would be a counterproductive anachronism in the collective society of the future where people will be defined by their associations."

[1896 John Dewey, educational philosopher, proponent of modern public schools]

"The time is now near at hand which must probably determine whether Americans are to be free men or slaves, whether they are to have any property they can call their own, whether their houses and farms are to be pillaged and destroyed and themselves confined to a state of wretchedness from which no human efforts will deliver them. The fate of unborn millions will now depend, under God, on the courage of this army. Our cruel and unrelenting enemy leaves us only the choice of brave resistance or the most abject submission. We have, therefore, to resolve to conquer or die."

[George Washington]

"As nightfall does not come at once, neither does oppression. In both instances there is a twilight when everything remains seemingly unchanged. And it is in such twilight that we all must be most aware of change in the air - however slight - lest we become unwitting victims of the darkness."

Section 2224

"One who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act, is, unless he or she has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained, for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it."

"The United States, we have held, cannot, as against the claim of an innocent party, hold his money which has gone into its treasury by means of the fraud of its agent. While here the money was taken through mistake without element of fraud, the unjust retention is immoral and amounts in law to a fraud of the taxpayer's rights. What was said in the State Bank Case applies with equal force to this situation. 'An action will lie whenever the defendant has received money which is the property of the plaintiff, and which the defendant is obligated by natural justice and equity to refund. The form of the indebtedness or the mode in which it was incurred is immaterial.'"

III.

The final question is whether the Government's action constituted a "taking" of petitioners' property interests within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment. Before the United States compelled Rice to transfer the hulls and all materials held for future use in building the boats, petitioners had valid liens under Maine law against both the hulls and whatever unused materials which petitioners had furnished. Before transfer these liens were enforceable by attachment against both the hulls and all materials. After transfer to the United States the liens were still valid. United States v. Alabama, 313 U.S. 274, 281-282, but they could not be enforced because of the sovereign immunity of the Government and its property from suit.[4] The result of this was a destruction of all petitioners' property rights under their liens, although, as we have pointed out, the liens were valid and had compensable value. Petitioners contend that destruction of 47*47 their liens under the circumstances here is a "taking." The United States denies this, largely on the premise that inability of petitioners to enforce their liens because of immunity of the Government and its property from suit cannot amount to a "taking."

The Government argues that the Ansonia case is dispositive of this Fifth Amendment issue. In that case, the contract between the shipbuilder and the United States provided, as to one of the ships contracted for, the dredge Benyuard, that as progress payments were made, the portion of the work paid for should become the property of the United States. Subcontractors claimed liens on the uncompleted vessel under the Virginia supply-lien law. This Court merely held that, as the property had passed to the United States by virtue of the terms of the contract, no lien could be enforced against it. No question was raised as to the rights possessed by the subcontractors prior to the acquisition of title by the United States nor as to whether that event entitled them to just compensation under the Fifth Amendment. There is, to be sure, reason to believe that the subcontractors' liens in that case, like those of petitioners here, did attach as soon as materials were furnished, which would necessarily be prior to the making of a progress payment for the portion of the work incorporating those materials and the consequent passage of title to the United States. See Hawes & Co. v. Trigg Co., 110 Va. 165, 185-186, 199, 65 S. E. 538, 546-547, 551-552. But the Fifth Amendment question was not raised or passed upon. In these circumstances we cannot regard the court's decision as dispositive on the precise point now under consideration, and must proceed to decide that question.^[5]

48*48 We hold that there was a taking of these liens for which just compensation is due under the Fifth Amendment. It is true that not every destruction or injury to property by governmental action has been held to be a "taking" in the constitutional sense. Omnia Commercial Co. v. United States, 261 U.S. 502, 508-510. This case and many others reveal the difficulty of trying to draw the line between what destructions of property by lawful governmental actions are compensable "takings" and what destructions are "consequential" and therefore not compensable. See, e. g., United States v. Central Eureka Mining Co., 357 U.S. 155; United States v. Causby, 328 U.S. 256; United States v. General Motors Corp., 323 U.S. 373; United States v. Spontenbarger, 308 U.S. 256; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Mahon, 260 U.S. 393; Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U.S. 467; Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 457, 551.

The total destruction by the Government of all value of these liens, which constitute compensable property, has every possible element of a Fifth Amendment "taking" and is not a mere "consequential incidence" of a valid regulatory measure. Before the liens were destroyed, the lienholders admittedly had compensable property. Immediately afterwards, they had none. This was not because their property vanished into thin air. It was because the Government for its own advantage destroyed the value of the liens, something that the Government could do because its property was not subject to suit, but which no private purchaser could have done. Since this acquisition was for a public use, however accomplished, whether with an intent and purpose of extinguishing the liens or not, the Government's action did destroy them 49*49 and in the circumstances of this case did thereby take the property value of those liens within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment. Neither the boats' immunity, after being acquired by the Government, from enforcement of the liens nor the use of a contract to take title relieves the Government from its constitutional obligation to pay just compensation for the value of the liens the petitioners lost and of which loss the Government was the direct, positive beneficiary.

The Fifth Amendment's guarantee that private property shall not be taken for a public use without just compensation was designed to bar Government from forcing some people alone to bear public burdens which, in all fairness and justice, should be borne by the public as a whole. A fair interpretation of this constitutional protection entitles these lienholders to just compensation here. Cf. Thibodo v. United States, 187 F. 2d. 249.

The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded to the Court of Claims for further proceedings to determine the value of the property taken.

Reversed and remanded.

"PROPERTY. Rightful dominion over external objects; ownership; the unrestricted and exclusive right to a thing; the right to dispose of the substance of a thing in every legal way, to possess it, to use it and to exclude every one else from interfering with it. Mackeld. Rom. Law, §265.

Property is the highest right a man can have to anything; being used for that right which one has to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which no way depends on another man's courtesy. Jackson ex dem. Pearson v. Housel, 17 Johns. 281, 283.

A right imparting to the owner a power of indefinite user, capable of being transmitted to universal successors by way of descent, and imparting to the owner the power of disposition, from himself and his successors per universitatem, and from all other persons who have a spes successions under any existing concession or disposition, in favor of such person or series of persons as he may choose, with the like capacities and powers as he had himself, and under such conditions as the municipal or particular law allows to be annexed to the dispositions of private persons. Aust. Jur. (Campbell's Ed.) §1103.

The right of property is that sole and despotic dominion which one man claims and exercises over the external things of the world, in total exclusion of the right of any other individual in the universe. It consists in the free use, enjoyment and disposal of all a person's acquisitions, without any control or diminution save only by the laws of the land. 1 Bl.Comm. 138; 2 Bl.Comm. 2, 15.

The word is also commonly used to denote any external object over which, the right of property is exercised. In this sense it is a very wide term, and includes every class of acquisitions which a man can own or have an interest in. See Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 D. S. 141, 21 Sup.Ct. 48, 45 L.Ed. 126; Lawrence v. Hennessey, 165 Mo. 659, 65 S. W. 717; Boston & L. R. Corp. v. Salem & L. R. Co., 2 Gray (Mass.), 35; *National Tel. News Co. v. Western Union Tel. C.) 67 Fed. 674.

—Absolute property . In respect to chattels personal property is said to be "absolute" where a man has, solely and exclusively, the right and also the occupation of any movable chattels, so permanent, but may at some times subsist and not at other times; such for example, as the property a man may have in wild animals which he has caught and keeps, and which are his only so long as he retains possession of them. 2 BL.Comm. 389.—Real property . A general term for lands, tenements, and hereditaments; property which, on the death of the owner intestate, passes to his heir. Real property is either corporeal or incorporeal. See Code N.Y. §462 — Separate property . The separate property of a married woman is that which she owns in her own right, which is liable only for her own debts, and which she can incumber and dispose of at her own will.—Special property. Property of a qualified, temporary, or limited nature; as distinguished from absolute, general, or unconditional property. Such is the property of a bailee in the article bailed, of a sheriff in goods temporarily in his hands under a levy, of the finder of lost goods while looking for the owner, of a person in wild animals which he has caught. Stief v. Hart, 1 N.Y. 24; Moulton v. Witherell, 52 Me. 242; Eisendrath v. Knauer, 64 Ill. 402; Phelps v. People, 72 N.Y. 357. [Black's Law Dictionary, Second Edition, p. 955]

"Property. That which is peculiar or proper to any person; that which belongs exclusively to one. In the strict legal sense, an aggregate of rights which are guaranteed and protected by the government. Fulton Light, Heat & Power Co. v. State, 65 Misc.Rep. 263, 121 N.Y.S. 536. The term is said to extend to every species of valuable right and interest. More specifically, ownership; the unrestricted and exclusive right to a thing; the right to dispose of a thing in every legal way, to possess it, to use it, and to exclude everyone else from interfering with it. That dominion or indefinite right of use or disposition which one may lawfully exercise over particular things or subjects. The exclusive right of possessing, enjoying, and disposing of a thing. The highest right a man can have to anything; being used to refer to that right which one has to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which no way depends on another man's courtesy.

The word is also commonly used to denote everything which is the subject of ownership, corporeal or incorporeal, tangible or intangible, visible or invisible, real or personal, everything that has an exchangeable value or which goes to make up wealth or estate. It extends to every species of valuable right and interest, and includes real and personal property, easements, franchises, and incorporeal hereditaments, and includes every invasion of one's property rights by actionable wrong. Labberton v. General Cas. Co. of America, 53 Wash.2d. 180, 332 P.2d. 250, 252, 254.

Property embraces everything which is or may be the subject of ownership, whether a legal ownership. or whether beneficial, or a private ownership. Davis v. Davis. TexCiv-App., 495 S.W.2d. 607. 611. Term includes not only ownership and possession but also the right of use and enjoyment for lawful purposes. Hoffmann v. Kinealy, Mo., 389 S.W.2d. 745, 752.

Property, within constitutional protection, denotes group of rights inhering in citizen's relation to physical thing, as right to possess, use and dispose of it. Cereghino v. State By and Through State Highway Commission, 230 Or. 439, 370 P.2d. 694, 697.

[Black's Law Dictionary, Fifth Edition, p. 1095]

"Justice, as a moral habit, is that tendency of the will and mode of conduct which refrains from disturbing the lives and interests [AND PROPERTY] of others, and, as far as possible, hinders such interference on the part of others. This virtue springs from the individual's respect for his fellows as ends in themselves and as his co equals. The different spheres of interests may be roughly classified as follows: body and life; the family, or the extended individual life; property, or the totality of the instruments of action; honor, or the ideal existence; and finally freedom, or the possibility of fashioning one's life as an end in itself. The law defends these different spheres, thus giving rise to a corresponding number of spheres of rights, each being protected by a prohibition. . . . To violate the rights, to interfere with the interests of others, is injustice. All injustice is ultimately directed against the life of the neighbor; it is an open avowal that the latter is not an end in itself, having the same value as the individual's own life. The general formula of the duty of justice may therefore be stated as follows: Do no wrong yourself, and permit no wrong to be done, so far as lies in your power; or, expressed positively: Respect and protect the right.

"The distinction between public rights and private rights has not been definitively explained in our precedents. Nor is it necessary to do so in the present cases, for it suffices to observe that a matter of public rights must at a minimum arise 'between the government and others.' Ex parte Bakelite Corp., supra, at 451, 49 S.Ct., at 413. In contrast, 'the liability of one individual to another under the law as defined,' Crowell v. Benson, supra, at 51, 52 S.Ct., at 292, is a matter of private rights. Our precedents clearly establish that only controversies in the former category may be removed from Art. III courts and delegated to legislative courts or administrative agencies for their determination. See Atlas Roofing Co. v. Occupational Safety and Health Review Comm'n, 430 U.S. 442, 450, n. 7, 97 S.Ct. 1261, 1266, n. 7, 51 L.Ed.2d. 464 (1977); Crowell v. Benson, supra, 285 U.S., at 50-51, 52 S.Ct., at 292. See also Katz, Federal Legislative Courts, 43 Harv.L.Rev. 894, 917-918 (1930).FN24 Private-rights disputes, on the other hand, lie at the core of the historically recognized judicial power."

Although Crowell and Raddatz do not explicitly distinguish between rights created by Congress [PUBLIC RIGHTS] and other [PRIVATE] rights, such a distinction underlies in part Crowell's and Raddatz' recognition of a critical difference between rights created by federal statute and rights recognized by the Constitution. Moreover, such a distinction seems to us to be necessary in light of the delicate accommodations required by the principle of separation of powers reflected in Art. III. The constitutional system of checks and balances is designed to guard against "encroachment or aggrandizement" by Congress at the expense of the other branches of government. Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S., at 122, 96 S.Ct., at 683. But when Congress creates a statutory right [a "privilege" or "public right" in this case, such as a "trade or business"], it clearly has the discretion, in defining that right, to create presumptions, or assign burdens of proof, or prescribe remedies; it may also provide that persons seeking to vindicate that right must do so before particularized tribunals created to perform the specialized adjudicative tasks related to that right.FN35 Such provisions do, in a sense, affect the exercise of judicial power, but they are also incidental to Congress' power to define the right that it has created. No comparable justification exists, however, when the right being adjudicated is not of congressional creation. In such a situation, substantial inroads into functions that have traditionally been performed by the Judiciary cannot be characterized merely as incidental extensions of Congress' power to define rights that it has created. Rather, such inroads suggest unwarranted encroachments upon the judicial power of the United States, which our Constitution reserves for Art. III courts. [Northern Pipeline Const. Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50, 102 S.Ct. 2858 \(1983\)]

"I [God] brought you up from Egypt [slavery] and brought you to the land of which I swore to your fathers; and I said, 'I will never break My covenant with you. And you shall make no covenant [contract or franchise or agreement of ANY kind] with the inhabitants of this [corrupt pagan] land; you shall tear down their [man/government worshipping socialist] altars.' But you have not obeyed Me. Why have you done this?"

"Therefore I also said, 'I will not drive them out before you; but they will become as thorns [terrorists and persecutors] in your side and their gods will be a snare [slavery!] to you."

So it was, when the Angel of the LORD spoke these words to all the children of Israel, that the people lifted up their voices and wept.

"You shall make no covenant [contract or franchise] with them [foreigners, pagans], nor with their [pagan government] gods [laws or judges]. They shall not dwell in your land [and you shall not dwell in theirs by becoming a "resident" or domiciliary in the process of contracting with them], lest they make you sin against Me [God]. For if you serve their [government] gods [under contract or agreement or franchise], it will surely be a snare to you."

How to PREVENT conversion of PRIVATE to PUBLIC

"All rights and property are PRESUMED to be EXCLUSIVELY PRIVATE and beyond the control of government or the CIVIL law unless and until the government meets the burden of proving, WITH EVIDENCE, on the record of the proceeding that:

1. A SPECIFIC formerly PRIVATE owner consented IN WRITING to convert said property to PUBLIC property.
2. The owner was either abroad, domiciled on, or at least PRESENT on federal territory NOT protected by the Constitution and therefore had the legal capacity to ALIENATE a Constitutional right or relieve a public servant of the fiduciary obligation to respect and protect the right. Those physically present but not necessarily domiciled in a constitutional but not statutory state protected by the constitution cannot lawfully alienate rights to a real, de jure government, even WITH their consent.
3. If the government refuses to meet the above burden of proof, it shall be CONCLUSIVELY PRESUMED to be operating in a PRIVATE, corporate capacity on an EQUAL footing with every other private corporation and which is therefore NOT protected by official, judicial, or sovereign immunity."

United States Constitution
Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

"The Constitution permits Congress to dispose of and to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States. This power applies as well to territory belonging to the United States within the States, as beyond them. It comprehends all the public domain, wherever it may be. The argument is, that the power to make 'ALL needful rules and regulations' 'is a power of legislation, 'a full legislative power;' 'that it includes all subjects of legislation in the territory, and is without any limitations, except the positive prohibitions which affect all the powers of Congress. Congress may then regulate or prohibit slavery upon the public domain within the new States, and such a prohibition would permanently affect the capacity of a slave, whose master might carry him to it. And why not? Because no power has been conferred on Congress. This is a conclusion universally admitted. But the power to 'make rules and regulations respecting the territory' is not restrained by State lines, nor are there any constitutional prohibitions upon its exercise in the domain of the United States within the States; and whatever rules and regulations respecting territory Congress may constitutionally make are supreme, and are not dependent on the situs of 'the territory.'"

[Dred Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. 393, 509-510 (1856)]

"Men are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, 'life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness;' and to 'secure, not grant or create, these rights, governments are instituted. That property [or income] which a man has honestly acquired he retains full control of, subject to these limitations:"

[1] First, that he shall not use it to his neighbor's injury, and that does not mean that he must use it for his neighbor's benefit [e.g. SOCIAL SECURITY, Medicare, and every other public "benefit"];

[2] second, that if he devotes it to a public use, he gives to the public a right to control that use; and

[3] third, that whenever the public needs require, the public may take it upon payment of due compensation."

What is "Property"?

Keep in mind the following critical facts about "property" as legally defined:

1. The essence of the "property" right, also called "ownership", is the RIGHT TO EXCLUDE others from using or benefitting from the use of the property.

"We have repeatedly held that, as to property reserved by its owner for private use, 'the right to exclude [others is]' one of the most essential sticks in the bundle of rights that are commonly characterized as property.' " Loretto v. Teleprompter Manhattan CATV Corp., 458 U.S. 419, 433 \(1982\), quoting Kaiser Aetna v. United States, 444 U.S. 164, 176 \(1979\). "
[Nollan v. California Coastal Comm'n, 483 U.S. 825 (1987)]

"In this case, we hold that the 'right to exclude,' so universally held to be a fundamental element of the property right,^[11] falls within this category of interests that the Government cannot take without compensation."
[Kaiser Aetna v. United States, 444 U.S. 164 (1979)]

[11] See, e. g., United States v. Pueblo of San Ildefonso, 206 Ct.Cl. 649, 669-670, 513 F.2d. 1383, 1394 \(1975\); United States v. Lutz, 295 F.2d. 736, 740 \(CA5 1961\). As stated by Mr. Justice Brandeis, "[a]n essential element of individual property is the legal right to exclude others from enjoying it." International News Service v. Associated Press, 248 U.S. 215, 250 \(1918\) \(dissenting opinion\).

2. It's NOT your property if you can't exclude EVERYONE, including the GOVERNMENT from using, benefitting from the use, or taxing the specific property.
3. All constitutional rights and statutory privileges are property.
4. Anything that conveys a right or privilege is property.
5. Contracts convey rights or privileges and are therefore property.
6. All franchises are contracts between the grantor and the grantee and therefore property.

11.4 Corruption⁶⁴

“When the wicked arise, men hide themselves;

But when they perish, the righteous increase.”

[Prov. 28:28, Bible, NKJV]

“A prudent man foresees evil and hides himself,

But the simple pass on and are punished.”

[Prov. 22:3, Bible, NKJV]

“A prudent man foresees evil and hides himself; The simple pass on and are punished.”

[Prov. 27:12, Bible, NKJV]

“The simple believes every word,

But the prudent man considers well his steps.

A wise man fears and departs from evil,

But a fool rages and is self-confident.”

[Prov. 14:15, Bible, NKJV]

"No servant [or government or biological person] can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will be loyal to the one and despise the other. You cannot serve God and mammon [government]."

[Luke 16:13, Bible, NKJV]

[Thomas Jefferson: Notes on Virginia Q.XIV, 1782. ME 2:207]

“These are words of weighty import. They involve consequences of the most momentous character. I take leave to say that if the principles thus announced should ever receive the sanction of a majority of this court, a radical and mischievous change in our system of government will be the result. We will, in that event, pass from the era of constitutional liberty guarded and protected by a written constitution into an era of legislative absolutism.”

“This nation is under the control of a written constitution, the supreme law of the land and the only source of the powers which our Government, or any branch or officer of it, may exert at any time or at any place. Monarchical and despotic governments, unrestrained by written constitutions, may do with newly acquired territories what this Government may not do consistently with our fundamental law. To say otherwise is to concede that Congress may, by action taken outside of the Constitution, engraft upon our republican institutions a colonial system such as exists under monarchical governments. Surely such a result was never contemplated by the fathers of the Constitution. If that instrument had contained a word suggesting the possibility of a result of that character it would never have been adopted by the People of the United States. The idea that this country may acquire territories anywhere upon the earth, by conquest or treaty, and hold them as mere colonies or provinces — the people inhabiting them to enjoy only such rights as Congress chooses to accord to them — is wholly inconsistent with the spirit and genius as well as with the words of the Constitution.”

“The idea prevails with some — indeed, it found expression in arguments at the bar — that we have in this country substantially or practically two national governments; one, to be maintained under the Constitution, with all its restrictions; the other to be maintained by Congress outside and independently of that instrument, by exercising such powers as other nations of the earth are accustomed to exercise.” It is one thing to give such a latitudinarian construction to the Constitution as will bring the exercise of power by Congress, upon a particular occasion or upon a particular subject, within its provisions. It is quite a different thing to say that Congress may, if it so elects, proceed outside of the Constitution. The glory of our American system ³⁸¹*³⁸¹ of government is that it was created by a written constitution which protects the people against the exercise of arbitrary, unlimited power, and the limits of which instrument may not be passed by the government it created, or by any branch of it, or even by the people who ordained it, except by amendment or change of its provisions. "To what purpose," Chief Justice Marshall said in Marbury v. Madison, ¹ Cranch, 137, 176, "are powers limited, and to what purpose is that limitation committed to writing, if these limits may, at any time, be passed by those intended to be restrained? The distinction between a government with limited and unlimited powers is abolished if those limits do not confine the persons on whom they are imposed, and if acts prohibited and acts allowed are of equal obligation."

Downes v. Bidwell, [182 U.S. 244 (1901), Justice Harlan, Dissenting]

"When the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person, or in the same body of magistrates, there can be no liberty; because apprehensions may arise, lest the same monarch or senate should enact tyrannical laws, to execute them in a tyrannical manner."

Again, there is no liberty, if the judiciary power be not separated from the legislative and executive. Were it joined with the legislative, the life and liberty of the subject would be exposed to arbitrary control; for the judge would be then the legislator. Were it joined to the executive power, the judge might behave with violence and oppression [sound familiar?].

There would be an end of everything, were the same man or the same body, whether of the nobles or of the people, to exercise those three powers, that of enacting laws, that of executing the public resolutions, and of trying the causes of individuals."

In what a situation must the poor subject be in those republics! The same body of magistrates are possessed, as executors of the laws, of the whole power they have given themselves in quality of legislators. They may plunder the state by their general determinations; and as they have likewise the judiciary power in their hands, every private citizen may be ruined by their particular decisions."

“The Declaration of Independence, which was the first political act of the American people in their independent sovereign capacity, lays the foundation of our National existence upon this broad proposition, —That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.”

[Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. at 116-117 (Bradley, Justice, dissenting)]

[Thomas Jefferson]

"The fact is that the average man's love of liberty is nine-tenths imaginary, exactly like his love of sense, justice and truth. He is not actually happy when free; he is uncomfortable, a bit alarmed, and intolerably lonely. Liberty is not a thing for the great masses of men. It is the exclusive possession of a small and disreputable minority, like knowledge, courage and honor. It takes a special sort of man to understand and enjoy liberty - and he is usually an outlaw in democratic societies."

[H.L. Mencken, Baltimore Evening Sun, Feb. 12, 1923]

"No man escapes when freedom fails, The best men rot in filthy jails, And those who cried —Appease! Appease!! Are hanged by those they tried to please."

[Barry Goldwater]

"I believe that it is better to tell the truth than a lie. I believe it is better to be free than to be a slave. And I believe it is better to know than to be ignorant."

[H.L. Mencken]

"The very purpose of a Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts. One's right to life, liberty, and property, to free speech, a free press, freedom of worship and assembly, and other fundamental rights may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections."

[West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 63 S.Ct. 1178 (1943)]

"Civil liberties. "Political rights. Those which may be exercised in the formation or administration of the government. Rights of citizens established or recognized by constitutions which give them the power to participate directly or indirectly in the establishment or administration of the government."

[Black's Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1159]

"It would be a palpable incongruity to strike down an act of state legislation which, by words of express divestment, seeks to strip the citizen of rights guaranteed by the federal Constitution, but to uphold an act by which the same result is accomplished under the guise of a surrender of a right in exchange for a valuable privilege which the state threatens otherwise to withhold. It is not necessary to challenge the proposition that, as a general rule, the state, having power to deny a privilege altogether, may grant it upon such conditions as it sees fit to impose. But the power of the state in that respect is not unlimited, and one of the limitations is that it may not impose conditions which require the relinquishment of Constitutional rights. If the state may compel the surrender of one constitutional right as a condition of its favor, it may, in like manner, compel a surrender of all. It is inconceivable that guaranties embedded in the Constitution of the United States may thus be manipulated out of existence."

[Frost v. Railroad Commission, 271 U.S. 583, 46 S.Ct. 605 (1926)]

"It has long been established that a State may not impose a penalty upon those who exercise a right guaranteed by the Constitution." *Frost & Frost Trucking Co. v. [James 4:10, Bible, NKJV]

"Among these unalienable rights, as proclaimed in that great document [the Declaration of Independence] is the right of men to pursue their happiness, by which is meant, the right any lawful business or vocation, in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase their prosperity or develop their faculties, so as to give them their highest enjoyment...It has been well said that, THE PROPERTY WHICH EVERY MAN HAS IN HIS OWN LABOR, AS IT IS THE ORIGINAL FOUNDATION OF ALL OTHER PROPERTY SO IT IS THE MOST SACRED AND INVIOABLE... to hinder his employing this strength and dexterity in what manner he thinks proper without injury to his neighbor, is a plain violation of this most sacred property." "
[Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U.S. 746 (1884)]

The moment the idea is admitted into society, that property is not as sacred as the laws of God, and that there is not a force of law and public justice to protect it, anarchy and tyranny commence. If "Thou shalt not covet," and "Thou shalt not steal," were not commandments of Heaven, they must be made inviolable precepts in every society, before it can be civilized or made free.
[John Adams, The Works of John Adams, Second President of the United States, Charles Francis Adams, editor (Boston: Charles C. Little and James Brown, 1851), Vol. VI, p. 9.]

"The capacity of an individual, other than one acting in a representative capacity, to sue or be sued shall be determined by the law of the individual's domicile. The capacity of a corporation to sue or be sued shall be determined by the law under which it was organized. In all other cases capacity to sue or be sued shall be determined by the law of the state in which the district court is held, except (1) that a partnership or other unincorporated association, which has no such capacity by the law of such state, may sue or be sued in its common name for the purpose of enforcing for or against it a substantive right existing under the Constitution or laws of the United States, and (2) that the capacity of a receiver appointed by a court of the United States to sue or be sued in a court of the United States is governed by Title 28, U.S.C. §§754 and 959\(a\)."
[Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b)]

"Similarly, when a person is prevented from leaving his domicile by circumstances not of his doing and beyond his control, he may be relieved of the consequences attendant on domicile at that place. In Roboz (USDC D.C. 1963) [Roboz v. Kennedy, 219 F.Supp. 892 (D.D.C. 1963), p. 24], a federal statute was involved which precluded the return of an alien's property if he was found to be domiciled in Hungary prior to a certain date. It was found that Hungary was Nazi-controlled at the time in question and that the persons involved would have left Hungary (and lost domicile there) had they been able to. Since they had been precluded from leaving because of the political privations imposed by the very government they wanted to escape (the father was in prison there), the court would not hold them to have lost their property based on a domicile that circumstances beyond their control forced them to retain."
[Conflicts in a Nutshell, David D. Siegel and Patrick J. Borchers, West Publishing, p. 24]

"The rights of the individual are not derived from governmental agencies, either municipal, state or federal, or even from the Constitution. They exist inherently in every man, by endowment of the Creator, and are merely reaffirmed in the Constitution, and restricted only to the extent that they have been voluntarily surrendered by the citizenship to the agencies of government. The people's rights are not derived from the government, but the government's authority comes from the people.*946 The Constitution but states again these rights already existing, and when legislative encroachment by the nation, state, or municipality invade these original and permanent rights, it is the duty of the courts to so declare, and to afford the necessary relief. The fewer restrictions that surround the individual liberties of the citizen, except those for the preservation of the public health, safety, and morals, the more contented the people and the more successful the democracy."
[City of Dallas v. Mitchell, 245 S.W. 944 (1922)]

"When a change of government takes place, from a monarchical to a republican government, the old form is dissolved. Those who lived under it, and did not choose to become members of the new, had a right to refuse their allegiance to it, and to retire elsewhere. By being a part of the society subject to the old government, they had not entered into any engagement to become subject to any new form the majority might think proper to adopt. That the majority shall prevail is a rule posterior to the formation of government, and results from it. It is not a rule upon mankind in their natural state. There, every man is independent of all laws, except those prescribed by nature. He is not bound by any institutions formed by his fellowmen without his consent"

[Cruden v. Neale, 2 N.C., 2 S.E. 70 (1796)]

"The constitutionality and scope of sections 1990 and 5526 present the first questions for our consideration. They prohibit peonage. What is peonage? It may be defined as a state or condition of compulsory service, based upon the indebtedness of the peon to the master. The basal fact is indebtedness. As said by Judge Benedict, delivering the opinion in Jaremillo v. Romero, 1 N.Mex. 190, 194: 'One fact existed universally; all were indebted to their masters. This was the cord by which they seemed bound to their masters' service.' Upon this is based a condition of compulsory service. Peonage is sometimes classified as voluntary or involuntary, but this implies simply a difference in the mode of origin, but not in the character of the servitude. The one exists where the debtor voluntarily contracts to enter the service of his creditor. The other is forced upon the debtor by some provision of law. But peonage, however created, is compulsory service, involuntary servitude. The peon can release himself therefrom, it is true, by the payment of the debt, but otherwise the service is enforced. A clear distinction exists between peonage and the voluntary performance of labor or rendering of services in payment of a debt. In the latter case the debtor, though contracting to pay his indebtedness by labor or service, and subject like any other contractor to an action for damages for breach of that contract, can elect at any time to break it, and no law or force compels performance or continuance of the service."

[Clyatt v. U.S., 197 U.S. 207 (1905)]

"That it does not conflict with the Thirteenth Amendment, which abolished slavery and involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, is too clear for argument. Slavery implies involuntary servitude—a state of bondage; the ownership of mankind as a chattel, or at least the control of the labor and services of one man for the benefit of another, and the absence of a legal right to the disposal of his own person, property, and services [in their entirety]. This amendment was said in the Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall, 36, to have been intended primarily to abolish slavery, as it had been previously known in this country, and that it equally forbade Mexican peonage or the Chinese coolie trade, when they amounted to slavery or involuntary servitude and that the use of the word 'servitude' was intended to prohibit the use of all forms of involuntary slavery, of whatever class or name."

[Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537, 542 (1896)]

"Waivers of Constitutional rights not only must be voluntary, but must be knowing, intelligent acts done with sufficient awareness of the relevant circumstances and likely consequences."

[Brady v. U.S., 397 U.S. 742 (1970)]

"The Government may carry on its operations through conventional executive agencies or through corporate forms especially created for defined ends. See Keifer & Keifer v. Reconstruction Finance Corp., 306 U.S. 381, 390, 518. Whatever the form in which the Government functions, anyone entering into an arrangement with the Government takes the risk of having accurately ascertained that he who purports to act for the Government stays within the bounds of his authority. The scope of this authority may be explicitly defined by Congress or be limited by delegated legislation, properly exercised through the rule-making power. And this is so even though, as here, the agent himself may have been unaware of the limitations upon his authority. See, e.g., Utah Power & Light Co. v. United States, 243 U.S. 389, 409, 391; United States v. Stewart, 311 U.S. 60, 70, 108, and see, generally, In re Floyd Acceptances, 7 Wall. 666."

The first official action of this nation declared the foundation of government in these words: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident, [\[165 U.S. 150, 160\]](#) that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.' While such declaration of principles may not have the force of organic law, or be made the basis of judicial decision as to the limits of right and duty, and while in all cases referenced must be had to the organic law of the nation for such limits, yet the latter is but the body and the letter of which the former is the thought and the spirit, and it is always safe to read the letter of the constitution in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence. No duty rests more imperatively upon the courts than the enforcement of those constitutional provisions intended to secure that equality of rights which is the foundation of free government."

"The conclusion is thus inescapable that the history, concept, and wording of the Second Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as well as its interpretation by every major commentator and court in the first half-century after its ratification, indicates that what is protected is an individual right of a private citizen to own and carry firearms in a peaceful manner."

[Report of the Subcommittee on the Constitution of the Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, 97th Congress, Second Session (February 1982)]

"When they took the fourth amendment, I was silent because I don't deal drugs.
When they took the sixth amendment, I kept quiet because I know I'm innocent.
When they took the second amendment, I said nothing because I don't own a gun.

11.7 Requirement for Consent⁶⁷

"consent. A concurrence of wills. Voluntarily yielding the will to the proposition of another; acquiescence or compliance therewith. Agreement; approval; permission; the act or result of coming into harmony or accord. Consent is an act of reason, accompanied with deliberation, the mind weighing as in a balance the good or evil on each side. It means voluntary agreement by a person in the possession and exercise of sufficient mental capacity to make an intelligent choice to do something proposed by another. It supposes a physical power to act, a moral power of acting, and a serious, determined, and free use of these powers. Consent is implied in every agreement. It is an act unclouded by fraud, duress, or sometimes even mistake.

Willingness in fact that an act or an invasion of an interest shall take place. Restatement, Second, Torts §10A.

As used in the law of rape "consent" means consent of the will, and submission under the influence of fear or terror cannot amount to real consent. There must be an exercise of intelligence based on knowledge of its significance and moral quality and there must be a choice between resistance and assent. And if a woman resists to the point where further resistance would be useless or until her resistance is overcome by force or violence, submission thereafter is not "consent".

See also Acquiescence; Age of consent; Assent; Connivance; Informed consent;" voluntary appearance. A coming into court as a party to a suit, either in person or by attorney, whether as plaintiff or defendant. The formal proceeding by which a defendant submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court. The voluntary submission to a court's jurisdiction.

In civil actions the parties do not normally actually appear in person, but rather through their attorneys (who enter their appearance by filing written pleadings, or a formal written entry of appearance). Also, at many stages of criminal proceedings, particularly involving minor offenses, the defendant's attorney appears on his behalf. See e.g., Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 43.

An appearance may be either general or special; the former is a simple and unqualified or unrestricted submission to the jurisdiction of the court, the latter is a submission to the jurisdiction for some specific purpose only, not for all the purposes of the suit. A special appearance is for the purpose of testing or objecting to the sufficiency of service or the jurisdiction of the court over defendant without submitting to such jurisdiction; a general appearance is made where the defendant waives defects of service and submits to the jurisdiction of court. Insurance Co. of North America v. Kunin, 175 Neb. 260, 121 N.W.2d. 372, 375, 376.

“Compact, n. An agreement or contract between persons, nations, or states. Commonly applied to working agreements between and among states concerning matters of mutual concern. A contract between parties, which creates obligations and rights capable of being enforced and contemplated as such between the parties, in their distinct and independent characters. A mutual consent of parties concerned respecting some property or right that is the object of the stipulation, or something that is to be done or forborne. voluntary. “Unconstrained by interference; unimpelled by another’s influence; spontaneous; acting of oneself. Coker v. State, 199 Ga. 20, 33 S.E.2d. 171, 174. Done by design or intention. Proceeding from the free and unrestrained will of the person. Produced in or by an act of choice. Resulting from free choice, without compulsion or solicitation. The word, especially in statutes, often implies knowledge of essential facts. Without valuable consideration; gratuitous, as a voluntary conveyance. Also, having a merely nominal consideration; as, a voluntary deed.”

11.8 Religion⁶⁸

“Do not be unequally yoked together with unbelievers. For what fellowship has righteousness with lawlessness? And what communion has light with darkness?”
[2 Cor. 6:14, Bible, NKJV]

“The devil always works in baby steps. If you put a frog in hot water, he will immediately jump out. But if you put him in cool water and then gradually raise the temperature over tens or even hundreds of years, then you can boil the frog alive and he won’t even know how it happened.”
[Unknown]

“It is better to trust the Lord than to put confidence in man. It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes.”
[Psalm 118:8-9, Bible, NKJV]

“...there is no authority except from God.”
[Romans 13:1, Bible, NKJV]

“...you are complete in Him [Christ], who is the head of all principality and power.”
[Colossians 2:10, Bible, NKJV]

“What right have you to declare My statutes [write man’s vain law], or take My covenant [the Bible] in your mouth, seeing you hate instruction and cast My words behind you?” When you saw a thief, you consented with him, and have been a partaker with adulterers. You give your mouth to evil, and your tongue frames deceit. You sit and speak against your brother; you slander your own mother’s son. These things you have done, and I kept silent; you thought that I was altogether like you; but I will reprove you, and set them in order before your eyes. Now consider this, you who forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver: Whoever offers praise glorifies Me; and to him who orders his conduct aright I will show the salvation of God.”
[Psalm 50:16-23, Bible, NKJV]

"Adulterers and adulteresses! Do you now know that friendship [and "citizenship"] with the world is enmity with God? Whoever therefore wants to be a friend [citizen] of the world makes himself an enemy of God."
[James 4:4, Bible, NKJV]

“Behold, the nations are as a drop in the bucket, and are counted as the small dust on the scales.”
[Isaiah 40:15, Bible, NKJV]

“All nations before Him are as nothing, and they are counted by Him less than nothing and worthless.”
[Isaiah 40:17, Bible, NKJV]

“He brings the princes to nothing; He makes the judges of the earth useless.”
[Isaiah 40:23, Bible, NKJV]

“Indeed they are all worthless; their works are nothing; their molded images are wind and confusion.”
[Isaiah 41:29, Bible, NKJV]

“Pure and undefiled religion before God and the Father is this: to visit orphans and widows in their trouble, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world [and the corrupted governments and laws of the world].”
[James 1:27, Bible, NKJV]

“The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God.”
[Psalm 9:17, Bible, NKJV]

“Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and He will lift you up [above your government].”

“The most perfect maxims and examples for regulating your social conduct and domestic economy, as well as the best rules of morality and religion, are to be found in the Bible. . . . The moral principles and precepts found in the scriptures ought to form the basis of all our civil constitutions and laws. These principles and precepts have truth, immutable truth, for their foundation. . . . All the evils which men suffer from vice, crime, ambition, injustice, oppression, slavery and war, proceed from their despising or neglecting the precepts contained in the Bible. . . . For instruction then in social, religious and civil duties resort to the scriptures for the best precepts.”

“Far from being rivals or enemies, religion and law are twin sisters, friends, and mutual assistants. Indeed, these two sciences run into each other. The divine law, as discovered by reason and the moral sense, forms an essential part of both.”

[James Wilson, The Works of the Honourable James Wilson (Philadelphia: Bronson and Chauncey, 1804), Vol. I, p. 106; Signer of the Constitution.]

“Cursed is the one who trusts in man [and by implication, governments made up of men], who depends on flesh for his strength and whose heart turns away from the Lord. He will be like a bush in the wastelands; he will not see prosperity when it comes. He will dwell in the parched places of the desert, in a salt land where no one lives. But blessed is the man who trusts in the Lord, whose confidence is in Him. He will be like a tree planted by the water that sends out its roots by the stream. It does not fear when heat comes; its leaves are always green. It has no worries in a year of drought and never fails to bear fruit.”

[Jeremiah 17:5-8, Bible, NIV]

“Men, in a word, must necessarily be controlled either by a power within them or by a power without them; either by the Word of God or by the strong arm of man; either by the Bible or by the bayonet.”

“[I]f we and our posterity reject religious instruction and authority, violate the rules of eternal justice, trifle with the injunctions of morality, and recklessly destroy the political constitution which holds us together, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may overwhelm us that shall bury all our glory in profound obscurity.”

[Daniel Webster, The Writings and Speeches of Daniel Webster (Boston: Little, Brown, & Company, 1903), Vol. XIII, p. 492. From "The Dignity and Importance of History," February 23, 1852]

“I have lived, Sir, a long time, and the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid? We have been assured, Sir, in the Sacred Writings, that "except the Lord build the House, they labor in vain that build it." I firmly believe this; and I also believe that without His concurring aid we shall succeed in this political building no better, than the Builders of Babel: We shall be divided by our partial local interests; our projects will be confounded, and we ourselves shall become a reproach and bye word down to future ages. And what is worse, mankind may hereafter from tis unfortunate instance, despair of establishing governments by human wisdom and leave it to chance, war and conquest.

“We profess to be republicans, and yet we neglect the only means of establishing and perpetuating our republican forms of government, that is, the universal education of our youth in the principles of Christianity by the means of the Bible. For this Divine Book, above all others, favors that equality among mankind, that respect for just laws, and those sober and frugal virtues, which constitute the soul of republicanism.”

“While just government protects all in their religious rights, true religion affords to government its surest support.”

[George Washington, The Writings of George Washington, John C. Fitzpatrick, editor (Washington, D.C.: U.S. Government Printing Office, 1932), Vol. XXX, p. 432]

By renouncing the Bible, philosophers swing from their moorings upon all moral subjects. . . . It is the only correct map of the human heart that ever has been published. . . . All systems of religion, morals, and government not founded upon it [the Bible] must perish, and how consoling the thought, it will not only survive the wreck of these systems but the world itself. "The Gates of Hell shall not prevail against it." [Matthew 1:18]

[Benjamin Rush, Letters of Benjamin Rush, L. H. Butterfield, editor (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1951), p. 936, to John Adams, January 23, 1807]

"No free government now exists in the world, unless where Christianity is acknowledged, and is the religion of the country." [Pennsylvania Supreme Court, 1824. Updegraph v. Commonwealth; 11 Serg. & R. 393, 406 (Sup.Ct. Penn. 1824)]

"[P]ublic utility pleads most forcibly for the general distribution of the Holy Scriptures. The doctrine they preach, the obligations they impose, the punishment they threaten, the rewards they promise, the stamp and image of divinity they bear, which produces a conviction of their truths, can alone secure to society, order and peace, and to our courts of justice and constitutions of government, purity, stability and usefulness. In vain, without the Bible, we increase penal laws and draw entrenchments around our institutions. Bibles are strong entrenchments. Where they abound, men cannot pursue wicked courses, and at the same time enjoy quiet conscience."

[Bernard C. Steiner, One Hundred and Ten Years of Bible Society Work in Maryland, 1810-1920 (Maryland Bible Society, 1921), p. 14; Signer of the Constitution]

"To the kindly influence of Christianity we owe that degree of civil freedom, and political and social happiness which mankind now enjoys. . . . Whenever the pillars of Christianity shall be overthrown, our present republican forms of government, and all blessings which flow from them, must fall with them."

"I concur with the author in considering the moral precepts of Jesus as more pure, correct, and sublime than those of ancient philosophers."

[Thomas Jefferson, The Writings of Thomas Jefferson, Albert Bergh, editor (Washington, D. C.: Thomas Jefferson Memorial Assoc., 1904), Vol. X, pp. 376-377. In a letter to Edward Dowse on April 19, 1803]

"I therefore beg leave to move that henceforth prayers imploring the assistance of Heaven, and its blessings on our deliberations be held in this Assembly every morning before we proceed to business, and that one of more of the clergy of this city be requested to officiate in that service."

[Cardinal Belleramine]

"The "establishment of religion" clause of the First Amendment means at least this: neither a state nor the Federal Government can set up a church. Neither can pass laws which aid one [state-sponsored political] religion, aid all religions, or prefer one religion over another. Neither can force or influence a person to go to or to remain away from church against his will, or force him to profess a belief or disbelief in any religion. No person can be punished for entertaining or professing religious beliefs or disbeliefs, for church attendance or non-attendance. No tax in any amount, large or small, can be levied to support any religious activities or institutions, whatever they may be called, or whatever form they may adopt to teach or practice religion. Neither a state nor the Federal Government can, openly or secretly, participate in the affairs of any religious organizations or groups and vice versa."

[Everson v. Bd. of Ed., 330 U.S. 1, 15 (1947)]

"[T]he Establishment Clause is infringed when the government makes adherence to religion relevant to a person's standing in the political community. Direct government action endorsing religion or a particular religious practice is invalid under this approach, because it sends a message to nonadherents that they are outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community".

[Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 69 (1985)]

“There are three points of doctrine the belief of which forms the foundation of all morality. The first is the existence of God; the second is the immortality of the human soul; and the third is a future state of rewards and punishments. Suppose it possible for a man to disbelieve either of these three articles of faith and that man will have no conscience, he will have no other law than that of the tiger or the shark. The laws of man may bind him in chains or may put him to death, but they never can make him wise, virtuous, or happy.”

[John Quincy Adams, Letters of John Quincy Adams to His Son on the Bible and Its Teachings (Auburn: James M. Alden, 1850), pp. 22-23]

“The law given from Sinai was a civil and municipal as well as a moral and religious code; it contained many statutes . . . of universal application—laws essential to the existence of men in society, and most of which have been enacted by every nation which ever professed any code of laws.”

[John Quincy Adams, Letters of John Quincy Adams, to His Son, on the Bible and Its Teachings (Auburn: James M. Alden, 1850), p. 61]

“America is like a healthy body and its resistance is three-fold: its patriotism, its morality and its spiritual life. If we can undermine these three areas, America will collapse from within.”

11.9 Self Government⁶⁹

“All societies of men must be governed in some way or other. The less they may have of stringent State Government, the more they must have of individual self-government. The less they rely on public law or physical force, the more they must rely on private moral restraint. Men, in a word, must necessarily be controlled, either by a power within them, or by a power without them; either by the Word of God, or by the strong arm of man; either by the Bible, or by the bayonet. It may do for other countries and other governments to talk about the State supporting religion. Here, under our own free institutions, it is Religion which must support the State.”

[Robert Winthrop, To the Annual Meeting of the Massachusetts Bible Society, Boston, Mass; May 28, 1849]

Then all the elders of Israel gathered together and came to Samuel at Ramah, and said to him, “Look, you are old, and your sons do not walk in your ways. Now make us a king to judge us like all the nations [and be OVER them]”.

But the thing displeased Samuel when they said, “Give us a king to judge us.” So Samuel prayed to the Lord. And the Lord said to Samuel, “Heed the voice of the people in all that they say to you; for they have not rejected you, but they have rejected Me [God], that I should not reign over them. According to all the works which they have done since the day that I brought them up out of Egypt, even to this day—with which they have forsaken Me and served other gods [Kings, in this case]—so they are doing to you also [government becoming idolatry]. Now therefore, heed their voice. However, you shall solemnly forewarn them, and show them the behavior of the king who will reign over them.”

So Samuel told all the words of the LORD to the people who asked him for a king. And he said, “This will be the behavior of the king who will reign over you: He will take [STEAL] your sons and appoint them for his own chariots and to be his horsemen, and some will run before his chariots. He will appoint captains over his thousands and captains over his fifties, will set some to plow his ground and reap his harvest, and some to make his weapons of war and equipment for his chariots. He will take [STEAL] your daughters to be perfumers, cooks, and bakers. And he will take [STEAL] the best of your fields, your vineyards, and your olive groves, and give them to his servants. He will take [STEAL] a tenth of your grain and your vintage, and give it to his officers and servants. And he will take [STEAL] your male servants, your female servants, your finest young men, and your donkeys, and put them to his work [as SLAVES]. He will take [STEAL] a tenth of your sheep. And you will be his servants. And you will cry out in that day because of your king whom you have chosen for yourselves, and the LORD will not hear you in that day.”

Nevertheless the people refused to obey the voice of Samuel; and they said, “No, but we will have a king over us, that we also may be like all the nations, and that our king may judge us and go out before us and fight our battles.”

[1 Sam. 8:4-20, Bible, NKJV]

“The determination of the Framers Convention and the ratifying conventions to preserve complete and unimpaired state [and personal] self-government in all matters not committed to the general government is one of the plainest facts which emerges from the history of their deliberations. And adherence to that determination is incumbent equally upon the federal government and the states. State powers can neither be appropriated on the one hand nor abdicated on the other. As this court said in Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 700, 725, 'The preservation of the States, and the maintenance of their governments, are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the National government. The Constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States.' Every journey to a forbidden end begins with the first step; and the danger of such a step by the federal government in the direction of taking over the powers of the states is that the end of the journey may find the states so despoiled of their powers, or-what may amount to the same thing-so [298 U.S. 238, 296] relieved of the responsibilities which possession of the powers necessarily enjoins, as to reduce them to little more than geographical subdivisions of the national domain. It is safe to say that if, when the Constitution was under consideration, it had been thought that any such danger lurked behind its plain words, it would never have been ratified. “

[Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238 (1936)]

"The care of every man's soul belongs to himself. But what if he neglect the care of it? Well what if he neglect the care of his health or his estate, which would more nearly relate to the state. Will the magistrate make a law that he not be poor or sick? Laws provide against injury from others; but not from ourselves. God himself will not save men against their wills."

[Thomas Jefferson]

"Sometimes it is said that man cannot be trusted with the government of himself. Can he, then, be trusted with the government of others? Or have we found angels in the forms of kings to govern him? Let history answer this question."

[Thomas Jefferson]

"That government is best which governs the least, because its people discipline themselves."

[Thomas Jefferson]

"I never submitted the whole system of my opinions to the creed of any party of men whatever, in religion, in philosophy, in politics or in anything else, where I was capable of thinking for myself. Such an addiction is the last degradation of a free and moral agent. If I could not go to Heaven but with a party, I would not go there at all."

[Thomas Jefferson]

"I swear by my life and my love for it that I will never live for the sake of another man or ask another man to live for mine."

[Ayn Rand, Atlas Shrugged, character "John Galt"]

"We propose a five-word constitutional amendment: There shall be open borders. People are the great resource, and so long as we keep our economy free, more people means more growth, the more the merrier. Study after study shows that even the most recent immigrants give more than they take."

[Wall Street Journal]

“[I]t is impossible that any people of government should ever prosper, where men render not unto God, that which is God's, as well as to Caesar, that which is Caesar's.”

[Fundamental Constitutions of Pennsylvania, 1682. Written by William Penn, founder of the colony of Pennsylvania.]

11.10 Government and Politics⁷⁰

"To be governed is to be watched over, inspected, spied on, directed, legislated, regimented, closed in, indoctrinated, preached at, controlled, assessed, evaluated, censored, commanded; all by creatures that have neither the right, nor wisdom, nor virtue . . .

To be governed means that at every move, operation, or transaction one is noted, registered, entered in a census, taxed, stamped, priced, assessed, patented, licensed, authorized, recommended, admonished, prevented, reformed, set right, corrected. Government means to be subjected to tribute, trained, ransomed, exploited, monopolized, extorted, pressured, mystified, robbed; all in the name of public utility and the general good.

Then, at the first sign of resistance or word of complaint, one is repressed, fined, despised, vexed, pursued, hustled, beaten up, garroted, imprisoned, shot, machine-gunned, judged, sentenced, deported, sacrificed, sold, betrayed, and to cap it all, ridiculed, mocked, outraged, and dishonored. That is government, that is its justice and its morality! . . . O human personality! How can it be that you have cowered in such subjection for sixty centuries?"

[Pierre-Joseph Proudhon (born A. D. 1809 - died A. D. 1865)]

"Keep in mind, all of the Founding Fathers hated democracy – Thomas Jefferson was a partial exception, but only partial. For the most part, they hated democracy. The principles of the Founding Fathers were rather nicely expressed by John Jay, the head of the Constitutional Convention and the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. His favorite maxim was, "The people who own the country ought to govern it" -that's the principle on which the United States was founded. The major framer of the Constitution, James Madison, emphasized very clearly in the debates at the Constitutional Convention in 1787 that the whole system must be designed, as he put it, "to protect the minority of the opulent from the majority" -that's the primary purpose of the government, he said."

Yet it shall not be so among you; but whoever desires to become great among you shall be your servant. ⁴⁴ And whoever of you desires to be first shall be slave of all. For even the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His life a ransom for many."

“Government is established for the protection of the weak against the strong. This is the principal, if not the sole motive for the establishment of all legitimate government. It is only the weaker party that lose their liberties, when a government becomes oppressive. The stronger party, in all governments are free by virtue of their superior strength. They never oppress themselves. Legislation is the work of this stronger party; and if, in addition to the sole power of legislation, they have the sole power of determining what legislation shall be enforced, they have all power in their hands, and the weaker party are the subjects of an absolute government. Unless the weaker party have a veto, they have no power whatever in the government and...no liberties... The trial by jury is the only institution that gives the weaker party any veto upon the power of the stronger. Consequently it is the only institution that gives them any effective voice in the government, or any guaranty against oppression.”

“Americans have the government officials they deserve. Our society openly castigates the Almighty, thus making tolerable judicial pronouncements like that of today (6-26-02, Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals declared the national pledge unconstitutional because it used the phrase “one nation under God”) which banished God from our national pledge. The darkness of night follows the light of day, and similarly when any nation shakes its angry fist at the maker of the universe, it can expect the withdrawal of divine protection. Conditions are now riper for a strike by our national tormenters. Those who disdain our sacred pledge are no better than our enemies.”

[Larry Becraft, Attorney]

“GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCEMENT April 15, 20__ . [Washington, D.C.] The federal government announced today that it is changing its emblem from an eagle to a condom, because that more clearly reflects its political stance. "Corporations are also of all grades, and made for varied objects; all governments are corporations, created by usage and common consent, or grants and charters which create a body politic for prescribed purposes; but whether they are private, local or general, in their objects, for the enjoyment of property, or the exercise of power, they are all governed by the same rules of law, as to the construction and the obligation of the instrument by which the incorporation is made. One universal rule of law protects persons and property. It is a fundamental principle of the common law of England, that the term freemen of the kingdom, includes 'all persons, ecclesiastical and temporal, incorporate, politique or natural; it is a part of their magna charta (2 Inst. 4), and is incorporated into our institutions. The persons of the members of corporations are on the same footing of protection as other persons, and their corporate property secured by the same laws which protect that of individuals. 2 Inst. 46-7. 'No man shall be taken, 'no man shall be disseised, without due process of law, is a principle taken from magna charta, infused into all our state constitutions, and is made inviolable by the federal government, by the amendments to the constitution."

Still one thing more, fellow citizens--a wise and frugal Government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned. This is the sum of good government, and this is necessary to close the circle of our felicities."

"Preach the Word; be prepared in season and out of season [by diligent study of this book and God's Word]; correct, rebuke and encourage—with great patience and careful instruction. For the time will come when men [in the legal profession or the judiciary] will not put up with sound [legal] doctrine [such as that found in this book]. Instead, to suit their own desires, they [our covetous public dis-servants] will gather around them a great number of teachers [court-appointed "experts", "licensed" government whores called attorneys and CPA's, and educators in government-run or subsidized public schools and liberal universities] to say what their itching ears want to hear. [Marcus Tullius Cicero - (106-43 B.C.) Roman Statesman, Philosopher and Orator]

"No man survives when freedom fails, The best men rot in filthy jails, And those who cry 'appease, appease' Are hanged by those they tried to please.”: Hiram Mann “If we fail to check the power of the judiciary, I predict that we will eventually live under judicial tyranny.”

[Patrick Henry]

“Knowledge will forever govern ignorance; and a people who mean to be their own governors must arm themselves with the power which knowledge gives: “
[James Madison]

“When even one American—who has done nothing wrong—is forced by fear to shut his mind and close his mouth—then all Americans are in peril. “
[Harry S. Truman]

“I am a firm believer in the people. If given the truth, they can be depended upon to meet any national crisis. The great point is to bring them the real facts. “
[Abraham Lincoln]

"Justice will not be served until those who are unaffected are as outraged as those who are."
[Benjamin Franklin]

“One of the greatest shortcomings in contemporary society is the inability of many to distinguish between right and wrong, between good and evil, as well as the lack of the spirit to fight against injustice. Fundamentally, peace and our humanity must be backed up by the spirit to challenge what is wrong. A peace that acquiesces to rampant iniquity represents the bleak stillness of a spiritual graveyard. Shutting one’s eyes to injustice is not tolerance; it is little more than cowardice and apathy. While ignoring wrongdoing may seem the easy way out, in the end it only brings unhappiness to all. The true mission of free speech is to uphold the spirit of justice and challenge inhumanity. “

"Patriotism means to stand by the country. It does not mean to stand by the President save to the degree in which he himself stands by the country. To stand by the country, means to stand by the principles on which our great Republic was founded and honor everyone's rights to self-determination and individualism."
[President Theodore Roosevelt]

"Aye, fight and you may die, run and you'll live, at least awhile. And dying in your beds many years from now, would you be willing to trade all the days from this day to that, for one chance, just one chance to come back here and tell our enemies that they may take our lives but they'll never take our freedom?"
[William Wallace, "Brave Heart"]

"Power concedes nothing without a demand. It never did, and it never will. Find out just what people will submit to, and you have found out the exact amount of injustice and wrong which will be imposed upon them, and these will continue till they have resisted with either words or blows, or with both. The limits of tyrants are prescribed by the endurance of those whom they suppress."
[Frederick Douglass]

"You have rights antecedent to all earthly governments; rights that cannot be repealed or restrained by human laws; rights derived from the Great Legislator of the Universe."
[John Adams]

"Patriotism means to stand by the country. It does not mean to stand by the President."
[Theodore Roosevelt]

"It is the greatest absurdity to suppose it in the power of one, or any number of men, at the entering into society, to renounce their essential natural rights, or the means of preserving those rights; when the grand end of civil government, from the very nature of its institution, is for the support, protection, and defence of those very rights; the principal of which, as is before observed, are Life, Liberty, and Property. If men, through fear, fraud, or mistake, should in terms renounce or give up any essential natural right, the eternal law of reason and the grand end of society would absolutely vacate such renunciation. The right to freedom being the gift of God Almighty, it is not in the power of man to alienate this gift and voluntarily become a slave."

[Samuel Adams, The Rights of the Colonists, November 20, 1772; <http://www.foundingfatherquotes.com/father/quotes/2>]

"We must never cease to proclaim in fearless tones the great principles of freedom and the rights of man which are the joint inheritance of the English-speaking world and which through Magna Carta, the Bill of Rights, the Habeas Corpus, trial by jury, and the English common law find their most famous expression in the American Declaration of Independence."

[Sir Winston Churchill, "The Sinews of Peace," address at Westminster College, Fulton, Missouri, March 5, 1946]

"All animals are created equal but some animals are more equal than others"

[George Orwell in "Animal Farm"]

"The lust for power, for dominating others, inflames the heart more than any other passion"

[Tacitus]

"I have never been able to conceive how any rational being could propose happiness to himself from the exercise of power over others."

[Thomas Jefferson to A. L. C. Destutt de Tracy, 1811]

"If ye love wealth better than liberty, the tranquility of servitude better than the animating contest of freedom, go home from us in peace; We ask not your counsels or your arms; Crouch down and lick the hands which feed you; May your chains set lightly upon you, and may posterity forget that ye were our countrymen."

[Samuel Adams]

"... God forbid we should ever be twenty years without such a rebellion. The people cannot be all, and always, well informed. The part which is wrong will be discontented, in proportion to the importance of the facts they misconceive. If they remain quiet under such misconceptions, it is lethargy, the forerunner of death to the public liberty ... And what country can preserve its liberties if its rulers are not warned from time to time, that this people preserve the spirit of resistance? Let them take arms. The remedy is to set them right as to the facts, pardon and pacify them. What signify a few lives lost in a century or two? The tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants. It is its natural manure."

[Thomas Jefferson. Nov. 13. 1787, letter to William S. Smith]

"The strength and power of despotism consists wholly in the fear of resistance."

[Thomas Paine]

"Enslave the liberty of but one human being and the liberties of the world are put in peril."

[William Garrison (1805-1879)]

"The God who gave us life gave us liberty at the same time ..."

[Thomas Jefferson in "A Bill for Establishing Religious Freedom" (1779)]

"You can only protect your liberties in this world by protecting the other man's freedom. You can only be free if I am free."

[Clarence Darrow (1857-1938)]

"God grants liberty only to those who love it and are always ready to guard and defend it."

[Daniel Webster]

"But our rulers can have no authority over such natural rights, only as we have submitted to them. The rights of conscience we never submitted, we could not submit. We are answerable for them to our God. The legitimate powers of government extend to such acts as are injurious to others."

[Thomas Jefferson in "Notes on Virginia"]

"Liberty is one of the most precious gifts which heaven has bestowed on man; with it we cannot compare the treasures which the earth contains or the sea conceals; for liberty, as for honor, we can and ought to risk our lives; and, on the other hand, captivity is the greatest evil that can befall man."

[Miguel De Cervantes (1547-1616)]

"Bad laws are the worst sort of tyranny."
[Edmund Burke (1729-1797)]

"Freedom hath a thousands charms to show, that slaves however contented never know."
[William Cowper (1731-1800)]

"The only freedom which deserves the name is that of pursuing our own good, in our own way, so long as we do not attempt to deprive others of theirs, or impede their efforts to obtain it."
[John Stuart Mill]

"The true danger is when liberty is nibbled away, for expedients, and by parts ... the only thing necessary for evil to triumph is for good men to do nothing."
[Edmund Burke]

"The tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants."
[Thomas Jefferson]

"Guard with jealous attention the public liberty. Suspect everyone who approaches that jewel. Unfortunately, nothing will preserve it but downright force. Whenever you give up that force, you are ruined."
[Patrick Henry]

"God grant that not only the love of liberty but a thorough knowledge of the rights of man may pervade all the nations of the earth, so that a philosopher may set his foot anywhere on its surface and say: 'This is my country.'"
[Benjamin Franklin, letter to David Hartley, December 4, 1789]

"Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains or slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take but as for me; give me liberty or give me death!"
[Patrick Henry]

"Those who profess to favor freedom, and yet depreciate agitation, are men who want crops without plowing up the ground. They want rain without thunder and lightning. They want the ocean without the awful roar of its waters. This struggle may be a moral one; or it may be a physical one; or it may be both moral and physical; but it must be a struggle! Power concedes nothing without a demand. It never did, and it never will. Find out just what people will submit to, and you have found out the exact amount of injustice and wrong which will be imposed upon them; and these will continue until they are resisted with either words or blows, or with both. The limits of tyrants are prescribed by the endurance of those whom they oppress."
[Frederick Douglass, August 4, 1857]

"... it does not require a majority to prevail, but rather an irate, tireless minority keen to set brush fires in people's minds ..."
[Samuel Adams]

"The people who had once bestowed commands, consulships, legions, and all else now longs eagerly for just two things, bread and circus games.."
[Juvenal, poet, upon observing the decline of the Roman empire]

"The real destroyers of the liberties of any people is he who spreads among them bounties, donation and largesse.."
[Plutarch, Greek historian]

"Four boxes to be used in defense of liberty: soap, ballot, jury, ammo - use in that order."
[Ed Howdershelt]

"America will never be destroyed from the outside. If we falter and lose our freedoms, it will be because we destroyed ourselves."
[Abraham Lincoln]

"Resistance to tyrants is obedience to God."
[Thomas Jefferson]

"Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto the inhabitants thereof."
[Leviticus 25:10 (inscription on the Liberty Bell)]

"The independence and liberty you possess are the work of ... joint efforts, of common dangers, suffering and successes."
[George Washington]

"They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety."
[Benjamin Franklin]

"Experience should teach us to be most on our guard to protect liberty when the Government's purposes are beneficent. Men born to freedom are naturally alert to repel invasion of their liberty by evil-minded rulers. The greatest dangers to liberty lurk in insidious encroachment by men of zeal, well-meaning but without understanding."
[Justice Louis D. Brandeis, dissenting, Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438 (1928)]

"He that would make his own liberty secure must guard even his enemy from oppression; for if he violates this duty he establishes a precedent that will reach to himself."
[Thomas Paine]

"I often wonder whether we do not rest our hopes too much upon constitutions, upon law and upon courts. These are false hopes, believe me, these are false hopes. Liberty lies in the hearts of men and women; when it dies there, no constitution, no law, no court can save it; no constitution, no law, no court can even do much to help it. While it lies there it needs no constitution, no law, no courts to save it."
[Judge Learned Hand, from "The Deficiencies of Trials to Reach the Heart of the Matter", in 3 "Lectures On Legal Topics" 89, 105 (1926), quoted in Fred R. Shapiro, "The Oxford Dictionary Of American Legal Quotations" 304 (1993)]

"The preservation of the sacred fire of liberty and the destiny of the republican model of government are justly considered ... deeply, ... finally, staked on the experiment entrusted to the hands of the American people."
[George Washington, First Inaugural Address, Apr. 30, 1789]

"The right to freedom being the gift of God, it is not in the power of man to alienate this gift and voluntarily become a slave."
[Samuel Adams]

"Single acts of tyranny may be ascribed to the accidental opinion of a day. But a series of oppressions, ... pursued unalterably through every change of ministers, too plainly proves a deliberate systematic plan of reducing us to slavery."
[Thomas Jefferson]

"I believe that there are more instances of the abridgment of the freedom of the people by gradual and silent encroachment of those in power than by violent and sudden usurpations."
[James Madison]

"I have sworn upon the altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man."
[Thomas Jefferson]

"It is when a people forget God that tyrants forge their chains..."
[Patrick Henry]

"They who say all men are equal speak an undoubted truth, if they mean that all have an equal right to liberty; to their property, and to their protection of the laws. But they are mistaken if they think men are equal in their station and employments, since they are not so by their talents."
[Voltaire]

"There is no liberty to men who know not how to govern themselves."
[Henry Ward Beecher]

"Courage, then, my countrymen, our contest is not only whether we ourselves shall be free, but whether there shall be left to mankind an asylum on earth for civil and religious liberty."
[Samuel Adams]

"Dear Fellow American Patriot, When this country was in its very infancy, our Founding Fathers pledged their fortunes, their sacred honor, indeed their very lives to stand against tyranny. These men and their families led us on to victory. Historians have calculated the total membership of these true heroes to be only 3% of the country at that time. To these men, Liberty was worth more than life itself. The nation that was born from their sacrifices has never since been duplicated in the history of the world. Our nation is once again in peril of losing its very essence to tyrants who would steal from us the life blood that has made our country great. It is by the grace of Almighty God that you have been chosen to join with us in the fight to restore our Nation back to its original greatness; back to a Nation where wo/men are free to believe as they choose, work for themselves and prosper according to their efforts and faith - where Rights are again protected by Law, not ignored or destroyed by the policies of bureaucrats. So welcome brothers and sisters! Knowing that resistance to tyranny is obedience to God, I am honored to call you my countrymen. May God Bless you!"

[Thomas Brissey, St. Simons Island, Georgia, Independent Representative for the Save-A-Patriot Fellowship]

"The evils of tyranny are rarely seen but by him who resists it."

[John Hay, 1872]

"In the beginning of a change, the patriot is a scarce man; brave, hated, and scorned. When his cause succeeds, however, the timid join him, for then it costs nothing to be a patriot."

[Samuel Clemens, author who wrote under the nom de plume, Mark Twain]

"To sin by silence when they should protest makes cowards of men."

[Abraham Lincoln]

"It's the action, not the fruit of the action, that's important. You have to do the right thing. It may not be in your power, it may not be in your time, that there'll be any fruit. But that doesn't mean you stop doing the right thing. You may never know what results come from your action. But if you do nothing, there will be no result."

[Gandhi]

"In Germany, they came first for the Communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the Trade Unionists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Trade Unionist. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Then they came for me, and by that time, no one was left to speak up."

"It will, I believe, everywhere be found, that as the clergy are, or are not what they ought to be, so are the rest of the nation"

[Jane Austen]

"... there is much truth in the Italian saying, 'Make yourselves sheep, and the wolves will eat you.'"

[Benjamin Franklin]

"As life is action and passion, it is required of a man that he be part of the action and passion of his times lest he be judged never to have lived."

[Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr.]

"A nation can survive its fools, and even the ambitious. But it cannot survive treason from within. An enemy at the gates is less formidable, for he is known and carries his banners openly. But the traitor moves amongst those within the gate freely, his sly whispers rustling through all the alleys, heard in the very halls of government itself. For the traitor appears not a traitor; he speaks in accents familiar to his victims, and he wears their face and their garments, and he appeals to the baseness that lies deep in the hearts of all men. He rots the soul of a nation, he works secretly and unknown in the night to undermine the pillars of a city, he infects the body politic so that it can no longer resist. A murderer is less to be feared"

[Marcus Tullius Cicero 42 BC]

"Do not be afraid of your enemies - in the worst case they can kill you; Do not be afraid of your friends - in the worst case they can betray you; Be afraid of the indifferent ones: it is from their silent blessings that all the evil is happening in the world!"

[Bruno Yasensky, Russian writer.]

"We have it in our power to begin the world again"

[Thomas Paine in "Common Sense" (1776)]

"First they came for the Communists, and I didn't speak up, because I wasn't a Communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up, because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up, because I was a Protestant. Then they came for me, and by that time there was no one left to speak up for me"

[Pastor Martin Neimoller: Concentration camp Survivor]

"In the first place we should insist that if the immigrant who comes here in good faith becomes an American and assimilates himself to us, he shall be treated on an exact equality with everyone else, for it is an outrage to discriminate against any such man because of creed, or birthplace, or origin. But this is predicated upon the man's becoming in very fact an American, and nothing but an American...There can be no divided allegiance here. Any man who says he is an American, but something else also, isn't an American at all. We have room for but one flag, the American flag, and this excludes the red flag, which symbolizes all wars against liberty and civilization, just as much as it excludes any foreign flag of a nation to which we are hostile...We have room for but one language here, and that is the English language...and we have room for but one sole loyalty and that is a loyalty to the American people."

[Theodore Roosevelt 1907]

"The government consists of a gang of men exactly like you and me. They have, taking one with another, no special talent for the business of government; they have only a talent for getting and holding office. Their principal device to that end is to search out groups who pant and pine for something they can't get and to promise to give it to them. Nine times out of ten that promise is worth nothing. The tenth time is made good by looting A to satisfy B. In other words, government is a broker in pillage, and every election is sort of an advance auction sale of stolen goods."

[H.L. Mencken]

"[W]hat more is necessary to make us a happy and prosperous people? ... a wise and frugal government ... which shall leave [men] free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned ... We must make our choice between economy and liberty or profusion and servitude ... If we can prevent government from wasting the labors of the people, under the pretense of caring for them, the people will be happy."

[Thomas Jefferson]

"Governments, whatever their pretensions otherwise, try to preserve themselves by holding the individual down ... Government itself, indeed, may be reasonably defined as a conspiracy against him. Its one permanent aim, whatever its form, is to hobble him sufficiently to maintain itself."

[H.L. Mencken, author]

"No provision in our Constitution ought to be dearer to man than that which protects the rights of conscience against the power of its public functionaries..."

[Thomas Jefferson in a letter to the Methodist Episcopal Church at New London, Connecticut, Feb. 4, 1809]

"I think we have more machinery of government than is necessary, too many parasites living on the labor of the industrious."

[Thomas Jefferson Letter to William Ludlow, 1824]

"Government big enough to supply everything you need is big enough to take everything you have ... The course of history shows that as a government grows, liberty decreases."

[Thomas Jefferson]

"We are taxed in our bread and our wine, in our incomes and our investments, on our land and on our property not only for base creatures who do not deserve the name of men, but for foreign nations, complaisant nations who will bow to us and accept our largesse and promise us to assist in the keeping of the peace - these mendicant nations who will destroy us when we show a moment of weakness or our treasury is bare, and surely it is becoming bare! We are taxed to maintain legions on their soil, in the name of law and order and the Pax Romana, a document which will fall into dust when it pleases our allies and our vassals. We keep them in precarious balance only with our gold. Is the heart blood of our nation worth these? Were they bound to us with ties of love, they would not ask our gold. They take our very flesh, and they hate and despise us. And who shall say we are worthy of more? ... When a government becomes powerful it is destructive, extravagant and violent; it is an usurer which takes bread from innocent mouths and deprives honorable men of their substance, for votes with which to perpetuate itself."

[Cicero, 54 B.C.]

"If ever time should come, when vain and aspiring men shall possess the highest seats in Government, our country will stand in need of its experienced patriots to prevent its ruin."

[Samuel Adams]

"It is not the function of our government to keep the citizen from falling into error; it is the function of the citizen to keep the government from falling into error."

[United States Supreme Court - American Communications Association v. Douds]

"... the intent of the lawmaker is to be found in the language that he has used."

[United States Supreme Court in U.S. v. Goldberg (1897)]

"Our government is the potent, the omnipresent teacher. For good or for ill, it teaches the whole people by example. Crime is contagious. If the government becomes a lawbreaker, it breeds contempt for the law; it invites every man to become a law unto himself."

[Louis D. Brandeis, former Supreme Court Justice]

"It is inherent in government's right, if necessary, to lie ... that seems to me basic - basic."

[Arthur Sylvester, former Assistant Secretary of Defense]

"When all government, in little as in great things, shall be drawn to Washington as the Center of all Power, it will render powerless the checks provided of one government on another and will become as venal and oppressive as the government from which we separated."

[Thomas Jefferson (1821) in a letter to Gideon Granger]

"In politics, nothing happens by accident. If it happens, it was planned that way."

[Franklin D. Roosevelt]

"The whole aim of practical politics is to keep the populace alarmed -- and thus clamorous to be led to safety -- by menacing it with an endless series of hobgoblins, all of them imaginary."

[H.L. Mencken]

"I have never seen more Senators express discontent with their jobs ... we have been accomplices to doing something terrible and unforgivable to this wonderful country ... we have given our children a legacy of bankruptcy. We have defrauded our country to get ourselves elected."

[John Danforth, Republican Senator from Missouri, in an interview in The Arizona Republic on April 22, 1992]

"An election is nothing more than the advanced auction of stolen goods.."

[Ambrose Bierce]

"We can no more blame our loss of freedom on congressmen than we can prostitution on pimps. Both simply provide broker services for their customers."

[Dr. Walter Williams]

"When I feel the heat, I see the light."

[Senator Everett Dirksen]

"Politics is the art of seeking trouble, finding it everywhere, diagnosing it incorrectly and applying the wrong remedies."

[Groucho Marx]

"Thank God we don't get all the government we pay for."

[Frank Chodorov]

"Politicians are the same all over. They promise to build a bridge where there is no river."

[Nikita Khrushchev]

"Frankfurter has been furnishing most of the legal brains for the outfit, and it is said that no legal position of any consequence can be secured by any lawyer in the present administration without it has first had the approval of Frankfurter. And it is a startling fact, in connection with this, that most of the legal advisers, especially in key positions, are Jews. Felix Frankfurter's adept student and protégé, Jerome N. Frank, general counsel of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, delivered an address before the Association of American Law Schools, thirty-first annual meeting, at Chicago, December 30, 1933, on Experimental Jurisprudence and the New Deal. "

Therefore, in the promulgation of the various codes affecting industry and agriculture throughout the country, they have sought to compel, browbeat, and bulldoze the business interests of this country to engage in private contract so that they would have the power to require the business interests of the Nation to do their wishes regardless of the Constitution.

"The —new-deal lawyers now have no hesitancy in appearing in court and asserting that private citizens can contract away their constitutional rights. It has been through this method that they have broken down State lines and invaded the most private affairs of our citizens. It will be through this method, for instance, that the little retailer of the country will be driven out of business and chain-store-system control by them put into operation, just as they are attempting in England."

[Congressman Louis T. McFadden, Congressional Record, Friday, June 8th, 1934]

"A reading of this address shows the contempt of the Frankfurter lawyers for the Constitution of the land and an expressed determination to obviate and avoid constitutional barriers in their administration of the Nation's affairs. Those in charge of the plan and its administration in the United States have for years considered methods for accomplishing their ends without regard to the Constitution of the United States. They recognize the fact that the National Industrial Recovery Act did not give them all of the power they desired in order to break down the barriers enacted in our Constitution, preserving certain rights to the various States of the Union, as well as other features.

[Congressman Louis T. McFadden in Congress; from the Congressional Record, Friday, June 8th, 1934]

11.11 Democracy vs. Republic . . .

"Republican government. One in which the powers of sovereignty are vested in the people and are exercised by the people, either directly, or through representatives chosen by the people, to whom those powers are specially delegated.

In re Duncan, 139 U.S. 449, 11 S.Ct. 573, 36 L.Ed. 219; Minor v. Happersett, 88 U.S. \(21 Wall.\) 162, 22 L.Ed. 627."

important special limitations: This, I say, is generally the case, for it has not been so universally. But in a Republic, all the citizens, as such, are equal, and no citizen can rightfully exercise any authority over another, but in virtue of a power constitutionally given by the whole community, and such authority when exercised, is in effect an act of the whole community which forms such body politic. In such governments, therefore, the sovereignty resides in the great body of the people, but it resides in them not as so many distinct individuals, but in their politic capacity only."

[Penhallow v. Doane's, 3 U.S. 54, 3 Dall. 54, 1 L.Ed. 507 (1795)]

"A democracy is a sheep and two wolves deciding on what to have for lunch. Freedom is a well armed sheep contesting the results of the decision."

[Benjamin Franklin]

"REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT. A government in the republican form; a government of the people; a government by representatives chosen by the people. Cooley, Const. Law 194."

[Black's Law Dictionary, 1891]

"The legacy of Democrats and Republicans approaches: Libertarianism by bankruptcy."

[Nick Nuessle, 1992]

"A democracy cannot exist as a permanent form of government. It can only exist until the voters discover that they can vote themselves money from the Public Treasury. From that moment on, the majority always votes for the candidate promising the most benefits from the Public Treasury with the result that a democracy always collapses over loose fiscal policy always followed by dictatorship."

["The Decline and Fall of the Athenian Republic", by Alexander Fraser Tytler]

"Democracy is the theory that the common people know what they want, and deserve to get it good and hard."

[H.L. Mencken]

"There is no underestimating the intelligence of the American public."

[H.L. Mencken]

"Democracy is a form of government that cannot long survive, for as soon as the people learn that they have a voice in the fiscal policies of the government, they will move to vote for themselves all the money in the treasury, and bankrupt the nation."

[Karl Marx, 1848 author of "The Communist Manifesto"]

"Democracy will envy all, endeavour to pull down all, and when by chance it happens to get the upper hand, it will be revengeful, bloody and cruel."

[President John Adams]

"If a nation values anything more than freedom, it will lose its freedom; and the irony of it is that if it is comfort or money that it values more, it will lose that too."

"I pledge allegiance to the flag, and to the Republic for which it stands"
[United States Pledge of Allegiance]

"Democracies have ever been spectacles of turbulence and contention; have ever been found incompatible with personal security or the rights of property; and have in general been as short in their lives as they have been violent in their deaths."
[James Madison]

"Liberty has never lasted long in a democracy, nor has it ever ended in anything better than despotism."
[Fisher Ames (1758 - 1808)]

"Every individual necessarily labors to render the annual revenue of society as great as he can. He generally neither intends to promote the public interest, nor knows how much he is promoting it. He intends only his own gain, and he is, in this, as in many other cases, led by an invisible hand to promote an end which was not part of his intention."
[Adam Smith, Wealth of Nations]

"People who object to weapons aren't abolishing violence, they're begging for rule by brute force, when the biggest, strongest animals among men were always automatically 'right.' Guns ended that, and social democracy is a hollow farce without an armed populace to make it work."
[L. Neil Smith, The Probability Broach]

11.12 The Constitution ...

"[W]e have no government armed with power capable of contending with human passions unbridled by morality and religion. . . . Our constitution was made only for a moral and religious people. It is wholly inadequate to the government of any other."

"But where the conduct or fact, the existence of which is made the basis of the statutory presumption, itself falls within the scope of a provision of the Federal Constitution, a further question arises. It is apparent that a constitutional prohibition cannot be transgressed indirectly by the creation of a statutory presumption any more than it can be violated by direct enactment. The power to create presumptions is not a means of escape from constitutional restrictions. And the state may not in this way interfere with matters withdrawn from its authority by the Federal Constitution, or subject an accused to conviction for conduct which it is powerless to proscribe."
[Bailey v. State of Alabama, 219 U.S. 219 (1911)]

"Independent of these views, there are many considerations which lead to the conclusion that the power to impair contracts [either the Constitution or the Holy Bible], by direct action to that end, does not exist with the general [federal] government. In the first place, one of the objects of the Constitution, expressed in its preamble, was the establishment of justice, and what that meant in its relations to contracts is not left, as was justly said by the late Chief Justice, in Hepburn v. Griswold, to inference or conjecture. As he observes, at the time the Constitution was undergoing discussion in the convention, the Congress of the Confederation was engaged in framing the ordinance for the government of the Northwestern Territory, in which certain articles of compact were established between the people of the original States and the people of the Territory, for the purpose, as expressed in the instrument, of extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, upon which the States, their laws and constitutions, were erected. By that ordinance it was declared, that, in the just preservation of rights and property, 'no law ought ever to be made, or have force in the said Territory, that shall, in any manner, interfere with or affect private contracts or engagements bona fide and without fraud previously formed.' The same provision, adds the Chief Justice, found more condensed expression in the prohibition upon the States [in Article 1, Section 10 of the Constitution] against impairing the obligation of contracts, which has ever been recognized as an efficient safeguard against injustice; and though the prohibition is not applied in terms to the government of the United States, he expressed the opinion, speaking for himself and the majority of the court at the time, that it was clear 'that those who framed and those who adopted the Constitution intended that the spirit of this prohibition should pervade the entire body of legislation, and that the justice which the Constitution was ordained to establish was not thought by them to be compatible with legislation [or judicial precedent] of an opposite tendency.' 8 Wall. 623. "Indeed, the practical interpretation put by Congress upon the Constitution has been long continued and uniform to the effect [182 U.S. 244, 279] that the Constitution is applicable to territories acquired by purchase or conquest, only when and so far as Congress shall so direct. Notwithstanding its duty to 'guarantee to every state in this Union a republican form of government' (art. 4, 4), by which we understand, according to the definition of Webster, 'a government in which the supreme power resides in the whole body of the people, and is exercised by representatives elected by them, Congress did not hesitate, in the original organization of the territories of Louisiana, Florida, the Northwest Territory, and its subdivisions of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin and still more recently in the case of Alaska, to establish a form of government bearing a much greater analogy to a British Crown colony than a republican state of America, and to vest the legislative power either in a governor and council, or a governor and judges, to be appointed by the President. It was not until they had attained a certain population that power was given them to organize a legislature by vote of the people. In all these cases, as well as in territories subsequently organized west of the Mississippi, Congress thought it necessary either to extend to Constitution and laws of the United States over them, or to declare that the inhabitants should be entitled to enjoy the right of trial by jury, of bail, and of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, as well as other privileges of the bill of rights.'" 11.13 First Amendment and Freedom of Speech

Sovereignty and Freedom Points and Authorities

"...The constitutional rights of those spreading their religious beliefs through the spoken and printed word are not to be gauged by standards governing retailers or wholesalers of books. The right to use the press for expressing one's views is not to be measured by the protection afforded commercial handbills. It should be remembered that the pamphlets of Thomas Paine were not distributed free of charge. It is plain that a religious organization needs funds to remain a going concern. But an itinerant evangelist, however misguided or intolerant he may be, does not become a mere book agent by selling the Bible or religious tracts to help defray his expenses or to sustain him. Freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion are available to all, not merely to those who can pay their own way..."

[Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105 (1943)]

"Anonymous pamphlets, leaflets, brochures and even books have played an important role in the progress of mankind." Talley v. California, 362 U.S. 60, 64 (1960). Great works of literature have frequently been produced by authors writing under assumed names. 4 Despite readers' curiosity and the public's interest in identifying the creator of a work of art, an author generally is free to decide whether or not to disclose her true identity. The decision in favor of anonymity may be motivated by fear of economic or official retaliation, by concern about social ostracism, or merely by a desire to preserve as much of one's privacy as possible. Whatever the motivation may be, at least in the field of literary endeavor, the interest in having anonymous works enter the marketplace of ideas unquestionably outweighs any public interest in requiring disclosure as a condition of entry. 5 Accordingly, an author's decision to remain anonymous, like other decisions concerning omissions or additions to the content of a publication, is an aspect of the freedom of speech protected by the First Amendment.

The freedom to publish anonymously extends beyond the literary realm. In Talley, the Court held that the First Amendment protects the distribution of unsigned handbills urging readers to boycott certain Los Angeles merchants who were allegedly engaging in discriminatory employment practices. 362 U.S. 60. Writing for the Court, Justice Black noted that "[p]ersecuted groups and sects from time to time throughout history have been able to criticize oppressive practices and laws either anonymously or not at all." Id., at 64. Justice Black recalled England's abusive press licensing laws and seditious libel prosecutions, and he reminded us that even the arguments favoring the ratification of the Constitution advanced in the Federalist Papers were published under fictitious names. Id., at 64-65. On occasion, quite apart from any threat of persecution, an advocate may believe her ideas will be more persuasive if her readers are unaware of her identity. Anonymity thereby provides a way for a writer who may be personally unpopular to ensure that readers will not prejudge her message simply because they do not like its proponent. Thus, even in the field of political rhetoric, where "the identity of the speaker is an important component of many attempts to persuade," City of Ladue v. Gilleo, 512 U.S. 43, 56 (1994) (footnote omitted), the most effective advocates have sometimes opted for anonymity. The specific holding in Talley related to advocacy of an economic boycott, but the Court's reasoning embraced a respected tradition of anonymity in the advocacy of political causes. 6 This tradition is perhaps best exemplified by the secret ballot, the hard-won right to vote one's conscience without fear of retaliation."

Moreover, freedom of thought and expression "includes both the right to speak freely and the right to refrain from speaking at all." Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 714, 97 S.Ct. 1428, 1435, 51 L.Ed.2d. 752 (1977) (BURGER, C.J.). We do not suggest this right not to speak would sanction abuse of the copyright owner's monopoly as an instrument to suppress facts. But in the words of New York's Chief Judge Fuld:

"The essential thrust of the First Amendment is to prohibit improper restraints on the voluntary public expression of ideas; it shields the man who wants to speak or publish when others wish him to be quiet. There is necessarily, and within suitably defined areas, a concomitant freedom not to speak publicly, one which serves the same ultimate end as freedom of speech in its affirmative aspect." Estate of Hemingway v. Random House, Inc., 23 N.Y.2d. 341, 348, 296 N.Y.S.2d. 771, 776, 244 N.E.2d. 250, 255 (1968).

[Rutter Group California Practice Guide: Civil Procedure Before Trial, paragraph 9:525, Rev 31 2005]

Anonymous pamphlets, leaflets, brochures and even books have played an important role in the progress of mankind.

Persecuted groups and sects from time to time throughout history have been able to criticize oppressive practices and laws either anonymously or not at all. The obnoxious press licensing law of England, which was also enforced on the Colonies was due in part to the knowledge that exposure of the names of printers, writers and distributors would lessen the circulation of literature critical of the government. The old seditious libel cases in England show the lengths to which government had to go to find out who was responsible for books that were obnoxious [362 U.S. 60, 65] to the rulers. John Lilburne was whipped, pilloried and fined for refusing to answer questions designed to get evidence to convict him or someone else for the secret distribution of books in England. Two Puritan Ministers, John Penry and John Udal, were sentenced to death on charges that they were responsible for writing, printing or publishing books. 6 Before the Revolutionary War colonial patriots frequently had to conceal their authorship or distribution of literature that easily could have brought down on them prosecutions by English-controlled courts. Along about that time the Letters of Junius were written and the identity of their author is unknown to this day. 7 Even the Federalist Papers, written in favor of the adoption of our Constitution, were published under fictitious names. It is plain that anonymity has sometimes been assumed for the most constructive purposes.

We have recently had occasion to hold in two cases that there are times and circumstances when States may not compel members of groups engaged in the dissemination of ideas to be publicly identified. Bates v. Little Rock, 361 U.S. 516; N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 462. The reason for those holdings was that identification and fear of reprisal might deter perfectly peaceful discussions of public matters of importance. This broad Los Angeles ordinance is subject to the same infirmity. We hold that it, like the Griffin, Georgia, ordinance, is void on its face. [362 U.S. 60, 66] [Talley v. California, 362 U.S. 60 (1960)]

Just as there is freedom to speak, to associate, and to believe, so there is freedom not to speak, associate, or believe. "The right to speak and the right to refrain from speaking are complementary components of the broader concept of 'individual freedom of mind.'" Wooley v. Maynard (1977). Freedom of conscience dictates that no individual be forced to espouse ideological causes with which he disagrees: "[A]t the heart of the First Amendment is the notion that the individual should be free to believe as he will, and that in a free society one's beliefs should be shaped by his mind and by his conscience, rather than coerced by the State." Aboud v. Detroit Bd. Of Educ. (1977)
[First Amendment Law in a Nutshell, Second Edition, pp. 266-267, Jerome A Barron, West Group, 2000; ISBN 0-314-22677-X]

Like freedom of speech and a free press, the right of peaceable assembly was considered by the Framers of our Constitution to lie at the foundation of a government [361 U.S. 516, 523] based upon the consent of an informed citizenry - a government dedicated to the establishment of justice and the preservation of liberty. U.S. Const., Amend. I. And it is now beyond dispute that freedom of association for the purpose of advancing ideas and airing grievances is protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment from invasion by the States. De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353, 364; N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 460.

Freedoms such as these are protected not only against heavy-handed frontal attack, but also from being stifled by more subtle governmental interference. Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U.S. 233; Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105; American Communications Assn. v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382, 402; N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama, supra; Smith v. California, 361 U.S. 147. "It is hardly a novel perception that compelled disclosure of affiliation with groups engaged in advocacy may constitute [an] effective . . . restraint on freedom of association. . . . This Court has recognized the vital relationship between freedom to associate and privacy in one's associations. . . . Inviolability of privacy in group association may in many circumstances be indispensable to preservation of freedom of association, particularly where a group espouses dissident beliefs." N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama, 357 U.S., at 462.

On this record it sufficiently appears that compulsory disclosure of the membership lists of the local branches of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People would work a significant interference with the freedom of association of their members. 9 There was [361 U.S. 516, 524] substantial uncontroverted evidence that public identification of persons in the community as members of the organizations had been followed by harassment and threats of bodily harm. There was also evidence that fear of community hostility and economic reprisals that would follow public disclosure of the membership lists had discouraged new members from joining the organizations and induced former members to withdraw. This repressive effect, while in part the result of private attitudes and pressures, was brought to bear only after the exercise of governmental power had threatened to force disclosure of the members' names. N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama, 357 U.S., at 463. Thus, the threat of substantial government encroachment upon important and traditional aspects of individual freedom is neither speculative nor remote.

Decision in this case must finally turn, therefore, on whether the cities as instrumentalities of the State have demonstrated so cogent an interest in obtaining and making public the membership lists of these organizations as to justify the substantial abridgment of associational freedom which such disclosures will effect. Where there is a significant encroachment upon personal liberty, the State may prevail only upon showing a subordinating interest which is compelling. N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449. Injury to official reputation affords no more warrant for repressing speech that would otherwise be free than does factual error. Where judicial officers are involved, this Court has held that concern for the dignity and [\[376 U.S. 254, 273\]](#) reputation of the courts does not justify the punishment as criminal contempt of criticism of the judge or his decision. Bridges v. California, 314 U.S. 252. This is true even though the utterance contains "half-truths" and "misinformation." Pennekamp v. Florida, 328 U.S. 331, 342, 343, n. 5, 345. If judges are to be treated as "men of fortitude, able to thrive in a hardy climate," *Craig v. [West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 63 S.Ct. 1178 \(1943\)]

In the First Amendment, the Founding Fathers gave the free press the protection it must have to fulfill its essential role in our democracy. The press was to serve the governed, not the governors. The Government's power to censor the press was abolished so that the press would remain forever free to censure the Government. The press was protected so that it could bare the secrets of government and inform the people. Only a free and unrestrained press can effectively expose deception in government. And paramount among the responsibilities of a free press is the duty to prevent any part of the government from deceiving the people and sending them off to distant lands to die of foreign fevers and foreign shot and shell. In my view, far from deserving condemnation for their courageous reporting, the New York Times, the Washington Post, and other newspapers should be commended for serving the purpose that the Founding Fathers saw so clearly. In revealing the workings of government that led to the Vietnam war, the newspapers nobly did precisely that which the Founders hoped and trusted they would do.

[New York Times Co. v. United States, 403 U.S. 713 \(1970\)]

"The fact that conduct qua expression is "speech" does not mean that it can not at all be regulated or made a crime,⁷¹ but does result in severe limitations on that process. The first amendment by its negative drafting ("Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech. . .") protects conduct qua expression unless it can be removed from that protection pursuant to some doctrine judicially recognized as consistent with the first amendment. Thus, one who challenges the application of a statute to conduct which amounts to expression does not have the burden of bringing his expression within the first amendment. Rather the burden is on his opponent to show that such expression is within one of those narrow areas which by their relation to action partake of the essential qualities of action rather than expression and therefore are carved away from the first amendment."

⁷¹ Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 536, 554, 85 S.Ct. 453, 13 L.Ed.2d. 471 \(1965\).

As to any given statute then there is first the threshold question whether the statute relates to expression and is therefore governed by first amendment considerations. We look for that answer in reality and not solely in the words of the statute. Thus, if a statute in its impact has or can be expected substantially to involve expression, that must be sufficient, whether or not the words of the statute so provide. There is, secondly, the removal question, whether the expressive conduct is so related to action that the expression is therefore carved away from the protection of the first amendment.

[U.S. v. Dellinger, 472 F.2d. 340, (1972)]

Under our Constitution, free speech is not a right that is given only to be so circumscribed that it exists in principle but not in fact. Freedom of expression would not truly exist if the right could be exercised only in an area that a benevolent government has provided as a safe haven for crackpots. The Constitution says that Congress (and the States) may not abridge the right to free speech. This provision means what it says. We properly read it to permit reasonable regulation of speech-connected activities in carefully restricted circumstances. But we do not confine the permissible exercise of First Amendment rights to a telephone booth or the four corners of a pamphlet, or to supervised and ordained discussion in a school classroom.

[Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733 (1969)]

"Our form of government is built on the premise that every citizen shall have the right to engage in political expression and association. This right was enshrined in the First Amendment of the Bill of Rights. Exercise of these basic freedoms in America has traditionally been through the media of political associations. Any interference with the freedom of a party is simultaneously an interference with the freedom of its adherents. All political ideas cannot and should not be channeled into the programs of our two major parties. History has amply proved the virtue of political activity by minority, dissident groups"

The NAACP is not a conventional political party; but the litigation it assists, while serving to vindicate the legal rights of members of the American Negro community, at the same time and perhaps more importantly, makes possible the distinctive contribution of a minority group to the ideas and beliefs of our society. For such a group, association for litigation may be the most effective form of political association.

But it does not follow that this Court now has only a clear-cut task to decide whether the activities of the petitioner deemed unlawful by the Supreme Court of Appeals are constitutionally privileged. If the line drawn by the decree between the permitted and prohibited activities of the NAACP, its members and lawyers is an ambiguous one, we will not presume that the statute curtails constitutionally protected activity as little as possible. For standards of permissible statutory vagueness are strict in the area of free expression. See Smith v. California, 361 U.S. 147, 151 ; Winters v. New York, 333 U.S. 507, 509 -510, 517-518; Herndon v. Lowry, 301 U.S. 242 ; Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359 ; United States v. C. I. O., 335 U.S. 106, 142 (Rutledge, J., concurring). Furthermore, the instant decree may be invalid if it prohibits privileged exercises of First Amendment rights whether or not the record discloses that the petitioner has engaged in privileged conduct. For in appraising a statute's inhibitory effect upon such rights, this Court has not hesitated to take into account possible applications of the statute in other factual contexts besides that at bar. Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 97-98; Winters v. New York, supra, at 518-520. Cf. Staub v. City of Baxley, 355 U.S. 313. It makes no difference that the instant case was not a criminal prosecution and not based on a refusal to comply with a licensing requirement. The [371 U.S. 415, 433] objectionable quality of vagueness and overbreadth does not depend upon absence of fair notice to a criminally accused or upon unchanneled delegation of legislative powers, but upon the danger of tolerating, in the area of First Amendment freedoms, the existence of a penal statute susceptible of sweeping and improper application. 14 Cf. Marcus v. Search Warrant, 367 U.S. 717, 733 . These freedoms are delicate and vulnerable, as well as supremely precious in our society. The threat of sanctions may deter their exercise almost as potently as the actual application of sanctions. Cf. Smith v. California, supra, at 151-154; Speiser v. Randall, 357 U.S. 513, 526 . Because First Amendment freedoms need breathing space to survive, government may regulate in the area only with narrow specificity. Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 311 .

"The presumption against prior restraints is heavier -- and the degree of protection broader -- than that against limits on expression imposed by criminal penalties. Behind the distinction is a theory deeply etched in our law: a free society prefers to punish the few who abuse rights of speech after they break the law than to throttle them and all others beforehand. It is always difficult to know in advance what an individual will say, and the line between legitimate and illegitimate speech is often so finely drawn that the risks of freewheeling censorship are formidable."

[Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 558-559 (1975)]

"It is now well established that the Constitution protects the right to receive information and ideas. 'This freedom [of speech and press] . . . necessarily [408 U.S. 753, 763] protects the right to receive . . . ' Martin v. City of Struthers, 319 U.S. 141, 143 (1943) . . ."

Stanley v. Georgia, [394 U.S. 557, 564 (1969)]

"We start with the premise that the rights to assemble peaceably and to petition for a redress of grievances are among the most precious of the liberties safeguarded by the Bill of Rights. These rights, moreover, are intimately connected, both in origin and in purpose, with the other First Amendment rights of free speech and free press. "All these, though not identical, are inseparable." Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516, 530 (1945). See De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353, 364 (1937). The First Amendment would, however, be a hollow promise if it left government free to destroy or erode its guarantees by indirect restraints so long as no law is passed that prohibits free speech, press, petition, or assembly as such. We have therefore repeatedly held that laws which actually affect the exercise of these vital rights cannot be sustained merely because they were enacted for the purpose of dealing with some evil within the State's legislative competence, or even because the laws do in fact provide a helpful means of dealing with such an evil. Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147 (1939); Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296 (1940). "

[United Mine Workers v. Illinois Bar Association, 389 U.S. 217 (1967)]

"The public employee surely can associate and speak freely and petition openly, and he is protected by the First Amendment from retaliation for doing so. See Pickering v. Board of Education, 391 U.S. 563, 574 -575 (1968); Shelton v. Tucker, 364 U.S. 479 (1960). But the First Amendment does not impose any affirmative obligation on the government to listen, to respond or, in this context, to recognize the association and bargain with it."

Smith v. Arkansas State Highway Employees, [441 U.S. 463 (1979)]

One may not counsel or advise others to violate the law as it stands. Words are not only the keys of persuasion, but the triggers of action, and those which have no purport but to counsel the violation of law cannot by any latitude of interpretation be a part of that public opinion which is the final source of government in a democratic state. [341 U.S. 572]

[Judge Learned Hand in Masses Publishing Co. v. Patten, 244 F. 535, 540]

Nearly half a century of review and refinement of Establishment Clause jurisprudence has distilled one clear understanding: Government may neither promote nor affiliate itself with any religious doctrine or organization, nor may it obtrude itself in the internal affairs of any religious institution. The application of these principles to the present case mandates the decision reached today by the Court.

The mixing of government and religion can be a threat to free government, even if no one is forced to participate.

When the government puts its imprimatur on a particular religion, it conveys a message of exclusion to all those who do not adhere to the favored beliefs.{9} A government cannot [505 U.S. 607] be premised on the belief that all persons are created equal when it asserts that God prefers some. Only "[a]nguish, hardship and bitter strife" result "when zealous religious groups struggl[e] with one another to obtain the Government's stamp of approval." Engel, 370 U.S. at 429; see also Lemon, 403 U.S. at 622-623; Aguilar v. Felton, 473 U.S. 402, 416 (1985) (Powell, J., concurring).{10} Such a struggle can "strain a political system to the breaking point." Walz v. Tax Commission, 397 U.S. 664, 694 (1970) (opinion of Harlan, J.).

When the government arrogates to itself a role in religious affairs, it abandons its obligation as guarantor of democracy. Democracy requires the nourishment of dialogue and dissent, while religious faith puts its trust in an ultimate divine authority above all human deliberation. When the government appropriates religious truth, it "transforms rational debate into theological decree." Nuechterlein, Note, The Free Exercise Boundaries of Permissible Accommodation Under the Establishment Clause, 99 Yale L.J. 1127, 1131 (1990). Those who disagree no longer are questioning the policy judgment of the elected but the rules of a higher authority who is beyond reproach. [505 U.S. 608] exceed the commission from which they derive their authority, and are Tyrants. The People who submit to it are governed by laws made neither by themselves nor by an authority derived from them, and are slaves.

Madison warned that government officials who would use religious authority to pursue secular ends

Memorial and Remonstrance against Religious Assessments (1785) in The Complete Madison 300 (S. Padover, ed.1953). Democratic government will not last long when proclamation replaces persuasion as the medium of political exchange.

Likewise, we have recognized that "[r]eligion flourishes in greater purity, without than with the aid of Gov[ernment]."{11} Id. at 309. To "make room for as wide a variety of beliefs and creeds as the spiritual needs of man deem necessary," Zorach v. Clauson, 343 U.S. 306, 313 (1952), the government must not align itself with any one of them. When the government favors a particular religion or sect, the disadvantage to all others is obvious, but even the favored religion may fear being "taint[ed]" . . . with a corrosive secularism." Grand Rapids School Dist. v. Ball, 473 U.S. 373, 385 (1985). The favored religion may be compromised as political figures reshape the religion's beliefs for their own purposes; it may be reformed as government largesse brings government regulation.{12} Keeping religion in the hands of private groups minimizes state intrusion on religious choice, and best enables each religion to "flourish according to the [505 U.S. 609] zeal of its adherents and the appeal of its dogma." Zorach, 343 U.S. at 313.

It is these understandings and fears that underlie our Establishment Clause jurisprudence. We have believed that religious freedom cannot exist in the absence of a free democratic government, and that such a government cannot endure when there is fusion between religion and the political regime. We have believed that religious freedom cannot thrive in the absence of a vibrant religious community, and that such a community cannot prosper when it is bound to the secular. And we have believed that these were the animating principles behind the adoption of the Establishment Clause. To that end, our cases have prohibited government endorsement of religion, its sponsorship, and active involvement in religion, whether or not citizens were coerced to conform.

This emphasis on equal treatment is, I think, an eminently sound approach. In my view, the Religion Clauses -- the Free Exercise Clause, the Establishment Clause, the Religious Test Clause, Art. VI, cl. 3, and the Equal Protection Clause as applied to religion -- all speak with one voice on this point: absent the most unusual circumstances, one's religion ought not affect one's legal rights or duties or benefits. As I have previously noted, the Establishment Clause is infringed when the government makes adherence to religion relevant to a person's standing in the political community.

Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 69 (1985) (O'CONNOR, J., concurring in judgment).

[Board of Education v. Grumet, 512 U.S. 687 (1994)]

An order issued in the area of First Amendment rights must be couched in the narrowest terms that will accomplish the pin-pointed objective permitted by constitutional mandate and the essential needs of the public order. In this sensitive field, the State may not employ [393 U.S. 175, 184] "means that broadly stifle fundamental personal liberties when the end can be more narrowly achieved." Shelton v. Tucker, 364 U.S. 479, 488 (1960). In other words, the order must be tailored as precisely as possible to the exact needs of the case. The participation of both sides is necessary for this purpose. 11 Certainly, the failure to invite participation of the party seeking to exercise First Amendment rights reduces the possibility of a narrowly drawn order, and substantially imperils the protection which the Amendment seeks to assure.
[Carroll v. Princess Anne, 393 U.S. 175 (1968)]

The idea that civil obligations are subordinate to religious duty is consonant with the notion that government must accommodate, where possible, those religious practices that conflict with civil law.

Second, all agreed that government interference in religious practice was not to be lightly countenanced. Adams & Emmerich 31. Finally, all shared the conviction that "true religion and good morals are the only solid foundation of public liberty and happiness." Curry, The First Freedoms, at 219 (quoting Continental Congress); see Adams & Emmerich 72 ("The Founders ... acknowledged that the republic rested largely on moral principles derived from religion"). To give meaning to these ideas-particularly in a society characterized by religious pluralism and pervasive regulation-there will be times when the Constitution requires government to accommodate the needs of those citizens whose religious practices conflict with generally applicable law.

[Spreckels Sugar Refining Co. v. McClain, 192 U.S. 397 (1904)]

“The revenue laws are a code or system in regulation of tax assessment and collection. They relate to taxpayers, and not to nontaxpayers. The latter are without their scope. No procedure is prescribed for nontaxpayers, and no attempt is made to annul any of their rights and remedies in due course of law. With them Congress does not assume to deal, and they are neither of the subject nor of the object of the revenue laws...The distinction between persons and things within the scope of the revenue laws and those without is vital.”

“In the interpretation of statutes levying taxes it is the established rule not to extend their provisions, by implication, beyond the clear import of the language used, or to enlarge their operations so as to embrace matters not specifically pointed out. "The great principle is this: because the constitution will not permit a state to destroy, it will not permit a law involving the power to destroy. [. . .] They decided against the tax; because the subject had been placed beyond the power of the states, by the constitution. They decided, not on account of the subject, but on account of the power that protected it; they decided that a prohibition against destruction was a prohibition against a law involving the power of destruction."

"In Calder v. Bull, which was here in 1798, Mr. Justice Chase said, that there were acts which the Federal and State legislatures could not do without exceeding their authority [from GOD!], and among them he mentioned a law which punished a citizen for an innocent act; a law that destroyed or impaired the lawful private [labor] contracts [and labor compensation, e.g. earnings from employment through compelled W-4 withholding] of citizens; a law that made a man judge in his own case; and a law that took the property from A [the worker], and gave it to B [the government or another citizen, such as through social welfare programs]. 'It is against all reason and justice, he added, 'for a people to intrust a legislature with such powers, and therefore it cannot be presumed that they have done it. They may command what is right and prohibit what is wrong; but they cannot change innocence into guilt, or punish innocence as a crime, or violate the right of an antecedent lawful private [employment] contract [by compelling W-4 withholding, for instance], or the right of private property. To maintain that a Federal or State legislature possesses such powers [of THEFT!] if they had not been expressly restrained, would, in my opinion, be a political heresy altogether inadmissible in all free republican governments.' 3 Dall. 388."

"The grant of the power to lay and collect taxes is, like the power to regulate commerce, made in general terms, and has never been understood to interfere with the exercise of the same power by the State; and hence has been drawn an argument which has been applied to the question under consideration. But the two grants are not, it is conceived, similar in their terms or their nature. Although many of the powers formerly [22 U.S. 1, 199] exercised by the States, are transferred to the government of the Union, yet the State governments remain, and constitute a most important part of our system. The power of taxation is indispensable to their existence, and is a power which, in its own nature, is capable of residing in, and being exercised by, different authorities at the same time. We are accustomed to see it placed, for different purposes, in different hands. Taxation is the simple operation of taking small portions from a perpetually accumulating mass, susceptible of almost infinite division; and a power in one to take what is necessary for certain purposes, is not, in its nature, incompatible with a power in another to take what is necessary for other purposes. Congress is authorized to lay and collect taxes, &c. to pay the debts, and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States. This does not interfere with the power of the States to tax for the support of their own governments; nor is the exercise of that power by the States, an exercise of any portion of the power that is granted to the United States. In imposing taxes for State purposes, they are not doing what Congress is empowered to do. Congress is not empowered to tax for those purposes which are within the exclusive province of the States. When, then, each government exercises the power of taxation, neither is exercising the power of the other. But, when a State proceeds to regulate commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, it is exercising the very power that is granted to Congress, [22 U.S. 1, 200] and is doing the very thing which Congress is authorized to do. There is no analogy, then, between the power of taxation and the power of regulating commerce."

"The difficulties arising out of our dual form of government and the opportunities for differing opinions concerning the relative rights of state and national governments are many; but for a very long time this court has steadfastly adhered to the doctrine that the taxing power of Congress does not extend to the states or their political subdivisions. The same basic reasoning which leads to that conclusion, we think, requires like limitation upon the power which springs from the bankruptcy clause. United States v. Butler, supra."

Ed.--), the broad contention submitted on behalf of the government that all receipts—everything that comes in—are income within the proper definition of the term 'gross income, and that the entire proceeds of a conversion of capital assets, in whatever form and under whatever circumstances accomplished, should be treated as gross income. Certainly the term "income" has no broader meaning in the 1913 act than in that of 1909 (see Stratton's Independence v. Howbert, 231 U.S. 399, 416, 417 S., 34 Sup.Ct. 136), and for the present purpose we assume there is not difference in its meaning as used in the two acts."

"Here I close my opinion. I could not say less in view of questions of such gravity that they go down to the very foundations of the government. If the provisions of the Constitution can be set aside by an act of Congress, where is the course of usurpation to end?

The present assault upon capital is but the beginning. It will be but the stepping stone to others larger and more sweeping, until our political contest will become war of the poor against the rich; a war of growing intensity and bitterness."

[Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429, 158 U.S. 601 (1895).]

"Thus, the Court has frequently held that domicile or residence, more substantial than mere presence in transit or sojourn, is an adequate basis for taxation, including income, property, and death taxes. Since the Fourteenth Amendment makes one a citizen of the state wherein he resides, the fact of residence creates universally reciprocal duties of protection by the state and of allegiance and support by the citizen. The latter obviously includes a duty to pay taxes, and their nature and measure is largely a political matter. Of course, the situs of property may tax it regardless of the citizenship, domicile, or residence of the owner, the most obvious illustration being a tax on realty laid by the state in which the realty is located."

"As stated by Judge [157 U.S. 429, 602] Cooley in his work on the Principles of Constitutional Law: 'The power to tax, whether by the United States or by the states, is to be construed in the light of and limited by the fact that the states and the Union are inseparable, and that the constitution contemplates the perpetual maintenance of each with all its constitutional powers, unembarrassed and unimpaired by any action of the other. The taxing power of the federal government does not therefore extend to the means or agencies through or by the employment of which the states perform their essential functions; since, if these were within its reach, they might be embarrassed, and perhaps wholly paralyzed, by the burdens it should impose. That the power to tax involves the power to destroy; that the power to destroy may defeat and render useless the power to create; that there is a plain repugnance in conferring on one government a power to control the constitutional measures of another, which other, in respect to those very measures, is declared to be supreme over that which exerts the control,-are propositions not to be denied.' It is true that taxation does not necessarily and unavoidably destroy, and that to carry it to the excess of destruction would be an abuse not to be anticipated; but the very power would take from the states a portion of their intended liberty of independent action within the sphere of their powers, and would constitute to the state a perpetual danger of embarrassment and possible annihilation. The constitution contemplates no such shackles upon state powers, and by implication forbids them.'"

"... the key question is: can we define 'income' in a fair and reasonably straightforward manner? Unfortunately, we have not yet succeeded in doing so."
[Shirley Peterson, former IRS Commissioner, April 1993]

"Our federal tax system is, in short, utterly impossible, utterly unjust and completely counterproductive ... [it] reeks with injustice and is fundamentally un-American ... it has earned a rebellion and it's time we rebelled."
[President Ronald Reagan, May 1983, Williamsburg, VA]

"If no information or return is filed, [the] Internal Revenue Service cannot assess you."
[Gary Makovski, Special IRS Agent, testifying under oath in U.S. v. Lloyd]

"Our tax system is based upon voluntary assessment and payment, not upon distraint."
[United States Supreme Court, in Flora v. United States]

"Our tax system is based on individual self-assessment and voluntary compliance."

"The United States has a system of taxation by confession."

[Hugo Black, Supreme Court Justice, in U.S. v. Kahriger]

"Only the rare taxpayer would be likely to know that he could refuse to produce his records to IRS agents ... Who would believe the ironic truth that the cooperative taxpayer fares much worse than the individual who relies upon his constitutional rights."

[U.S. Federal Judge Cummings, in U.S. v. Dickerson (7th Circuit 1969)]

"Let me point this out now: Your income tax is 100 percent voluntary tax, and your liquor tax is 100 percent enforced tax. Now, the situation is as different as night and day. Consequently, your same rules just will not apply"

[Dwight E. Avis, former head of the Alcohol and Tobacco Tax Division of the IRS, testifying before a House Ways and Means subcommittee in 1953; <http://sedm.org/Exhibits/EX1016.pdf>]

"The purpose of the IRS is to collect the proper amount of tax revenues at the least cost to the public, and in a manner that warrants the highest degree of public confidence in our integrity, efficiency and fairness. To achieve that purpose, we will encourage and achieve the highest possible degree of voluntary compliance in accordance with the tax laws and regulations"

[Internal Revenue Manual, Chapter 1100, section 1111.1]

"A hand from Washington will be stretched out and placed upon every man's business; the eye of the federal inspector will be in every man's counting house....The law will of necessity have inquisitorial features, it will provide penalties, it will create complicated machinery. Under it, men will be hauled into courts distant from their homes. Heavy fines imposed by distant and unfamiliar tribunals will constantly menace the taxpayer. An army of federal inspectors, spies, and detectives will descend upon the state."

[Virginia House Speaker Richard E. Byrd, 1910, predicting what would happen if a federal income tax became law]

"Fear is the key element for the IRS in achieving its mission. Without fear, the IRS would have a difficult time maintaining our so-called system of voluntary compliance ...". "Given the opportunity, the IRS will take the easy way out and grab whatever it can ... the IRS does not really care about you and what your future ... may be."

[Santo Presti, former IRS Criminal Investigation Agent and author of "IRS In Action"]

"The IRS is an extraordinary example of the end justifying the means. The means of this agency is growth. It is interesting that the revenue officers within the IRS refer to taxpayers as 'inventory'. The IRS embodies the political realities of the selfish human desire to dominate others. Thus the end of this gigantic pretense of officialdom is power, pure and simple. The meek may inherit the earth, but they will never receive a promotion in an agency where efficiency is measured by the number of seizures of taxpayers' property and by the number of citizens and businesses driven into bankruptcy."

[George Hansen, Congressman and author of "To Harass Our People"]

"I have sat on many a promotion panel where the first question of panel members was 'How many seizures have you made?'."

[Joseph R. Smith, eighteen-year IRS agent, testifying before Congress]

"The agency that is so strict on the way Americans keep their books cannot even pass a financial audit."

[Ted Stevens, Republican Senator from Alaska]

"Eight decades of amendments ... to [the] code have produced a virtually impenetrable maze ... The rules are unintelligible to most citizens ... The rules are equally mysterious to many government employees who are charged with administering and enforcing the law."

[Shirley Peterson, former IRS Commissioner, April 14, 1993 at Southern Methodist University]

"... some techniques can be used only in connection with a full-scale program due to the nature of the tax situation and the need to avoid unnecessary taxpayer reaction. An example would be income tax returns compliance efforts aimed at the nonbusiness taxpayer."

[Internal Revenue Service Manual, section 5221 "Returns Compliance Programs"]

"This [audit] was made extremely difficult because [IRS] existing systems were not designed to provide ... reliable financial information ... on their operations."

[Comptroller Bowsher, Government Accounting Office, on the first-ever audit of the IRS in 1993]

"The wages of the average American worker, after inflation and taxes, have decreased 17% since 1973, the only Western industrial nation to so suffer."

[Martin Gross, author of "The Tax Racket: Government Extortion From A to Z"]

"The Constitution prohibits any direct tax, unless in proportion to numbers as ascertained by the census ... [and] ... prohibits Congress from laying a direct tax on the revenue from property of the citizen without regard to state lines"

[United States Supreme Court in Pollack v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company (1895)]

"... [the 16th Amendment] conferred no new power of taxation ... [and] ... prohibited the ... power of income taxation possessed by Congress from the beginning from being taken out of the category of indirect taxation to which it inherently belonged"

[United States Supreme Court in Stanton v. Baltic Mining (1916)]

"To lay with one hand the power of government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it on favored individuals ... is none the less robbery because it is ... called taxation."

[United States Supreme Court in Loan Association v. Topeka (1874)]

"In the interpretation of statutes levying taxes it is the established rule not to extend their provisions by implication beyond the clear import of the language used, or to enlarge their operation so as to embrace matters not specifically pointed out. In case of doubt, they are construed most strongly against the government and in favor of the citizen."

[U.S. Supreme Court in Gould v. Gould, 245 U.S. 151]

"... 100% of what is collected is absorbed solely by interest on the Federal Debt ... all individual income tax revenues are gone before one nickel is spent on the services taxpayers expect from government."

[Grace Commission report submitted to President Ronald Reagan on January 15, 1984]

"I am not among those who fear the people. They, and not the rich, are our dependence for continued freedom. And to preserve their independence, we must not let our rulers load us with perpetual debt. We must make our election between economy and liberty, or profusion and servitude. If we run into such debts, as that we must be taxed in our meat and our drink, in our necessities and our comforts, in our labors and our amusements, for our callings and our creeds, as the people of England are, our people, like them, must come to labor sixteen hours in the twenty-four, give the earnings of fifteen of those to the government for their debts and daily expenses; and the sixteenth being insufficient to afford us bread, we must live, as they do now, on oatmeal and potatoes; have no time to think, no means of calling the mismanagers to account; but be glad to obtain subsistence by hiring ourselves to rivet their chains on the necks of our fellow-sufferers."

[Thomas Jefferson, letter to Samuel Kercheval, July 12, 1816]

11.15 Sovereignty and Separation of Powers⁷³

"We of this mighty western Republic have to grapple with the dangers that spring from popular self-government tried on a scale incomparably vaster than ever before in the history of mankind, and from an abounding material prosperity greater also than anything which the world has hitherto seen."

As regards the first set of dangers, it behooves us to remember that men can never escape being governed. Either they must govern themselves or they must submit to being governed by others. If from lawlessness or fickleness, from folly or self-indulgence, they refuse to govern themselves then most assuredly in the end they will have to be governed from the outside. They can prevent the need of government from without only by showing they possess the power of government from within. A sovereign cannot make excuses for his failures; a sovereign must accept the responsibility for the exercise of power that inheres in him; and where, as is true in our Republic, the people are sovereign, then the people must show a sober understanding and a sane and steadfast purpose if they are to preserve that orderly liberty upon which as a foundation every republic must rest.”

[President Theodore Roosevelt; Opening of the Jamestown Exposition; Norfolk, VA, April 26, 1907]

“It will be sufficient to observe briefly that the sovereignities in Europe, and particularly in England, exist on feudal principles. That system considers the Prince as the sovereign, and the people as his subjects; it regards his person as the object of allegiance, and excludes the idea of his being on an equal footing with a subject, either in a court of justice or elsewhere. That system contemplates him as being the fountain of honor and authority, and from his grace and grant derives all franchises, immunities and privileges; it is easy to perceive that such a sovereign could not be amenable to a court of justice, or subjected to judicial controul and actual constraint. It was of necessity, therefore, that suability became incompatible with such sovereignty. Besides, the Prince having all the Executive powers, the judgment of the courts would, in fact, be only monitory, not mandatory to him, and a capacity to be advised is a distinct thing from a capacity to be sued. The same feudal ideas run through all their jurisprudence, and constantly remind us of the distinction between the Prince and the subject. No such ideas obtain here; at the Revolution, the sovereignty devolved on the people, and they are truly the sovereigns of the country, but they are sovereigns without subjects (unless the African slaves among us may be so called), and have none to govern but themselves; the citizens of America are equal as fellow citizens, and as joint tenants in the sovereignty.”

[Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. 419, 471-472 (1793) (Jay, Chief Justice)]

“I shall notice one idea more in defense of the act, and only one. It is the appeal made in the preamble to the sovereign power of the State. I do not admit that there is any sovereign power, in the literal meaning of the terms, to be found anywhere in our system of government. The people possess, as it regards their governments, a revolutionary sovereign power: but so long as the governments remain which they have instituted, to establish justice and —to secure the enjoyment of the rights of life, liberty and property, and of pursuing happiness,” sovereign power, or, which I take to be the same thing, power without limitation, is nowhere to be found in any branch or department of the government, either state or national, nor indeed of all of them put together. The Constitution of the United States expressly forbids the passage of any bill of attainder, or ex post facto law, or the granting of any title of nobility, by the general or the state government. The same instrument likewise limits the powers of the general government to those expressly granted, and places many other restrictions upon the power of state governments. The constitutions of the different States likewise contain many prohibitions and limitations of power. The tenth article of our State constitution, consisting of twenty-eight sections, is made up of restrictions and prohibitions upon legislative and judicial power, and concludes with the emphatic declaration, —that everything in this article is excerpted out of the general powers of government, and shall forever remain inviolate; and that all laws contrary thereto, or contrary to this constitution, shall be void.”

“These numerous limitations and restrictions prove that the idea of sovereignty in government was not tolerated by the wise founders of our systems. ‘Sovereign State’ are cabalistic words not understood by the disciple of liberty who has been in our constitutional schools. It is an appropriate phrase when applied to an absolute despotism. I firmly believe that the idea of sovereign power in the government of a republic is incompatible with the existence and permanent foundation of civil liberty and the rights of property. The history of man in all ages shown the necessity of the strongest checks upon power, whether it be exercised by one man, a few, or many. Our revolution broke up the foundations of sovereignty in government, and our written constitutions have carefully guarded against the baneful influence of such an idea henceforth and forever. I cannot, therefore, recognize the appeal to the sovereignty of the States as a justification of the act in question.¶ - Id. at 500-501 (Underwood, J.)”

[Gaines v. Buford, 31 Ky. (1 Dana) 481 (1833)]

“The idea of sovereignty, which obtained at the time of the Revolution, regarded as the essential attributes of sovereignty, inequality and unlimited power. Inequality and personal superiority were repudiated by the Declaration of Independence. What was substituted in its stead? Certainly, so far as this question is concerned, they acted upon an entirely different principle. I may add, upon one never before practiced in any country, viz.: The one just mentioned, that power is never to be exercised as of personal right. The doctrine of representation was not of recent origin: the doctrine of consent was at the basis of English law, although Blackstone seems to have omitted to notice the decisions of the judges of England upon those questions:” Middleton v. Cross, 2 Atkyns, 65; Matthews v. Burdette, 2 Salk. 672.

Education alone will not: the world is full of educated derelicts. Persistence and determination alone are omnipotent."

"The question is not what power the federal government ought to have, but what powers, in fact, have been given by the people... The federal union is a government of delegated powers. It has only such as are expressly conferred upon it, and such as are reasonably to be implied from those granted. In this respect, we differ radically from nations where all legislative power, without restriction or limitation, is vested in a parliament or other legislative body subject to no restriction except the discretion of its members." (Congress)

As a general rule, duress renders the contract or conveyance voidable, not void, at the option of the person coerced,⁷⁵ and it is susceptible of ratification. Like other voidable contracts, it is valid until it is avoided by the person entitled to avoid it.⁷⁶ However, duress in the form of physical compulsion, in which a party is caused to appear to assent when he has no intention of doing so, is generally deemed to render the resulting purported contract void.⁷⁷"

The individual may stand upon his constitutional rights as a citizen. He is entitled to carry on his private business in his own way. His power to contract is unlimited. He owes no such duty to the State, since he receives nothing therefrom, beyond the protection of his life and property. His rights are such as existed by the law of the land long antecedent to the organization of the State, and can only be taken from him by due process of law, and in accordance with the constitution. “I take leave to say that, if the principles thus announced should ever receive the sanction of a majority of this court, a radical and mischievous change in our system of government will result. U.S. v. Cooper, [312 U.S. 600, 604, 61 S.Ct. 742 (1941)]

“Sovereignty itself is, of course, not subject to law, for it is the author and source of law; but in our system, while sovereign powers are delegated to the agencies of government, sovereignty itself remains with the people [WE THE PEOPLE!], by whom and for whom all government exists and acts.”

“...at the Revolution, the sovereignty devolved on the people; and they are truly the sovereigns of the country, but they are sovereigns without subjects...with none to govern but themselves; the citizens of America are equal as fellow citizens, and as joint tenants in the sovereignty.”

“Foreign States: Nations outside of the United States...Term may also refer to another state; i.e. a sister state. “The United States government is a foreign corporation with respect to a state.”
[N.Y. re: Merriam, 36 N.E. 505, 141 N.Y. 479, Affirmed 16 S.Ct. 1973, 41 L.Ed. 287]

“The term ‘United States’ may be used in any one of several senses. [1] It may be merely the name of a sovereign occupying the position analogous to that of other sovereigns in the family of nations. [2] It may designate the territory over which the sovereignty of the United States extends, or [3] it may be the collective name of the states which are united by and under the Constitution.”
Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, [324 U.S. 652 (1945)]

“The several States of the Union are not, it is true, in every respect independent, many of the right and powers which originally belonged to them being now vested in the government created by the Constitution. But, except as restrained and limited by that instrument, they possess and exercise the authority of independent States, and the principles of public law to which we have referred are applicable to them. One of these principles is, that every State possesses exclusive jurisdiction and sovereignty over persons and property within its territory. As a consequence, every State has the power to determine for itself the civil status [e.g. citizenship] and capacities of its inhabitants; to prescribe the subjects upon which they may contract, the forms and solemnities with which their contracts shall be executed, the rights and obligations arising from them, and the mode in which their validity shall be determined and their obligations enforced; and also the regulate the manner and conditions upon which property situated within such territory, both personal and real, may be acquired, enjoyed, and transferred. The other principle of public law referred to follows from the one mentioned; that is, that no State can exercise direct jurisdiction and authority over persons or property without its territory. Story, Confl. Laws, c. 2; Wheat. Int. Law, pt. 2, c. 2. The several States are of equal dignity and authority, and the independence of one implies the exclusion of power from all others.

 [Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714 (1877)]

“Every State or nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction within her own territory, and her laws affect and bind all property and persons residing within it. It may regulate the manner and circumstances under which property is held, and the condition, capacity, and state of all persons therein, and also the remedy and modes of administering justice. And it is equally true that no State or nation can affect or bind property out of its territory, or persons not residing within it. No State therefore can enact laws to operate beyond its own dominions, and if it attempts to do so, it may be lawfully refused obedience. Such laws can have no inherent authority extraterritorially. This is the necessary result of the independence of distinct and separate sovereignties.”

Now it follows from these principles that whatever force or effect the laws of one State or nation may have in the territories of another must depend solely upon the laws and municipal regulations of the latter, upon its own jurisprudence and polity, and upon its own express or tacit consent.”
 Dred Scott v. John F.A. Sanford, [60 U.S. 393 (1856)]

“The power to “legislate generally upon” life, liberty, and property, as opposed to the “power to provide modes of redress” against offensive state action, was “repugnant” to the Constitution. Guest, 383 U.S. 745 (1966), their treatment of Congress’ §5 power as corrective or preventive, not definitional, has not been questioned.”

“It is clear that Congress, as a legislative body, exercise two species of legislative power: the one, limited as to its objects, but extending all over the Union: the other, an absolute, exclusive legislative power over the District of Columbia.  [Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U.S. 264, 6 Wheat. 265; 5 L.Ed. 257 \(1821\)]

“§79. This sovereignty pertains to the people of the United States as national citizens only, and not as citizens of any other government. There cannot be two separate and independent sovereignties within the same limits or jurisdiction; nor can there be two distinct and separate sources of sovereign authority within the same jurisdiction. The right of commanding in the last resort can be possessed only by one body of people inhabiting the same territory, and can be executed only by those intrusted with the execution of such authority.”

“If the time shall ever arrive when, for an object appealing, however strongly, to our sympathies, the dignity of the States shall bow to the dictation of Congress by conforming their legislation thereto, when the power and majesty and honor of those who created shall become subordinate to the thing of their creation, I but feebly utter my apprehensions when I express my firm conviction that we shall see 'the beginning of the end.'”

8. As James Madison wrote, "[t]he powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the federal government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite." The Federalist No. 45, pp. 292-293 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961). This constitutionally mandated division of authority "was adopted by the Framers to ensure protection of our fundamental liberties." Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. 452, 458 (1991) (internal quotation marks omitted). "Just as the separation and independence of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government serves to prevent the accumulation of excessive power in any one branch, a healthy balance of power between the States and the Federal Government will reduce the risk of tyranny and abuse from either front."
[U.S. v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995)]

"The words 'people of the United States' and 'citizens,' are synonymous terms, and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body who, according to our republican institutions, form the sovereignty, and who hold the power and conduct the government through their representatives. They are what we familiarly call the 'sovereign people,' and every citizen is one of this people, and a constituent member of this sovereignty. ..."
[Boyd v. State of Nebraska, 143 U.S. 135 (1892)]

"It is again to antagonize Chief Justice Marshall, when he said: 'The government of the Union, then (whatever may be the influence of this fact on the case), is emphatically and truly a government of the people. In form and in substance it emanates from them. Its powers are granted by them, and are to be exercised directly on them and for their benefit. This government is acknowledged by all to be one of enumerated powers.' 4 Wheat. 404, 4 L.Ed. 601."
[Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901)]

"The ultimate authority...resides in the people alone..."
[James Madison, Federalist Paper No. 46]

"Sovereignty itself is, of course, not subject to law, for it is the author and source of law...While sovereign powers are delegated to...the government, sovereignty itself remains with the people."
[Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886)]

"This court has declined to take jurisdiction of suits between states to compel the performance of obligations which, if the states had been independent nations, could not have been enforced judicially, but only through the political departments of their governments. Thus, in Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, where the state of Kentucky, by her governor [127 U.S. 265, 289] applied to this court, in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, for a writ of mandamus to the governor of Ohio to compel him to surrender a fugitive from justice, this court, while holding that the case was a controversy between two states, decided that it had no authority to grant the writ." [State of Wisconsin v. Pelican Insurance Company, 127 U.S. 265 (1888)]

"The question in Bonaparte v. Tax Court, 104 U.S. 592, was whether the registered public debt of one state, exempt from taxation by that state, or actually taxed there, was taxable by another state, when owned by a citizen of the latter, and it was held that there was no provision of the constitution of the United States which prohibited such taxation. The states had not covenanted that this could not be done, whereas, under the fundamental law, as to the power to borrow money, neither the United States, on the one hand, nor the states on the other, can interfere with that power as possessed by each, and an essential element of the sovereignty of each."
[Pollock v. Farmers' Loan and Trust, 157 U.S. 429 (1895)]

"It is no longer open to question that the general government, unlike the states, Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247 U.S. 251, 275, 38 S.Ct. 529, 3 A.L.R. 649, Ann.Cas.1918E 724, possesses no inherent power in respect of the internal affairs of the states; and emphatically not with regard to legislation."
[Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238, 56 S.Ct. 855 (1936)]

"In Calder v. Bull, which was here in 1798, Mr. Justice Chase said, that there were acts which the Federal and State legislatures could not do without exceeding their authority, and among them he mentioned a law which punished a citizen for an innocent act; a law that destroyed or impaired the lawful private [labor] contracts [and labor compensation, e.g. earnings from employment through compelled W-4 withholding] of citizens; a law that made a man judge in his own case; and a law that took the property from A [the worker], and gave it to B [the government or another citizen, such as through social welfare programs]. 'It is against all reason and justice, he added, 'for a people to intrust a legislature with such powers, and therefore it cannot be presumed that they have done it. They may command what is right and prohibit what is wrong; but they cannot change innocence into guilt, or punish innocence as a crime, or violate the right of an antecedent lawful private [employment] contract [by compelling W-4 withholding, for instance], or the right of private property. To maintain that a Federal or State legislature possesses such powers [of THEFT!] if they had not been expressly restrained, would, in my opinion, be a political heresy altogether inadmissible in all free republican governments.' 3 Dall. 388."

[Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U.S. 700 \(1878\)]

“This provision authorizes the United States to be and become a land-owner, and prescribes the mode in which the lands may be disposed of, and the title conveyed to the purchaser. Congress is to make the needful rules and regulations upon this subject. The title of the United States can be divested by no other power, by no other means, in no other mode, than that which congress shall sanction and prescribe. It cannot be done by the action of the people or legislature of a territory or state.' And he supported this conclusion by a review of all the acts of congress under which states had theretofore been admitted. Mr. Webster said that those precedents demonstrated that 'the general idea has been, in the creation of a state, that its admission as a state has no effect at all on the property of the United States lying within its limits;' and that it was settled by the judgment of this court in Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. 212, 224, 'that the authority of the United States does so far extend as, by force of itself, Proprio vigore, to exempt the public lands from taxation when new states are created in the territory in which the lands lie.' 21 Cong. Globe, 31st Cong. 1st Sess. p. 1314; 22 Cong. Globe, pp. 848 et seq., 960, 986, 1004; 5 Webst. Works, 395, 396, 405.”
Van Brocklin v. State of Tennessee, [117 U.S. 151 (1886)]

“The jurisdiction of the nation within its own territory is [169 U.S. 649, 684] necessarily exclusive and absolute. It is susceptible of no limitation not imposed by itself. Any restriction upon it, deriving validity from an external source, would imply a diminution of its sovereignty to the extent of the restriction, and an investment of that sovereignty to the same extent in that power which could impose such restriction. All exceptions, therefore, to the full and complete power of a nation within its own territories, must be traced up to the consent of the nation itself. They can flow from no other legitimate source. This consent may be either express or implied. In the latter case, it is less determinate, exposed more to the uncertainties of construction; but, if understood, not less obligatory.”
[The Exchange, 7 Cranch 116 (1812)]

“A State does not owe its origin to the Government of the United States, in the highest or in any of its branches. It was in existence before it. It derives its authority from the same pure and sacred source as itself: The voluntary and deliberate choice of the people....A State is altogether exempt from the jurisdiction of the Courts of the United States, or from any other exterior authority, unless in the special instances when the general Government has power derived from the Constitution itself.”
Chisholm v. Georgia, [2 Dall. \(U.S.\) 419 (Dall.) (1793)]

“Of the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the United States and of the privileges and immunities of the citizens of a state...it is only the former which is placed by the clause (the second clause of the 14th Amendment) under the protection of the Federal Constitution, and that the latter, whatever they may be, are not intended to have any additional protection by this paragraph of the Amendment...the latter must rest for their security and protection where they have heretofore rested, for they are not embraced by this paragraph of the Amendment...”

“But with...exceptions...few...the entire domain of the privileges and immunities of citizens of the state, as above defined, lay within the constitutional and legislative power of the state and without that of the Federal Government. Was it the purpose of the 14th Amendment...to transfer the security and protection of all the civil rights which we have mentioned from the states to the Federal Government? And . . . was it intended to bring within the power of Congress the entire domain of civil rights heretofore belonging exclusively to the States?”

“We are convinced that no such results were intended by the Congress which proposed these amendments, nor by the legislatures of the States which ratified them.”

“Having shown that the privileges and immunities relied on in the argument are those which belong to citizens of the States as such, and that they are left to the State governments for security and protection, and not by this article placed under the special care of the Federal government, we may hold ourselves excused from defining the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States which no State can abridge, until some case involving those privileges may make it necessary to do so.”

11.16 Justice and Judgment⁷⁸

Unjust Judgments Rebuked.

A Psalm of Asaph.

God stands in the divine assembly;
He judges among the gods (divine beings).

How long will you judge unjustly
And show partiality to the wicked? Selah. [stop and think about it]

Vindicate the weak and fatherless;
Do justice and maintain the rights of the afflicted and destitute.

Rescue the weak and needy;
Rescue them from the hand of the wicked.

The rulers do not know nor do they understand;
They walk on in the darkness [of complacent satisfaction];
All the foundations of the earth [the fundamental principles of the administration of justice] are shaken.

I said, “You are gods;
Indeed, all of you are sons of the Most High.

“Nevertheless you will die like men
And fall like any one of the princes.”

Arise, O God, judge the earth!
For to You belong all the nations.
[Psalm 82, Bible, Amplified Version]

“Persons are the subject of rights and duties; and, as a subject of a right, the person is the object of a correlative duty, and conversely. The subject of a right has been called by Professor Holland, the person of inherence; the subject of a duty, the person of incidence. “Entitled” and “bound” are the terms in common use in English and for most purposes they are adequate. Every full citizen is a person; other human beings, namely, subjects who are not citizens, may be persons. But not every human being is necessarily a person, for a person is capable of rights and duties and there may well be human beings having no legal rights, as was the case with slaves (feudal serfs) in English law. It includes women.”
[Bouvier’s Law Dictionary, Rawles Revision, Volume III, p. 2575 (1914)]

“Do not strive with a man without cause, if he has done you no harm.”
[Prov. 3:30, Bible, NKJV]

For the commandments, “You shall not commit adultery,” “You shall not murder,” “You shall not steal,” “You shall not bear false witness,” “You shall not covet,” and if there is any other commandment, are all summed up in this saying, namely, “You shall love your neighbor as yourself.”

Love does no harm to a neighbor; therefore love is the fulfillment of the law.
[Romans 13:9-10, Bible, NKJV]

"You shall not follow a crowd to do evil; nor shall you testify in a dispute so as to turn aside after many to pervert justice." [Exodus 23:2, Bible, NKJV]

"He [God] loves righteousness and justice;
The earth is full of the goodness of the LORD. "
[Psalm 33:5, Bible, NKJV]

"Justice — is rendering to every one [equally, whether citizen or alien] that which is his due. It has been distinguished from equity in this respect, that while justice means merely the doing [of] what positive law demands, equity means the doing of what is fair and right in every separate case. "
[Easton's Bible Dictionary, 1996]

"For the LORD loves justice, and does not forsake His saints; They are preserved forever, But the descendants of the wicked shall be cut off."
[Psalm 37:28, Bible, NKJV]

"The mouth of the righteous speaks wisdom,
And his tongue talks of justice.
The law of his God is in his heart;
None of his steps shall slide. "
[Psalm 37:30-31, Bible, NKJV]

"Righteousness and justice are the foundation of Your [God's] throne; Mercy and truth go before Your face."
[Psalm 89:14, Bible, NKJV]

"Blessed are those who keep justice,
And he who does righteousness at all times! "
[Psalm 106:3, Bible, NKJV]

"Better is a little with righteousness, Than vast revenues without justice. "
[Prov. 16:8, Bible, NKJV]

"Is this not the fast that I [God] have chosen:
To loose the bonds of wickedness,
To undo the heavy burdens,
To let the oppressed go free,
And that you break every yoke?"
[Isaiah 58:6, Bible, NKJV]

"Justice is the end of government. It is the end of civil society. It ever has been, and ever will be pursued, until it be obtained, or until liberty be lost in the pursuit."
[James Madison, Federalist Paper #51, 1788]

"That no free Government, or the blessing of liberty, can be preserved to any people but by a firm adherence to justice..."
[George Mason, Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776)]

"The best antidote for crime is justice. The irony we often fail to appreciate is that the more justice people enjoy, the fewer crimes they commit. Crime is the natural offspring of an unjust society."
[Gerry Spence "With Justice For None" p.124]

"Keep justice, and do righteousness, for My salvation is about to come, and My righteousness is revealed. Blessed is the man who does this, and the son of man who lays hold of it; who keeps from defiling the Sabbath, and keeps his hand from doing any evil."
[Isaiah 56:1-2, Bible, NKJV]

"The lips of the righteous nourish many, but fools die for lack of judgment."
[Prov. 10:21, Bible, NKJV]

"Judge not according to appearance, but judge righteous judgment."

Jesus speaking in [John 7:24, Bible, NKJV]

"The sole end for which mankind are warranted, individually or collectively, in interfering with the liberty of any of their number is self-protection."

[John Stuart Mill, 1859]

"Woe to those who decree unrighteous decrees, who write misfortune, which they have prescribed to rob the needy of justice, and to take what is right from the poor of My people. That widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherless. What will you do in the day of punishment, and in the desolation which will come from afar? To whom will you flee for help? And where will you leave your glory? Without Me they shall bow down among the prisoners, and they shall fall among the slain. For all this His anger is not turned away, but His hand is stretched out still."

[Isaiah 10:1-4, Bible, NKJV]

"Cursed is the one who perverts the justice due the stranger, the fatherless, and widow." "And all the people shall say, "Amen!"

[Deut. 27:19, Bible, NKJV]

"The LORD watches over the strangers; He relieves the fatherless and widow; But the way of the wicked He turns upside down."

[Psalm 146:9, Bible, NKJV]

"Defend the fatherless, Plead for the widow."

[Isaiah 1:17, Bible, NKJV]

"For if you thoroughly amend your ways and your doings, if you thoroughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbor, if you do not oppress the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, and do not shed innocent blood in this place, or walk after other gods to your hurt, then I will cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers forever and ever."

[Jer. 7:5-7, Bible, NKJV]

"Thus says the LORD: 'Execute judgment and righteousness, and deliver the plundered out of the hand of the oppressor. Do no wrong and do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, or the widow, nor shed innocent blood in this place.'"

[Jer. 22:3, Bible, NKJV]

"Do not oppress the widow or the fatherless, The alien or the poor. Let none of you plan evil in his heart Against his brother."

[Zech. 7:10, Bible, NKJV]

"There is no crueler tyranny than that which is perpetrated under the shield of law and in the name of justice."

[Montesquieu, 1742]

11.17 Law, Lawyers, Judges, and Jury Nullification...⁷⁹

"When we consider the nature and theory of our institutions of government, the principles upon which they are supposed to rest, and review the history of their development, we are constrained to conclude that they do not mean to leave room for the play and action of purely personal and arbitrary power. Sovereignty itself is, of course, not subject to law, for it is the author and source of law; but in our system, while sovereign powers are delegated to the agencies of government, sovereignty itself remains with the people, by whom and for whom all government exists and acts. And the law is the definition and limitation of power."

[Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901)]

⁷⁹ For additional information on lawyers, see: Who Were the Pharisees and Saducees?, Form #05.047; <http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm>.

Municipal law, thus understood, is properly defined to be "a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state, commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong."

[. . .]

It is also called a rule to distinguish it from a compact or agreement; for a compact is a promise proceeding from us, law is a command directed to us. The language of a compact is, "I will, or will not, do this"; that of a law is, "thou shalt, or shalt not, do it." It is true there is an obligation which a compact carries with it, equal in point of conscience to that of a law; but then the original of the obligation is different. In compacts we ourselves determine and promise what shall be done, before we are obliged to do it; in laws, we are obliged to act without ourselves determining or promising anything at all. Upon these accounts law is defined to be "a rule."

[Readings on the History and System of the Common Law, Second Edition, Roscoe Pound, 1925, p. 4]

I've had it with you! You're hopeless, you religion scholars, you Pharisees [lawyers within a theocracy]! Frauds! Your lives are roadblocks to God's kingdom. You refuse to enter, and won't let anyone else in either.

"You're hopeless, you religion scholars and Pharisees [lawyers within a theocracy]! Frauds! You go halfway around the world to make a convert, but once you get him you make him into a replica of yourselves, double-damned.

"You're hopeless! What arrogant stupidity! You say, 'If someone makes a promise with his fingers crossed, that's nothing; but if he swears with his hand on the Bible, that's serious.' What ignorance! Does the leather on the Bible carry more weight than the skin on your hands? And what about this piece of trivia: 'If you shake hands on a promise, that's nothing; but if you raise your hand that God is your witness, that's serious'? What ridiculous hairsplitting! What difference does it make whether you shake hands or raise hands? A promise is a promise. What difference does it make if you make your promise inside or outside a house of worship? A promise is a promise. God is present, watching and holding you to account regardless.

"You're hopeless, you religion scholars and Pharisees [lawyers within a theocracy]! Frauds! You keep meticulous account books, tithing on every nickel and dime you get, but on the meat of God's Law, things like fairness and compassion and commitment—the absolute basics!—you carelessly take it or leave it. Careful bookkeeping is commendable, but the basics are required. Do you have any idea how silly you look, writing a life story that's wrong from start to finish, nitpicking over commas and semicolons?

"You're hopeless, you religion scholars and Pharisees [lawyers within a theocracy]! Frauds! You burnish the surface of your cups and bowls so they sparkle in the sun, while the insides are maggoty with your greed and gluttony. Stupid Pharisee! Scour the insides, and then the gleaming surface will mean something.

"You're hopeless, you religion scholars and Pharisees [lawyers within a theocracy]! Frauds! You're like manicured grave plots, grass clipped and the flowers bright, but six feet down it's all rotting bones and worm-eaten flesh. People look at you and think you're saints, but beneath the skin you're total frauds.

"You're hopeless, you religion scholars and Pharisees [lawyers within a theocracy]! Frauds! You build granite tombs for your prophets and marble monuments for your saints. And you say that if you had lived in the days of your ancestors, no blood would have been on your hands. You protest too much! You're cut from the same cloth as those murderers, and daily add to the death count.

"Snakes! Reptilian sneaks! Do you think you can worm your way out of this? Never have to pay the piper? It's on account of people like you that I send prophets and wise guides and scholars generation after generation—and generation after generation you treat them like dirt, greeting them with lynch mobs, hounding them with abuse.

"You can't squirm out of this: Every drop of righteous blood ever spilled on this earth, beginning with the blood of that good man Abel right down to the blood of Zechariah, Barachiah's son, whom you murdered at his prayers, is on your head. All this, I'm telling you, is coming down on you, on your generation.

“Jerusalem! Jerusalem! Murderer of prophets! Killer of the ones who brought you God’s news! How often I’ve ached to embrace your children, the way a hen gathers her chicks under her wings, and you wouldn’t let me. And now you’re so desolate, nothing but a ghost town. What is there left to say? Only this: I’m out of here soon. The next time you see me you’ll say, ‘Oh, God has blessed him! He’s come, bringing God’s rule!’”

“Power and law are not synonymous. In truth, they are frequently in opposition and irreconcilable. There is God’s Law from which all equitable laws of man emerge and by which men must live if they are not to die in oppression, chaos and despair. Divorced from God’s eternal and immutable Law, established before the founding of the suns, man’s power is evil no matter the noble words with which it is employed or the motives urged when enforcing it. Men of good will, mindful therefore of the Law laid down by God, will oppose governments whose rule is by men, and if they wish to survive as a nation they will destroy the government which attempts to adjudicate by the whim of venal judges.”

[Marcus Tullius Cicero, 106-43 B.C.]

"Laws don't work unless they merely codify generally accepted behavior, in which case they are probably unnecessary."
[Sovereignty Education and Defense Ministry (SEDM)]

"True Law is right reason in agreement with Nature, it is of universal application, unchanging and everlasting; it summons to duty by its commands and averts from wrong-doing by its prohibitions. And it does not lay its commands or prohibitions upon good men in vain, although neither have any effect upon the wicked. It is a sin to try to alter this law, nor is it allowable to try to repeal a part of it, and it is impossible to abolish it entirely. We cannot be freed from its obligations by Senate or People, and we need not look outside ourselves for an expounder or interpreter of it. And there will not be different laws at Rome or at Athens, or different laws now and in the future, but one eternal and unchangeable law will be valid for all times and all nations, and there will be one master and one rule, that is God, for He is the author of this law, its promulgator, and its enforcing judge."

[Cicero]

"The Law and Charity: You say: "There are persons who have no money," and you turn to the law, but the law is not a breast that fills itself with milk. Nor are the lacteal veins of the law supplied with milk from a source outside the society. Nothing can enter the public treasury for the benefit of one citizen or one class unless other citizens and other classes have been forced to send it in. If every person draws from the treasury the amount that he has put in it, it is true that the law then plunders nobody. But this procedure does nothing for the persons who have no money. It does not promote equality of income. The law can be an instrument of equalization only as it takes from some persons and gives to other persons. When the law does this, it is an instrument of plunder."

[Frederick Bastiat, The Law; <http://famguardian.org/Publications/TheLaw/TheLaw.htm>]

"Law Is a Negative Concept: The harmlessness of the mission performed by law and lawful defense is self-evident; the usefulness is obvious; and the legitimacy cannot be disputed.

As a friend of mine once remarked, this negative concept of law is so true that the statement, the purpose of the law is to cause justice to reign, is not a rigorously accurate statement. It ought to be stated that the purpose of the law is to prevent injustice from reigning. In fact, it is injustice, instead of justice, that has an existence of its own. Justice is achieved only when injustice is absent.

But when the law, by means of its necessary agent, force, imposes upon men a regulation of labor, a method or a subject of education, a religious faith or creed - then the law is no longer negative; it acts positively upon people. It substitutes the will of the legislator for their own initiatives. When this happens, the people no longer need to discuss, to compare, to plan ahead; the law does all this for them. Intelligence becomes a useless prop for the people; they cease to be men; they lose their personality, their liberty, their property.

Try to imagine a regulation of labor imposed by force that is not a violation of liberty; a transfer of wealth imposed by force that is not a violation of property. If you cannot reconcile these contradictions, then you must conclude that the law cannot organize labor and industry without organizing injustice."

“Men do not make laws. They do but discover them. Laws must be justified by something more than the will of the majority. They must rest on the eternal foundation of righteousness. That state is most fortunate in its form of government which has the aptest instruments for the discovery of law.”

[Calvin Coolidge, to the Massachusetts State Senate, January 7, 1914]

NATURAL LAW: A rule of conduct arising out of natural relations of human beings, established by the Creator, and existing prior to any positive precept. Webster. The foundation of this law is placed by the best writers in the will of God, discovered by reason, and aided by divine revelation: and its principles, when applicable, apply with equal obligation to individuals and to nations. 1 Kent. Comm. 2, note: Id. 4, note. See Jus Naturale.

The rule and dictate of right reason showing the moral deformity of moral necessity there is in any act, according to its suitableness or unsuitableness to a reasonable nature. Tayl. Civil Law, 99.

This expression, “natural law,” or jus naturale, was largely used in the philosophical speculations of the Roman jurists of the Attonine age, and was intended to denote a system of rules and principles for the guidance of human conduct which, independently of enacted law or of the systems peculiar to any one people, might be discovered by the rational intelligence of man, and would be found to grow out of and conform to his nature, meaning by that word his whole mental, moral, and physical constitution. The point of departure for this conception was the Stoic doctrine of a life ordered “according to nature,” which in its turn rested upon the purely suppositious existence, in primitive times, of a “state of nature;” that is, a condition of society in which men universally were governed solely by a rational and consistent obedience to the needs, impulses, and promptings of their true nature, such nature being as yet undefaced by dishonesty, falsehood, or indulgence of the baser passions. See Maine, Anc. Law, 50 et seq.

We understand all laws to be either human or divine, according as they have man or God for their author; and divine laws are of two kinds, that is to say: (1) Natural laws; (2) positive or revealed laws. A natural law is deemed to Burlamaqui to be “a rule which so necessarily agrees with the nature and state of man that, without observing its maxims, the peace and happiness of society can never be preserved.” And he says that these are called “natural laws” because a knowledge of them may be attained merely by the light of reason, from the fact of their essential agreeableness with the constitution of human nature; while, on the contrary, positive or revealed laws are not founded upon the general constitution of human nature, but only upon the will of God; though in other respects such law is established upon very good reason, and procures the advantage of those to whom it is sent. The ceremonial or political laws of the Jews are of this latter class. Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 527, 44 Am. Dec. 217.

“Shall the throne of iniquity, which devises evil by law, have fellowship with You? They gather together against the life of the righteous, and condemn innocent blood. But the Lord has been my defense, and my God the rock of my refuge. He has brought on them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness; the Lord our God shall cut them off.”

[Tacitus, Roman historian 55-117 A.D.]

“Sometimes the law defends plunder and participates in it. Thus the beneficiaries are spared the shame and danger that their acts would otherwise involve... But how is this legal plunder to be identified? Quite simply. See if the law takes from some persons what belongs to them and gives it to the other persons to whom it doesn't belong. See if the law benefits one citizen at the expense of another by doing what the citizen himself cannot do without committing a crime. Then abolish that law without delay ... No legal plunder; this is the principle of justice, peace, order, stability, harmony and logic”

"Every man is supposed to know the law. A party who makes a contract with an officer [of the government] without having it reduced to writing is knowingly accessory to a violation of duty on his part. Such a party aids in the violation of the law."

[Clark v. United States, 95 U.S. 539 (1877)]

It is one of the fundamental maxims of the common law that ignorance of the law excuses no one. If ignorance of the law could in all cases be the foundation of a suit in equity for relief, there would be no end of litigation, and the administration of justice would become in effect impracticable. There would be but few cases in which one party or the other would not allege it as a ground for exemption from legal liability, and the extent of the legal knowledge of each individual suitor would be the material fact on which judgment would be founded. Instead of trying the facts of the case and applying the law to such facts, the time of the court would be occupied in determining whether or not the parties knew the law at the time the contract was made or the transaction entered into. The administration of justice in the courts is a practical system for the regulation of the transactions of life in the business world. It assumes, and must assume, that all persons of sound and mature mind know the law, otherwise there would be no security in legal rights and no certainty in judicial investigations.”

[Daniels v. Dean, 2 Cal.App. 421, 84 P. 332 (1905)]

"Regulation - which is based on force and fear - undermines the moral base of business dealings. It becomes cheaper to bribe a building inspector than to meet his standards of construction. A fly-by-night securities operator can quickly meet all the S.E.C. requirements, gain the inference of respectability, and proceed to fleece the public. In an unregulated economy, the operator would have had to spend a number of years in reputable dealings before he could earn a position of trust sufficient to induce a number of investors to place funds with him. Protection of the consumer by regulation is thus illusory."

[Alan Greenspan]

"The constitution, on this hypothesis, is a mere thing of wax in the hands of the judiciary, which they may twist and shape into any form they please. It should be remembered, as an axiom of eternal truth in politics, that whatever power in any government is independent, is absolute also; in theory only, at first, while the spirit of the people is up, but in practice, as fast as that relaxes. Independence can be trusted nowhere but with the people in mass. They are inherently independent of all but moral law."

"The germ of destruction of our nation is in the power of the judiciary, an irresponsible body - working like gravity by night and by day, gaining a little today and a little tomorrow, and advancing its noiseless step like a thief over the field of jurisdiction, until all shall render powerless the checks of one branch over the other and will become as venal and oppressive as the government from which we separated."

[Thomas Jefferson, 1821]

"All the extravagance and incompetence of our present government is due, in the main, to lawyers ... They are responsible for nine-tenths of the useless and vicious laws that now clutter the statute books, and for the evils that go with the vain attempt to enforce them ..."

"... ours is a sick profession marked by incompetence, lack of training, misconduct and bad manners. Ineptness, bungling, malpractice, and bad ethics can be observed in court houses all over this country every day ... these incompetents have a seeming unawareness of the fundamental ethics of the profession. ... the harsh truth is that ... we may well be on our way to a society, overrun by hordes of lawyers, hungry as locusts, and brigades of judges in numbers never before contemplated."

[Chief Justice of the United States Warren Burger]

"Lawyers are being graduated from our law schools by the thousands who have little knowledge of the Constitution. When organizations seek a lawyer to instruct them on the Constitution, they find it nearly impossible to secure one competent."

"... You will recollect that before the Revolution, Coke Littleton was the universal elementary book of law students, and a sounder Whig never wrote, nor a profounder learning in the orthodox doctrines of the British constitution, or in what were called English liberties. You will remember also that our lawyers were then all Whigs. But when his black-letter text, and uncouth but cunning learning got out of fashion, and the honeyed Mansfieldism of Blackstone became the students' hornbook, from that moment, that profession (the nursery of our Congress) began to slide into toryism, and nearly all the young brood of lawyers now are of that hue. They suppose themselves, indeed to be Whigs, because they no longer know what Whigism or republicanism means."

"The only honest dollar is a dollar of stable, debt-paying, purchasing power. The only honest dollar is a dollar which repays the creditor the value he lent and no more, and requires the debtor to pay the value borrowed and no more."

"The money power preys upon the nation in times of peace, and conspires against it in times of adversity. It is more despotic than monarchy, more insolent than autocracy, more selfish than bureaucracy. It denounces, as public enemies, all who question its methods or throw light upon its crimes."

[Abraham Lincoln]

"We have stricken the (slave) shackles from four million human beings and brought all laborers to a common level, not so much by the elevation of former slaves as by practically reducing the whole working population, white and black, to a condition of serfdom. While boasting of our noble deeds, we are careful to conceal the ugly fact that by our iniquitous money system we have nationalized a system of oppression which, though more refined, is no less cruel than the old system of chattel slavery."

[Horace Greeley]

"Very soon, every American will be required to register their biological property (that's you and your children) in a national system designed to keep track of the people and that will operate under the ancient system of pledging. By such methodology, we can compel people to submit to our agenda, which will affect our security as a charge back for our fiat paper currency. Every American will be forced to register or suffer being able to work and earn a living. They will be our chattels (property) and we will hold the security interest over them forever, by operation of the lawmerchant under the scheme of secured transactions. Americans, by unknowingly or unwittingly delivering the bills of lading (Birth Certificate) to us will be rendered bankrupt and insolvent, secured by their pledges. They will be stripped of their rights and given a commercial value designed to make us a profit and they will be none the wiser, for not one man in a million could ever figure our plans and, if by accident one or two should figure it out, we have in our arsenal plausible deniability. After all, this is the only logical way to fund government, by floating liens and debts to the registrants in the form of benefits and privileges. This will inevitably reap us huge profits beyond our wildest expectations and leave every American a contributor to this fraud, which we will call "Social Insurance." Without realizing it, every American will unknowingly be our servant, however begrudgingly. The people will become helpless and without any hope for their redemption and we will employ the high office (presidency) of our dummy corporation(USA) to foment this plot against America."

[Colonel Edward Mandell House, stated in a private meeting with Woodrow Wilson(President 1913 - 1921)]

"In the absence of the gold standard, (H.J.R. 192 June 5th 1933) there is no way to protect savings from confiscation through inflation. There is no safe store of value. If there were, the government would have to make its holding illegal, as was done in the case of gold. If everyone decided, for example, to convert all his bank deposits to silver or copper or any other good, and thereafter declined to accept checks as payment for goods, bank deposits would lose their purchasing power and government-created bank credit would be worthless as a claim on goods. The financial policy of the welfare state requires that there be no way for the owners of wealth to protect themselves. This is the shabby secret of the welfare statist's tirades against gold. Deficit spending is simply a scheme for the confiscation of wealth. Gold stands in the way of this insidious process. It stands as a protector of property rights. If one grasps this, one has no difficulty in understanding the statist's antagonism toward the gold standard."

[Alan Greenspan in 1966]

"That is simple - in the Colonies, we issue our own money. It is called Colonial Script - we issue it in proper proportion to the demands of trade and industry."

[Benjamin Franklin in London, answering an agent of the Rothschild house who asked him how he accounted for the prosperous condition of the Colonies]

"In one year [1765] the conditions were so reversed that the era of prosperity ended, a depression set in, to such an extent that the streets of the Colonies were filled with unemployed. The Bank of England refused to give more than 50 per cent of the face value of the Script when turned over as required by law. The circulating medium of exchange was thus reduced by half ... the Colonies would gladly have born the little tax on tea and other matters had it not been that England took away from the Colonies their money, which created unemployment and dissatisfaction."

"As long as you have your wealth in the form of paper claims, you are prey to swindlers and con men, both those who work through government and those who work outside the law. Since almost all of the manipulation, subterfuge, and theft of your wealth occurs while it is in paper claims, you have a simple and obvious defense; keep your wealth in real goods instead of paper claims. The only safe, rational investment program for the average person in today's turbulent economy is to eliminate the intermediate step. Instead of converting labor into money, money into investments, investments back into money, and money into real goods, simply stated, invest your savings in those real things that you will be consuming in the future. "Gold is still the ultimate store of wealth. It's the world's only true money. And there isn't much of it to go around. All of it ever mined would fit into a small building - a 56 foot cube. [Art Rolnick, former Chief Economist, Minneapolis Federal Reserve Bank]

"Historically, the United States has been a hard money country. Only [since 1913] has the United States operated on a fiat money system. During this period, paper money has depreciated over 87%. During the preceding 140 year period, the hard currency of the United States had actually maintained its value. Wholesale prices in 1913 ... were the same as in 1787."
[Kenneth Gerbino, former chairman of the American Economic Council]

"About all a Federal Reserve note can legally do is wipe out one debt and replace it with itself, another debt, a note that promises nothing. If anything's been paid, the payment occurs only in the minds of the parties"
[Tupper Saucy, author of "The Miracle On Main Street"]

"By a continuing process of inflation, governments can confiscate, secretly and unobserved, an important part of the wealth of their citizens. There is no subtler, no surer means of overturning the existing basis of society than to debauch the currency. The process engages all the hidden forces of economic law on the side of destruction, and does it in a manner which not one man in a million is able to diagnose ... If, however, a government refrains from regulations and allows matters to take their course, essential commodities soon attain a level of price out of the reach of all but the rich, the worthlessness of the money becomes apparent, and the fraud upon the public can be concealed no longer."

[John Maynard Keynes, economist and author of "The Economic Consequences Of The Peace" (1920)]

"The law of supply and demand is not to be conned. As the supply of money (of claims) increases relative to the supply of tangible assets in the economy, prices must eventually rise. Thus, the earnings saved by the productive members of the society lose value in terms of goods. When the economy's books are finally balanced, one finds that this loss in value represents the goods purchased by the government for welfare or other purposes with the money proceeds of the government bonds financed by bank credit expansion."

"The truly unique power of a central bank, after all, is the power to create money, and ultimately the power to create is the power to destroy."

"... a fiat money is a medium of exchange composed of some intrinsically valueless substance which the issuer does not promise to redeem in a commodity or a fiduciary money. Because a fiat money has no direct legal connexion to a commodity money (in terms of redemption) and, therefore, no real economic cost to its production, the supply of a fiat money can never be self-limiting; and the value of a fiat money is always largely a matter of public confidence in the economic or political stability of the issuer. For these reasons, historically almost all fiat monies have self-destructed in what is popularly called "hyperinflation" (that is, extreme decreases in the purchasing-power) caused by either unlimited increases in the supply of those fiat monies by the issuers or accelerating loss of public confidence in the continued value of the money or economic or political fortunes of their issuers, or both."

"If the holders of these promises to pay started in to demand gold the first comers would get gold for a few days and they would amount to about one twenty-fifth of the holders of the securities and the currency. The other twenty-four people out of twenty-five, who did not happen to be at the top of the line, would be told politely that there was no more gold left. We have decided to treat all twenty-five in the same way in the interest of justice and the exercise of the constitutional powers of this government. We have placed every one on the same basis in order that the general good may be preserved."

[Radio Address of the President, May 7, 1933; Outlining the New Deal Program - Fireside Chat #2]

"Inflation has now been institutionalized at a fairly constant 5% per year. This has been scientifically determined to be the optimum level for generating the most revenue without causing public alarm. A 5% devaluation applies, not only to the money earned this year, but to all that is left over from previous years. At the end of the first year, a dollar is worth 95 cents. At the end of the second year, the 95 cents is reduced again by 5%, leaving its worth at 90 cents, and so on. By the time a person has worked 20 years, the government will have confiscated 64% of every dollar he saved over those years. By the time he has worked 45 years, the hidden tax will be 90%. The government will take virtually everything a person saves over a lifetime."

[G. Edward Griffin, historian and author of "The Creature From Jekyll Island"]

"The real truth of the matter is, and you and I know, that a financial element in the large centers has owned the government of the U.S. since the days of Andrew Jackson. History depicts Andrew Jackson as the last truly honorable and incorruptible American president."

[President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, November 23, 1933 in a letter to Colonel Edward Mandell House]

"The Founding Fathers of this great land had no difficulty whatsoever understanding the agenda of bankers, and they frequently referred to them and their kind as, quote, "friends of paper money. They hated the Bank of England, in particular, and felt that even were we successful in winning our independence from England and King George, we could never truly be a nation of freemen, unless we had an honest money system. Through ignorance, but moreover, because of apathy, a small, but wealthy, clique of power brokers have robbed us of our Rights and Liberties, and we are being raped of our wealth. We are paying the price for the near-comatose levels of complacency by our parents, and only God knows what might become of our children, should we not work diligently to shake this country from its slumber! Many a nation has lost its freedom at the end of a gun barrel, but here in America, we just decided to hand it over voluntarily. Worse yet, we paid for the tyranny and usurpation out of our own pockets with "voluntary" tax contributions and the use of a debt-laden fiat currency!."

[Peter Kershaw, author of the 1994 booklet "Economic Solutions"]

"Those who create and issue money and credit direct the policies of government and hold in the hollow of their hands the destiny of the people."

[Rt. Hon. Reginald McKenna, former Chancellor of Exchequer, England]

"Bankers own the earth. Take it away from them, but leave them the power to create money and control credit, and with a flick of a pen they will create enough to buy it back."

[Sir Josiah Stamp, former President, Bank of England]

"Money is the most important subject intellectual persons can investigate and reflect upon. It is so important that our present civilization may collapse unless it is widely understood and its defects remedied very soon."

[Robert H. Hemphill, former credit manager, Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta]

"Banks lend by creating credit. They create the means of payment out of nothing."

[Ralph M. Hawtrey, former Secretary of Treasury, England]

"Whoever controls the volume of money in any country is absolute master of all industry and commerce."

[President James A. Garfield]

"Emitting bills of credit, or the creation of money by private corporations, is what is expressly forbidden by Article 1, Section 10 of the U.S. Constitution."

[U.S. Supreme Court in Craig v. Missouri, 4 Peters 410]

"The actual process of money creation takes place in commercial banks. As noted earlier, demand liabilities of commercial banks are money."

[Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago in "Modern Money Mechanics"]

"Commercial banks create checkbook money whenever they grant a loan, simply by adding new deposit dollars in accounts on their books in exchange for a borrower's IOU."

[Federal reserve Bank of New York, "I Bet You Thought"]

"Without the confidence factor, many believe a paper money system is liable to collapse eventually."

[Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia in "Gold"]

"You have to choose [as a voter] between trusting to the natural stability of gold and the natural stability of the honesty and intelligence of the members of the Government. And, with due respect for these gentlemen, I advise you, as long as the Capitalist system lasts, to vote for gold."

[George Bernard Shaw]

"We are in danger of being overwhelmed with irredeemable paper, mere paper, representing not gold nor silver; no sir, representing nothing but broken promises, bad faith, bankrupt corporations, cheated creditors and a ruined people."

[Daniel Webster, speech in the Senate, 1833]

"The distress and alarm which pervaded and agitated the whole country when the Bank of the United States waged war upon the people in order to compel them to submit to its demands can not yet be forgotten....Yet, if you had not conquered, the Government would have passed from the hands of the many to the hands of the few, and this organized money power from its secret conclave would have dictated the choice of your highest officers and compelled you to make peace or war, as best suited their own wishes. The forms of your Government might for a time have remained, but its living spirit would have departed from it. The distress and sufferings inflicted on the people by the bank are some of the fruits of that system of policy which is continually striving to enlarge the authority of the Federal Government beyond the limits fixed by the Constitution....The power which moneyed interest can exercise, when concentrated under a single head and with our present system of currency, was sufficiently demonstrated in the struggle made by the Bank of the United States....The paper-money system and its natural associations - monopoly and exclusive privileges - have already struck their root too deep in the soil, and it will require all your efforts to check its further growth and to eradicate the evil. The men who profit by the abuses and desire to perpetuate them will continue to besiege the halls of legislation in the General Government...and will seek by every artifice to mislead and deceive the public servants...."

[Andrew Jackson, March 4, 1837, in his Farewell Address]

"The decrease in purchasing power incurred by holders of money due to inflation imparts gains to the issuers of money"

[St. Louis Federal Reserve Bank in "Review", Nov. 1975]

"We repeat, and respectfully submit, that in view of the foregoing facts, it is clearly established that Hungary did not cause and did not bring about the last World War (WWI). The responsibility for the last World War rests solely upon the shoulders of international bankers. It is they upon whose head the blood of millions of dead and millions of dying rests."

[From the March 3, 1923 Congressional Record, 67th Congress, 4th Session, Senate Document No. 346 titled "Justice For Hungary" by Senator LaFollette"]

As quickly as you start spending federal money in large amounts, it looks like free money."

[President Dwight D. Eisenhower, February 9, 1955]

"Mr. Speaker, we are now in Chapter 11 ... Members of Congress are official trustees presiding over the greatest reorganization of any bankrupt entity in world history."

[James Traficant, Congressman, March 17, 1993 in the Congressional Record]

"The creation of money exclusively as debt is the critical, destabilizing flaw in the American Economy".

[Author Theodore R. Thoren explains The Truth In Money Book]

"The budget should be balanced, the treasury should be refilled and the public debt should be reduced. The arrogance of public officialdom should be tempered and controlled. And the assistance to foreign lands should be curtailed, lest we become bankrupt."

[Cicero, 63 B.C.]

"It is a cruel thought, that, when we feel ourselves standing on the firmest ground in every respect, the cursed arts of our secret enemies, combining with other causes, should effect, by depreciating our money, what the open arms of a powerful enemy could not."

[Thomas Jefferson to Richard Henry Lee, 1779. ME 4:298, Papers 2:298]

"Paper money has had the effect in your state that it will ever have, to ruin commerce, oppress the honest, and open the door to every species of fraud and injustice." -- George Washington, in a letter to J. Bowen, Rhode Island, Jan. 9, 1787

"Of all contrivances for cheating the laboring classes of mankind, none has been more effective than that which deludes them with paper money."

[Daniel Webster]

The conditions of the loan seem to us to touch very nearly the administrative independence of China itself; and this administration does not feel that it ought, even by implication, to be a party to those conditions. The responsibility on its part which would be implied in requesting the bankers to undertake the loan might conceivably go to the length, in some unhappy contingency, of forcible interference in the financial, and even the political, affairs of that great Oriental state, just now awakening to a consciousness of its power and of its obligations to its people.

The conditions include not only the pledging of particular taxes, some of them antiquated and burdensome, to secure the loan but also the administration of those taxes by foreign agents. The responsibility on the part of our government implied in the encouragement of a loan thus secured and administered is plain enough and is obnoxious to the principles upon which the government of our people rests.†

11.19 The Militia and the Right to Bear Arms ...⁸¹

"What, Sir, is the use of a militia? It is to prevent the establishment of a standing army, the bane of liberty. ... Whenever Governments mean to invade the rights and liberties of the people, they always attempt to destroy the militia, in order to raise an army upon their ruins."

[Rep. Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts, spoken during floor debate over the Second Amendment, I Annals of Congress at 750, August 17, 1789]

"Firearms stand next in importance to the Constitution itself. They are the American people's liberty teeth and keystone under independence. From the hour the Pilgrims landed, to the present day, events, occurrences and tendencies prove that to ensure peace, security and happiness, the rifle and pistol are equally indispensable. The very atmosphere of firearms everywhere restrains evil interference - they deserve a place of honor with all that's good."

[George Washington, Commanding General of the Continental Army, Father of Our Country and First President of the United States in a speech to Congress, January 7, 1790]

"1935 will go down in history. For the first time, a civilized nation has full gun registration. Our streets will be safer, our police more efficient, and the world will follow our lead into the future."

[Adolf Hitler]

"While some want to pass new protections for gun manufacturers, to shield them from lawsuits, I will work to get guns off the streets, out of the schools and away from children and criminals."

[Vice President, Al Gore, announcing his candidacy for President, 6/16/99]

"A free people ought not only to be armed, but disciplined; to which end a uniform and well-digested plan is requisite; and their safety and interest require that they should promote such manufactories as tend to render them independent of others for essential, particularly military, supplies ...".

[George Washington, in his First Annual Address, January 8, 1790]

"Gun Control? It's the best thing you can do for crooks and gangsters. I want you to have nothing. If I'm a bay guy, I'm always gonna' have a gun. Safety locks? You pull a trigger with a lock on, and I'll pull the trigger. We'll see who wins."

[Former mobster Sammy "The Bull" Gravano, who testified against John Gotti (his former boss), admitted to killing nineteen people, and is now living under the Witness Protection Program]

"If you take out the killings, Washington actually has a very low crime rate."

[Marion Barry, four-time mayor of Washington, D.C.]

"I am convinced that we can do to guns what we've done to drugs: create a multi-billion dollar underground market over which we have absolutely no control."

[George L. Roman]

"The strongest reason for the people to retain the right to keep and bear arms is, as a last resort, to protect themselves against tyranny in government."

[Thomas Jefferson]

11.20 Franchises, Benefits, Welfare State⁸²

FRANCHISE. A special privilege conferred by government on individual or corporation, and which does not belong to citizens of country generally of common right. Elliott v. City of Eugene, 135 Or. 108, 294 P. 358, 360. In England it is defined to be a royal privilege in the hands of a subject.

⁸¹ For detailed information about gun control, see: Gun Control Topic, Family Guardian Fellowship; <http://famguardian.org/Subjects/GunControl/GunControl.htm>;

⁸² For detailed information about franchises, benefits, and the welfare state, see:

1. Government Instituted Slavery Using Franchises, Form #05.030; <http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm>.
2. The Government "Benefits" Scam, Form #05.040; <http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm>.

A "franchise," as used by Blackstone in defining quo warranto, (3 Com. 262 [4th Am. Ed.] 322), had reference to a royal privilege or branch of the king's prerogative subsisting in the hands of the subject, and must arise from the king's grant, or be held by prescription, but today we understand a franchise to be some special privilege conferred by government on an individual, natural or artificial, which is not enjoyed by its citizens in general. State v. Fernandez, 106 Fla. 779, 143 So. 638, 639, 86 A.L.R. 240.

In this country a franchise is a privilege or immunity of a public nature, which cannot be legally exercised without legislative grant. To be a corporation is a franchise. The various powers conferred on corporations are franchises. The execution of a policy of insurance by an insurance company [e.g. Social Insurance/Socialist Security], and the issuing a bank note by an incorporated bank [such as a Federal Reserve NOTE], are franchises. People v. Utica Ins. Co., 15 Johns. (N.Y.) 387, 8 Am.Dec. 243. But it does not embrace the property acquired by the exercise of the franchise. Bridgeport v. New York & N.H. R. Co., 36 Conn. 255, 4 Am.Rep. 63. Nor involve interest in land acquired by grantee. Whitbeck v. Funk, 140 Or. 70, 12 P.2d. 1019, 1020. In a popular sense, the political rights of subjects and citizens are franchises, such as the right of suffrage. etc. Pierce v. Emery, 32 N.H. 484; State v. Black Diamond Co., 97 Ohio.St. 24, 119 N.E. 195, 199, L.R.A. 1918E, 352.

Elective Franchise. The right of suffrage: the right or privilege of voting in public elections.

Exclusive Franchise. See Exclusive Privilege or Franchise.

General and Special. The charter of a corporation is its "general" franchise, while a "special" franchise consists in any rights granted by the public to use property for a public use but-with private profit. Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 194 N.Y. 212, 87 N.E. 443, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 420.

Personal Franchise. A franchise of corporate existence, or one which authorizes the formation and existence of a corporation, is sometimes called a "personal" franchise. as distinguished from a "property" franchise, which authorizes a corporation so formed to apply its property to some particular enterprise or exercise some special privilege in its employment, as, for example, to construct and operate a railroad. See Sandham v. Nye, 9 Misc.Rep. 541, 30 N.Y.S. 552.

Secondary Franchises. The franchise of corporate existence being sometimes called the "primary" franchise of a corporation, its "secondary" franchises are the special and peculiar rights, privileges, or grants which it may, receive under its charter or from a municipal corporation, such as the right to use the public streets, exact tolls, collect fares, etc. State v. Topeka Water Co., 61 Kan. 547, 60 P. 337; Virginia Canon Toll Road Co. v. People, 22 Colo. 429, 45 P. 398 37 L.R.A. 711. The franchises of a corporation are divisible into (1) corporate or general franchises; and (2) "special or secondary franchises. The former is the franchise to exist as a corporation, while the latter are certain rights and privileges conferred upon existing corporations. Gulf Refining Co. v. Cleveland Trust Co., 166 Miss. 759, 108 So. 158, 160.

Special Franchisee. See Secondary Franchises, supra.

"Of all tyrannies, a tyranny sincerely exercised for the good of its victims may be the most oppressive. It would be better to live under robber barons than under omnipotent moral busybodies. The robber baron's cruelty may sometimes sleep, his cupidity may at some point be satiated; but those who torment us for our own good will torment us without end for they do so with the approval of their own conscience."

[C.S. Lewis]

"Cujus est commodum ejus debet esse incommodum.

"The words "privileges" and "immunities," like the greater part of the legal phraseology of this country, have been carried over from the law of Great Britain, and recur constantly either as such or in equivalent expressions from the time of Magna Charta. For all practical purposes they are synonymous in meaning, and originally signified a peculiar right or private law conceded to particular persons or places whereby a certain individual or class of individuals was exempted from the rigor of the common law. Privilege or immunity is conferred upon any person when he is invested with a legal claim to the exercise of special or peculiar rights, authorizing him to enjoy some particular advantage or exemption."

"We can hardly find a denial of due process in these circumstances, particularly since it is even doubtful that appellee's burdens under the program outweigh his benefits. It is hardly lack of due process for the Government to regulate that which it subsidizes."

[Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 63 S.Ct. 82 (1942)]

"You shall make no covenant [contract or franchise] with them [foreigners, pagans], nor with their [pagan government] gods [laws or judges]. They shall not dwell in your land [and you shall not dwell in theirs by becoming a "resident" or domiciliary in the process of contracting with them], lest they make you sin against Me [God]. For if you serve their [government] gods [under contract or agreement or franchise], it will surely be a snare to you."

[Exodus 23:32-33, Bible, NKJV]

"Awake, awake, O Zion, clothe yourself with strength. Put on your garments of splendor, O Jerusalem, the holy city. The uncircumcised and defiled will not enter you again. Shake off your dust; rise up, sit enthroned, O Jerusalem [Christians]. Free yourself from the chains [contracts and franchises] on your neck, O captive Daughter of Zion. For this is what the LORD says: "You were sold for nothing [free government cheese worth a fraction of what you had to pay them to earn the right to "eat" it], and without money you will be redeemed."

[Isaiah 52:1-3, Bible, NKJV]

"I [God] brought you up from Egypt [slavery] and brought you to the land of which I swore to your fathers; and I said, 'I will never break My covenant with you. And you shall make no covenant [contract or franchise or agreement of ANY kind] with the inhabitants of this [corrupt pagan] land; you shall tear down their [man/government worshipping socialist] altars.' But you have not obeyed Me. Why have you done this?"

"Therefore I also said, 'I will not drive them out before you; but they will become as thorns [terrorists and persecutors] in your side and their gods will be a snare [slavery!] to you.'"

So it was, when the Angel of the LORD spoke these words to all the children of Israel, that the people lifted up their voices and wept.

[Judges 2:1-4, Bible, NKJV]

'For among My [God's] people are found wicked [covetous public servant] men; They lie in wait as one who sets snares; They set a trap; They catch men. As a cage is full of birds, So their houses are full of deceit. Therefore they have become great and grown rich. They have grown fat, they are sleek; Yes, they surpass the deeds of the wicked; They do not plead the cause, The cause of the fatherless [or the innocent, widows, or the nontaxpayer]; Yet they prosper, And the right of the needy

The Congress finds and declares that the Communist Party of the United States [consisting of the IRS, DOJ, and a corrupted federal judiciary], although purportedly a political party, is in fact an instrumentality of a conspiracy to overthrow the [de jure] Government of the United States [and replace it with a de facto government ruled by the judiciary]. It constitutes an authoritarian dictatorship [IRS, DOJ, and corrupted federal judiciary in collusion] within a [constitutional] republic, demanding for itself the rights and [FRANCHISE] privileges [including immunity from prosecution for their wrongdoing in violation of Article 1, Section 9, Clause 8 of the Constitution] accorded to political parties, but denying to all others the liberties [Bill of Rights] guaranteed by the Constitution [Form #10.002]. Unlike political parties, which evolve their policies and programs through public means, by the reconciliation of a wide variety of individual views, and submit those policies and programs to the electorate at large for approval or disapproval, the policies and programs of the Communist Party are secretly [by corrupt judges and the IRS in complete disregard of, Form #05.014, the tax franchise "codes", Form #05.001] prescribed for it by the foreign leaders of the world Communist movement [the IRS and Federal Reserve]. Its members [the Congress, which was terrorized to do IRS bidding by the framing of Congressman Traficant] have no part in determining its goals, and are not permitted to voice dissent to party objectives. Unlike members of political parties, members of the Communist Party are recruited for indoctrination [in the public FOOL system by homosexuals, liberals, and socialists] with respect to its objectives and methods, and are organized, instructed, and disciplined [by the IRS and a corrupted judiciary] to carry into action slavishly the assignments given them by their hierarchical chieftains. Unlike political parties, the Communist Party [thanks to a corrupted federal judiciary] acknowledges no constitutional or statutory limitations upon its conduct or upon that of its members [ANARCHISTS!, Form #08.020]. The Communist Party is relatively small numerically, and gives scant indication of capacity ever to attain its ends by lawful political means. The peril inherent in its operation arises not from its numbers, but from its failure to acknowledge any limitation as to the nature of its activities, and its dedication to the proposition that the present constitutional Government of the United States ultimately must be brought to ruin by any available means, including resort to; force and violence [or using income taxes]. Holding that doctrine, its role as the agency of a hostile foreign power [the Federal Reserve and the American Bar Association (ABA)] renders its existence a clear present and continuing danger to the security of the United States. It is the means whereby individuals are seduced [illegally KIDNAPPED via identity theft!, Form #05.046] into the service of the world Communist movement [using FALSE information returns and other PERJURIOUS government forms, Form #04.001], trained to do its bidding [by FALSE government publications and statements that the government is not accountable for the accuracy of, Form #05.007], and directed and controlled [using FRANCHISES illegally enforced upon NONRESIDENTS, Form #05.030] in the conspiratorial performance of their revolutionary services. Therefore, the Communist Party should be outlawed

Mr. Logan: "...Natural laws can not be created, repealed, or modified by legislation. Congress should know there are many things which it can not do..."

"It is now proposed to make the Federal Government the guardian of its citizens. If that should be done, the Nation soon must perish. There can only be a free nation when the people themselves are free and administer the government which they have set up to protect their rights. Where the general government must provide work, and incidentally food and clothing for its citizens, freedom and individuality will be destroyed and eventually the citizens will become serfs to the general government..."

"The great object was to get rid of Christianity and to convert our churches into halls of science... the plan was not to make open attacks upon religion - although we might belabor the clergy and bring them into contempt where we could ... but to establish a system of state - we said national - schools... from which all religion would be excluded and to which all parents were to be compelled by law to send their children."

he retains full control of, subject to these limitations: First, that he shall not use it to his neighbor's injury, and that does not mean that he must use it for his neighbor's benefit; second, that if he devotes it to a public use, he gives to the public a right to control that use; and third, that whenever the public needs require, the public may take it upon payment of due compensation.

[Abraham Lincoln]

"It stands to reason that where there's sacrifice, there's someone collecting sacrificial offerings. Where there is service, there is someone being served. The man who speaks to you of sacrifice speaks of slaves and masters. And intends to be master."

[Ayn Rand]

"It's illegal to say to a voter 'Here's $100, vote for me.' So what do the politicians do? They offer the $100 in the form of Health Care, Social Security, Unemployment Insurance, Food Stamps, tobacco subsidies, grain payments, NEA payments, and jobs programs."

"The state is the great fictitious entity by which everyone seeks to live at the expense of everyone else."

[Fredric Bastiat, early French economist]

"Socialism is not in the least what it pretends to be. It is not the pioneer of a better and finer world, but the spoiler of what thousands of years of civilization have created. It does not build, it destroys. For destruction is the essence of it. It produces nothing, it only consumes what the social order based on private ownership in the means of production has created."

[Ludwig von Mises ("Socialism", 1922)]

"It's no longer an issue of contention that privatization is a solution. You can always rely on government to make the right decision, but only after it has exhausted every other conceivable alternative."

[E. S. Savas, a management professor at Baruch College in New York who advised Giuliani during the campaign.]

"The war against illegal plunder has been fought since the beginning of the world. But how is ... legal plunder to be identified? Quite simply. See if the law takes from some persons what belongs to them, and gives it to other persons to whom it does not belong. See if the law benefits one citizen at the expense of another by doing what the citizen himself cannot do without committing a crime. Then abolish this law without delay ... If such a law is not abolished immediately, it will spread, multiply and develop into a system."

[Frederic Bastiat, French author of "The Law" (1848)]

"But why, you might ask, should the richest people in the world promote a socialistic system? The answer appears to be that under socialism the state owns everything, and these people intend, quite simply, to own the state. It is the neatest and completest way of bagging the lot!"

[W.D. Chalmers in "The Conspiracy Of Truth"]

"I don't like the income tax. Every time we talk about these taxes we get around to the idea of 'from each according to his capacity and to each according to his needs'. That's socialism. It's written into the Communist Manifesto. Maybe we ought to see that every person who gets a tax return receives a copy of the Communist Manifesto with it so he can see what's happening to him.."

[T. Coleman Andrews, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, May 25, 1956 in U.S. News & World Report]

"In 1833, a small group of Socialists met in London, announcing their intentions of converting the British economic system from capitalism to socialism. This group chose the name 'Fabian Society'. One of the leading members of the Fabian Society, author George Bernard Shaw, perhaps summed it up best when he said, quote: "... Socialism means equality of income or nothing ... under socialism you would not be allowed to be poor. You would be forcibly fed, clothed, lodged, taught, and employed whether you like it or not. If it were discovered that you had not character enough to be worth all this trouble, you might possibly be executed in a kindly manner; but whilst you were permitted to live you would have to live well."

[Edgar Wallace Robinson in his 1980 booklet titled "Rolling Thunder"]

"We cannot expect the Americans to jump from Capitalism to Communism, but we can assist their elected leaders in giving Americans small doses of Socialism, until they suddenly awake to find they have Communism."
[Nikita Krushchev, Premiere of the former Soviet Union, 3-1/2 months before his first visit to the United States]

"The American people will never knowingly adopt socialism. But, under the name of "liberalism", they will adopt every fragment of the socialist program, until one day America will be a socialist nation, without knowing how it happened."
[Norman Thomas, for many years the U.S. Socialist Party presidential candidate]

"America is like a healthy body and its resistance is three-fold: its patriotism, its morality and its spiritual life. If we can undermine these three areas, America will collapse from within."
[Joseph Stalin, former dictator of the Soviet Union]

"We will first take Eastern Europe, then the masses of Asia. We will surround the United States, which will be the last bastion of Capitalism. We will not have to attack. It will fall like overripe fruit into our hands."
[Lenin]

"The welfare state reduces a citizen to a client, subordinates them to a bureaucrat, and subjects them to rules that are anti-work, anti-family, anti-opportunity and anti-property... Humans forced to suffer under such anti-human rules naturally develop pathologies. The evening news is the natural result of the welfare state."
[Unknown]

"A policy of subsidizing failures will end in an economy strewn with capital-guzzling industries long past their time of profitability - old companies that cannot create jobs themselves, but can stand in the way of job creation."

11.21.2 Virginia Church Service Economic Stimulus Sermon

VIRGINIA CHURCH SERVICE - STIMULUS SERMON

Very little has changed in 4,000 years.

Good morning, brothers and sisters; It's always a delight to see the pews crowded on Sunday morning, and so eager to get into God's Word. Turn with me in your Bibles, if you will to the 47th chapter of Genesis, we'll begin our reading at verse 13, and go through verse 27.

Brother Ray, would you stand and read that great passage for us?(reading)... Thank you for that fine reading, Brother Ray.

So we see that economic hard times fell upon Egypt, and the people turned to the government of Pharaoh to deal with this for them. And Pharaoh nationalized the grain harvest, and placed the grain in great storehouses that he had built. So the people brought their money to Pharaoh, like a great tax increase, and gave it all to him willingly in return for grain. And this went on until their money ran out, and they were hungry again.

So when they went to Pharaoh after that, they brought their livestock - their cattle, their horses, their sheep, and their donkey - to barter for grain, and verse 17 says that only took them through the end of that year. But the famine wasn't over, was it?

So the next year, the people came before Pharaoh and admitted they had nothing left, except their land and their own lives. "There is nothing left in the sight of my lord but our bodies and our land. Why should we die before your eyes, both we and our land? Buy us and our land for food, and we with our land will be servants to Pharaoh." So they surrendered their homes, their land, and their real estate to Pharaoh's government, and then sold themselves into slavery to him in return for grain.

What can we learn from this, brothers and sisters? That turning to the government instead of to God to be our provider in hard times only leads to slavery? Yes! That the only reason government wants to be our provider is to also become our master? Yes!

But look how that passage ends, brothers and sisters! Thus Israel settled in the land of Egypt, in the land of Goshen. And they gained possessions in it, and were fruitful and multiplied greatly." God provided for His people, just as He always has! They didn't end up giving all their possessions to government, no, it says they gained possessions!

But I also tell you a great truth today, and an ominous one. We see the same thing happening today - the government today wants to "share the wealth" once again, to take it from us and redistribute it back to us. It wants to take control of healthcare, just as it has taken control of education, and ration it back to us, and when government rations it, then government decides who gets it, and how much, and what kind. And if we go along with it, and do it willingly, then we will wind up no differently than the people of Egypt did four thousand years ago - as slaves to the government, and as slaves to our leaders.

What Mr. Obama's government is doing now is no different from what Pharaoh's government did then and it will end the same. And a lot of people like to call Mr. Obama a "Messiah," don't they? Is he a Messiah? A savior? Didn't the Egyptians say, after Pharaoh made them his slaves, "You have saved our lives; may it please my lord, we will be servants to Pharaoh"? Well, I tell you this - I know the Messiah; the Messiah is a friend of mine; and Mr. OBAMA IS NO MESSIAH! No, brothers and sisters, if Mr. Obama is a character from the Bible, then he is Pharaoh.

Bow with me in prayer, if you will...

"Lord, You alone are worthy to be served, and we rely on You, and You alone. We confess that the government is not our deliverer, and never rightly will be. We read in the eighth chapter of 1 Samuel, when Samuel warned the people of what a ruler would do, where it says "And in that day you will cry out because of your king, whom you have chosen for yourselves, but the LORD will not answer you in that day.."

"And Lord, we acknowledge that day has come. We cry out to you because of the ruler that we have chosen for ourselves as a nation."

Lord, we pray for this nation. We pray for revival, and we pray for deliverance from those who would be our masters. Give us hearts to seek You and hands to serve You, and protect Your people from the atrocities of Pharaoh's government."

In God We Trust...Everyone from the government, legal, and political professions we distrust and investigate. Amen.

11.21.3 Catholic Doctrine on Socialism and Communism

PIUS IX (1846-1878)

The Overthrow of Order

"You are aware indeed, that the goal of this most iniquitous plot is to drive people to overthrow the entire order of human affairs and to draw them over to the wicked theories of this Socialism and Communism, by confusing them with perverted teachings."

[Encyclical Nostis et Nobiscum, December 8, 1849]

LEO XIII (1878-1903)*Overthrow is Deliberately Planned

“... For, the fear of God and reverence for divine laws being taken away, the authority of rulers despised, sedition permitted and approved, and the popular passions urged on to lawlessness, with no restraint save that of punishment, a change and overthrow of all things will necessarily follow. Yea, this change and overthrow is deliberately planned and put forward by many associations of communists and socialists.”
 [Encyclical Humanum Genus, April 20, 1884, n. 27]

Debasing the Natural Union of Man and Woman

“They [socialists, communists, or nihilists] debase the natural union of man and woman, which is held sacred even among barbarous peoples; and its bond, by which the family is chiefly held together, they weaken, or even deliver up to lust.
 [Encyclical Quod Apostolici Muneris, December 28, 1878, n. 1]

The Harvest of Misery

“...there is need for a union of brave minds with all the resources they can command. The harvest of misery is before our eyes, and the dreadful projects of the most disastrous national upheavals are threatening us from the growing power of the socialistic movement.”
 [Encyclical Graves de Communi Re, January 18, 1901, n. 21]

SAINT PIUS X (1903-1914)*The Dream of Re-Shaping Society will Bring Socialism

“But stranger still, alarming and saddening at the same time, are the audacity and frivolity of men who call themselves Catholics and dream of re-shaping society under such conditions, and of establishing on earth, over and beyond the pale of the Catholic Church, ‘the reign of love and justice’ ... What are they going to produce? ... A mere verbal and chimerical construction in which we shall see, glowing in a jumble, and in seductive confusion, the words Liberty, Justice, Fraternity, Love, Equality, and human exultation, all resting upon an ill-understood human dignity. It will be a tumultuous agitation, sterile for the end proposed, but which will benefit the less Utopian exploiters of the people. Yes, we can truly say that the Sillon, its eyes fixed on a chimera, brings Socialism in its train.”
 [Apostolic Letter Notre Charge Apostolique ("Our Apostolic Mandate") to the French Bishops, August 15, 1910, condemning the movement Le Sillon]

BENEDICT XV (1914-1922)*Never Forget the Condemnation of Socialism

“It is not our intention here to repeat the arguments which clearly expose the errors of Socialism and of similar doctrines. Our predecessor, Leo XIII, most wisely did so in truly memorable Encyclicals; and you, Venerable Brethren, will take the greatest care that those grave precepts are never forgotten, but that whenever circumstances call for it, they should be clearly expounded and inculcated in Catholic associations and congresses, in sermons and in the Catholic press.”

[Encyclical Ad Beatissimi Apostolorum, November 1, 1914, n. 13]

PIUS XI (1922-1939)*Socialism Cannot Be Reconciled with Catholic Doctrine

“We make this pronouncement: Whether considered as a doctrine, or an historical fact, or a movement, Socialism, if it remains truly Socialism, even after it has yielded to truth and justice on the points which we have mentioned, cannot be reconciled with the teachings of the Catholic Church because its concept of society itself is utterly foreign to Christian truth.”

[Encyclical Quadragesimo Anno, May 15, 1931, n. 117]

Catholic Socialism is a Contradiction

“[Socialism] is based nevertheless on a theory of human society peculiar to itself and irreconcilable with true Christianity. Religious socialism, Christian socialism, are contradictory terms; no one can be at the same time a good Catholic and a true socialist.” (Ibid. n. 120)

PIUS XII (1939-1958)*The Church Will Fight Socialism to the End

“[The Church undertook] the protection of the individual and the family against a current threatening to bring about a total socialization which in the end would make the specter of the 'Leviathan' become a shocking reality. The Church will fight this battle to the end, for it is a question of supreme values: the dignity of man and the salvation of souls.”

[“Radio message to the Katholikentag of Vienna,” September 14, 1952 in Discorsi e Radiomessaggi, vol. XIV, p. 314]

The All-Powerful State Harms True Prosperity

"To consider the State as something ultimate to which everything else should be subordinated and directed, cannot fail to harm the true and lasting prosperity of nations."

[Encyclical Summi Pontificatus, October 20, 1939, n. 60]

JOHN XXIII (1958-1963)

“No Catholic could subscribe even to moderate socialism”

“Pope Pius XI further emphasized the fundamental opposition between Communism and Christianity, and made it clear that no Catholic could subscribe even to moderate Socialism. The reason is that Socialism is founded on a doctrine of human society which is bounded by time and takes no account of any objective other than that of material well-being. Since, therefore, it proposes a form of social organization which aims solely at production; it places too severe a restraint on human liberty, at the same time flouting the true notion of social authority.”

[Encyclical Mater et Magistra, May 15, 1961, n. 34]

PAUL VI (1963-1978)*Christians Tend to Idealize Socialism

“Too often Christians attracted by socialism tend to idealize it in terms which, apart from anything else, are very general: a will for justice, solidarity and equality. They refuse to recognize the limitations of the historical socialist movements, which remain conditioned by the ideologies from which they originated.”

[Apostolic Letter Octogesima Adveniens, May 14, 1971, n. 31]

JOHN PAUL II (1978-2005)*Socialism: Danger of a "simple and radical solution"

"It may seem surprising that 'socialism' appeared at the beginning of the Pope's critique of solutions to the 'question of the working class at a time when 'socialism' was not yet in the form of a strong and powerful State, with all the resources which that implies, as was later to happen. However, he correctly judged the danger posed to the masses by the attractive presentation of this simple and radical solution to the 'question of the working class.'"

[Encyclical Centesimus Annus - On the 100th anniversary of Pope Leo XIII's Rerum Novarum, May 1, 1991, n. 12]

BENEDICT XVI (2005-2013)*We do not Need a State which Controls Everything

"The State which would provide everything, absorbing everything into itself, would ultimately become a mere bureaucracy incapable of guaranteeing the very thing which the suffering person - every person - needs: namely, loving personal concern. We do not need a State which regulates and controls everything, but a State which, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity, generously acknowledges and supports initiatives arising from the different social forces and combines spontaneity with closeness to those in need. ... In the end, the claim that just social structures would make works of charity superfluous masks a materialist conception of man: the mistaken notion that man can live 'by bread alone' (Mt 4:4; cf. Dt 8:3) - a conviction that demeans man and ultimately disregards all that is specifically human."

[Encyclical Deus Caritas Est, December 25, 2005, n. 28]

11.21.4 LDS Doctrine on Socialism and Communism⁸⁴

We at SEDM are Christians and not Latter Day Saints. However, the Latter Day Saints (LDS) faith has lots of church doctrine proving that socialism and communism are religions that may be useful to our members. We include it here for reference for those of our readers who are LDS.

The content of this section was presented to senior members of the LDS church by a concerned reader. In attendance was also a tax professional in private practice. Their response:

1. They could not disprove any of these authorities.
2. They could provide no proof or legal evidence proving that any of these church and scriptural authorities had been rescinded or repealed or superceded.
3. They absolutely refused to speak about these issues and implement them in their own local church, even though they are still valid doctrine.
4. They terminated excommunication proceedings against the member originated because they accused the member of establishing their own church in competition with the LDS church. In fact, it was THEY who were establishing and protecting and perpetuating a religion in contradiction to the teachings of their own church.
5. They told the member who revealed these authorities that they were not allowed to speak publicly in front of the church on any of these subjects, as if to censor the member and prevent the congregagion from hearing about the misdeeds and violations of God's laws by the local pastors. HYPOCRITES!

⁸⁴ Written by Christopher Holloman Hansen, author of Testament of Sovereignty, Form #13.010; <http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm>.

The following are selected quotes concerning the doctrine of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints concerning socialism, communism, fascism, nazism, etc. are religions and that they are the counterfeit doctrine of Satan established for the purpose of conflicting with Christ's work.

We heard Brother Taylor's exposition of what is called Socialism this morning. What can they do? Live on each other and beg. It is a poor, unwise and very imbecile people who cannot take care of themselves.

President Brigham Young, Journal of Discourses, Vol. 14, p. 21

"One of the fundamental doctrines of revealed truth is that ... God endowed men with free agency (see Moses 7:32). The preservation of this free agency is more important than the preservation of life itself. ... Everything which militates against man's enjoyment of this endowment persuades not to believe in Christ, for he is the author of free agency.

"Now the world today is in the throes of a great social and political revolution. In almost every department of society laws and practices are being daily proposed and adopted which greatly alter the course of our lives. Indeed, some of them are literally shaking the foundations of our political and social institutions. If you would know truth from error in this bitterly contested arena, apply Mormon's test to these innovations [as recorded in Moro. 7:16-18]. Do they facilitate or restrict the exercise of man's divine endowment of free agency? Tested by this standard, most of them will fall quickly into their proper category as between good and evil."

[President Marion G. Romney, Council of the Twelve; (Speeches of the Year, Brigham Young University Press, 1957, pp. 10-11.)]

"Besides the preaching of the Gospel, we have another mission, namely, the perpetuation of the free agency of man and the maintenance of liberty, freedom, and the rights of man. ... We have a right to liberty—that was a right that God gave to all men; and if there has been oppression, fraud or tyranny in the earth, it has been the result of the wickedness and corruptions of men and has always been opposed to God and the principles of truth."

[President John Taylor (Journal of Discourses, 23:63.)]

"May we take a moment from some of the side issues and from some of the irrelevant celebration, and clear our thoughts and humble our hearts and get down on our knees and simply, fervently, thank God for freedom—and then get on our feet with a firm resolve to preserve it against all who secretly or openly would set it aside.

"Thank God for freedom—and for the Founding Fathers who reaffirmed to a new nation, an eternal, timeless truth: that the right of choice—that the free agency of man—is a God-given inalienable right, and is essential to the peace and growth and progress and salvation of the very soul.

"This truth has been challenged again and again, and will yet be challenged again and again. It was challenged in the heavens before time began, by the brilliant but rebellious Lucifer. There was war in heaven—for freedom. And anyone who seeks to enslave men in any sense, in mind, in spirit, in thought—anyone who seeks to enslave the minds, the hearts, the spirits of men is essentially in league with Satan himself—for “where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty”

[2 Cor. 3:17].

“Thank God for the Constitution of our country, which was brought into being by the ‘hands of wise men whom [the Lord God] raised up unto this very purpose’ [D&C 101:80]. Thank God for the promise that in this choice land, men ‘shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve’ God [Ether 2:12].

“Thank God for the right of choice, for the right to become whatever we can become in a free and provident land that, despite its imperfections, has proved to be more efficient for progress and human happiness than any society founded on the false philosophies that would seek to enslave the minds and souls of men.

“God grant that we may repent wherever we have departed from the principles of freedom—that we may preserve the right to fail and the incentive to succeed, and live, as did the Founding Fathers, knowing that there are no acceptable substitutes for freedom.”

[Elder Richard L. Evans, Quorum of the Twelve Apostles that he gave in conjunction with an Independence Day celebration. The title of Elder Evans’s brief address is “Thank God for Freedom.” (From the Crossroads, New York: Harper & Brothers, 1955, p. 45.)]

The plain and simple issue now facing us in America is freedom or slavery. . . .

Our real enemies are communism and its running mate, socialism. . . .

And never forget for one moment that communism and socialism are state slavery. World conquest has been, is now, and ever will be its ultimate goal. . . .

One thing seems sure, we will not get out of our present difficulties without trouble, serious trouble. Indeed, it may well be that our government and its free institutions will not be preserved except at the price of life and blood.

J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, in Deseret News, “Church Section,” 25 September 1949, pp. 2, 15.

*Responding to your letter of July 24, may I suggest that you acquire a copy of Brother Cleon Skousen’s book The Naked Capitalist which treats much this same field. Also the book The Great and Abominable Church of the Devil by Verlan Anderson. Both of these are available at the Deseret Book Company, I believe, and seem to substantiate in large measure what Gary Allen has said in None Dare Call it Conspiracy.*

Ezra Taft Benson, letter to Elder Bremer, 1 Aug. 1972

Of course, members of the dynastic banking families had been financing the Russian-oriented revolutionists for many years. Trotsky, in his biography, refers to some of these loans from British financiers going back as far as 1907. By 1917 the major subsidies for the revolution were being arranged by Sir George Buchanan and Lord Alfred Milner (of the Morgan-Rothschild-Rhodes confederacy). Milner, it will be recalled, was the founder of England's secret "Round Table" group which started the Royal Institute for International Affairs in England and the Council on Foreign Relations in the United States. One American source gave Trotsky, Lenin and the other Communist leaders around twenty million dollars for the final triumph of Bolshevism in Russia. This was Jacob Schiff of Kuhn, Loeb and Company.

W. Cleon Skousen, The Naked Capitalist (Salt Lake City, 1970), pp. 40–41

I have talked face-to-face with the godless Communist leaders. It may surprise you to learn that I was host to Mr. Khrushchev for a half day, when he visited the United States. Not that I'm proud of it – I opposed his coming then and I still feel it was a mistake to welcome this atheistic murderer as a state visitor. But according to President Eisenhower, Khrushchev had expressed a desire to learn something of American agriculture, and after seeing Russian agriculture I can understand why.

As we talked face-to-face, he indicated that my grandchildren would live under Communism. After assuring him that I expected to do all in my power to assure that his, and all other grandchildren, would live under freedom, he arrogantly declared, in substance:

You Americans are so gullible. No you won't accept Communism outright, but we'll keep feeding you small doses of socialism until you'll finally wake up and you find you already have Communism. We won't have to fight you. We'll so weaken your economy until you fall like over-ripe fruit into our hands.

And they are ahead of schedule in their devilish scheme.

For the entire speech go to: <http://www.latterdayconservative.com/ezra-taft-benson/our-immediate-responsibility/>

Former Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson at a BYU Devotional, October 25, 1966 entitled "Our Immediate Responsibility."

Our civilization and our people are seemingly afraid to be revolutionary. We are too 'broadminded' to challenge what we do not believe in. We are afraid of being thought intolerant, uncouth, ungentlemanly. We have become lukewarm in our beliefs. And for that we perhaps merit the bitter condemnation stated in Revelation 3:16: "So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth."

This is a sad commentary on a civilization which has given to mankind the greatest achievements and progress ever known. But it is an even sadder commentary on those of us who call ourselves Christians, who thus betray the ideals given to us by the Son of God himself.

Ezra Taft Benson, former Secretary of Agriculture under Eisenhower, October 1960

We are placed on this earth to work and the earth will give us a living. . . . It is our duty to strive to till the earth, subdue matter, conquer the glebe, take care of the flocks and the herds. It is the government's duty to see that you are protected in it, and no other man has the right to deprive you of any of your privileges. But it is not the government's duty to support you.

I shall raise my voice as long as God gives me sound or ability, against the communistic idea that the government will take care of us all, and that everything belongs to the government. . . .

It is wrong! No wonder in trying to perpetuate that idea, that men become anti-Christ, because those teachings strike directly at the doctrines of the Savior.

No government owes you a living. . . . You get it yourself by your own acts—never by trespassing upon the rights of your neighbor, never by cheating him. You put a blemish upon your character the moment you do.

David O. McKay, Church News, 14 Mar. 1953, pp. 4, 15.

I fear this, that under existing conditions we are gradually drifting toward a paternal government, a government which will so intrench itself that the people will become powerless to disrupt it, in which the lives and liberty of the people at large may be jeopardized. They are pouring millions of dollars in this time of need into sources for the benefit of the people and it is a great benefit and perhaps salvation, but it is going to result in this--I am going to make this statement--that if the present policy is continued it will not be long until the government will be in the banking business, it will be in the farming business, it will be in the cattle and sheep business, for many of these debts will never be paid. That will mean the appointment of innumerable agencies. The government now is overloaded with commissions and agencies, some of them administering the very laws that Congress itself has enacted. Someone else should be administering those laws. If you want to save yourselves from the bondage of debt and political influences which are not of your own choosing I ask you to think of what I have said.

President Anthony W. Ivins, General Conference, October 1932

In a despotism, an absolute monarchy, where the king rules, and the people only submit, great is the obligation of the king, but the individual citizen's obligation is correspondingly less. In our own government, where the people rule, each individual citizen is a ruler in the nation and great is his responsibility; great are the obligations that rest upon him by reason of that citizenship, for he himself is a ruler, a sovereign, and helps to form and fashion the government of which he is one of its rulers. If we have good government it is because the individual citizens are good. If we have a bad government it is because the individual citizens are bad. That applies not only to the nation at large, but to the state, to the county and to the city.

Elder Rulon S. Wells, General Conference, October 1921

Secularism also produced an artificial sense of security. A good example of this is what has happened to our Social Security system in America. Principles gave way to political promises, and the secular theology with its cast your care upon Social Security has now exposed its hollowness like the billboard outside Chicago ten years ago that read, Borrow enough from us to get completely out of debt. Sad as it is to say it, the hard choices ahead for the nation regarding our Social Security system could pit the young against the old and the middle class against the poor. The system is scarcely social in such a setting; likewise, the financial unsoundness of the system scarcely deserves the word Security. What we have is thus neither social nor security. Ahead of us are additional days of reckoning besides the one noted many times in the Bible.

Neal A. Maxwell, Ensign, October 1978; The Prohibitive Costs of a Value-free Society

"Teach them the beauty of freedoms - the marvelous freedoms established by the Bill of Rights, the first ten amendments to the Constitution of this nation.....In leadership, in standing for principle, there is loneliness. But men and women of integrity must live with their convictions. Unless they do so, they are miserable.....Never in the history of the world has there been a more profound need for leaders of principle to step forward. Never before, at least not in our generation, have the forces of evil been so blatant, so brazen, so aggressive as they are at the present time.....We are involved in an intense battle. It is a battle between right and wrong, between truth and error, between the design of the Almighty on the one hand and that of Lucifer on the other. For that reason we desperately need men and women who, in their individual spheres of influence, will stand for truth in a world of sophistry. I have lived long enough to know that many political campaigns, for example, are the same. I have heard again and again the sweet talk that leads to victory but never seems to be realized thereafter. We need moral men and women, people who stand on principle, to be involved in the political process. Otherwise, we abdicate power to those whose designs are almost entirely selfish.....We don't have the luxury of retreating to our private cloisters and pursuing only our special private interests. Strong voices are needed. The weight of our stance may be enough to tip the scales in the direction of truth and right."

President Gordon B. Hinckley from his book "Standing for Something" (In the year 2000 written and published and soared to the top of the charts and even made it to the New York Times Bestseller list, it was titled, Standing for Something; 10 Neglected Virtues That Will Heal our Hearts and Homes. Gordon B. Hinckley, president of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints)

One of the surest and most certain signs of the times is the near-omnipresence of false prophets. "There shall also arise . . . false prophets," saith the holy word. (JS-M 1:22.) It is now almost as though every fool or near-fool, and every person filled with self-conceit and a desire to be in the spotlight of adulation, fancies himself a prophet of religion or politics, or what have you. On every hand there are those who suppose they know how to save society, to save nations, to save souls. They preach all sorts of gospels—a social gospel; a racial gospel; a gospel of freedom or communism, of socialism or free enterprise, of military preparedness or reliance upon the wispy promises of foreign foes; a gospel of salvation by grace alone, or of this or that doctrine.

Apostle Bruce R. McConkie, A NEW WITNESS FOR THE ARTICLES OF FAITH, p. 626, 1985

However, above all else, strive to support good and conscientious candidates of either party who are aware of the great dangers inherent in communism and who are truly dedicated to the Constitution in the tradition of our founding fathers. They should also pledge their sincere fealty to our way of liberty--a liberty which aims at the preservation of both personal and property rights. Study the issues, analyze the candidates on these grounds, and then exercise your franchise as free men and women. Never be found guilty of exchanging your birthright for a mess of pottage!

President David O. McKay, General Conference, October 1962

The position of this Church on the subject of Communism has never changed. We consider it the greatest satanical threat to peace, prosperity, and the spread of God's work among men that exists on the face of the earth. . . .

The entire concept and philosophy of Communism is diametrically opposed to everything for which the Church stands—belief in Deity, belief in the dignity and eternal nature of man, and the application of the gospel to efforts for peace in the world. Communism is militantly atheistic and is committed to the destruction of faith wherever it may be found.

The Russian Commissar of Education wrote: "We must hate Christians and Christianity. Even the best of them must be considered our worst enemies. Christian love is an obstacle to the development of the revolution. Down with love for one's neighbor. What we want is hate. Only then shall we conquer the universe."

On the other hand, the gospel teaches the existence of God as our Eternal and Heavenly Father and declares: ". . . him only shalt thou serve." (Matt. 4:10.)

Communism debases the individual and makes him the enslaved tool of the state, to which he must look for sustenance and religion. Communism destroys man's God-given free agency...

David O. McKay, Conference Report, April 9, 1966, pp. 109-10. Highlighted section in original.

May I assure you that communism is not merely an economic program. It is a total philosophy of life, atheistic and utterly opposed to all we hold dear as a great Christian nation. While we might effectively bridle or destroy every so-called communist within our own borders, we shall not vanquish this political virus, and its common forerunner, state socialism, so long as people are determined to achieve security through state-imposed materialistic schemes rather than through righteous living and wholesome activity as free men.

Elder Ezra Taft Benson, So Shall Ye Reap. 361 pages of selected addresses from 1960 AD.

Sad as it may be, almost the entire history of mankind is an account of false worship, false gods, and all the ills that attend such a course. Communism is in reality a form of religion in which men deny the God of the Bible and worship the gods of compulsion and power and war. Philosophy in all its forms and varieties is a way of worship. It is an attempt by reason and without revelation to explain existence, ethical principles in general, and the whence, why, and whither of life.

Elder Bruce R. McConkie 1985, A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, p. 54

Atheism, like theism, is divided into many sects: communism, agnosticism, skepticism, humanism, pragmatism, and others.

The atheist proclaims his own dishonesty in accepting pay to teach psychology, sociology, history, or English, while he is indeed preaching his atheistic religious philosophy to his students.

Elder Boyd K. Packer, 1975, Teach Ye Diligently, p. 225

Communist leaders have steadily insisted that communism cannot live in just one country. Just as we fought to make 'the world safe for democracy, so they are fighting to make the world safe for communism. They are fighting this fight today. Every country must become communistic, according to their idea. So they have sent out missionaries...

Do not let advocates of communism mislead you in their attempt to denounce capitalism. Fundamental in the belief and promulgation of communism is the denial of the existence of God and the desire to substitute for the belief confidence in the state. The state is not an organization to suppress people. The state should have no power but that which the people give it; and when the state becomes a director, a controller of the individual, it becomes despotism; and human nature has fought that since man was created; and man will continue to fight that false ideal.

Individual freedom is innate in the human soul. God has given us our free agency, and next to life itself that is our greatest gift from heaven, and you red-blooded men and women know that is true because of your own love of liberty.

Apostle David O. McKay, Gospel Ideals, p. 304-305

There are some who may regard the acknowledgment of spiritual power as a stigma of weakness, that the humility which is essential to the acceptance of divine power is incompatible with strength of manhood and self-determination. That was in large measure the doctrine of Hitler and is today the philosophy of communism. I hope there are not many who adopt such a philosophy of life.

Now I know that there are many in Christian nations and many in prominent places who accede to this taboo on religion in the consideration of national and world affairs. They seem to think that they can fight aggressive, atheistic communism without uttering a word in defense and exposition of divinely-given concepts, and without even seeking divine aid in the preservation of divine principles for the race. I do not pretend to qualify or speak as an expert on international affairs, but I am sure that I voice the sentiment and feeling of millions of God-loving people over the world when I assert that the sooner the issues now confronting the nations are recognized as a moral conflict between right and wrong, between truth and error, between Christ and anti-Christ, the sooner will come the solution and peace. I know that this is and has always been the position of this Church. There are prophecies, ancient and modern, statements and declarations, and experience to support this position.

This message defines religion. It interprets all phases of a man's existence in terms of religion. There is no part of living not influenced by it. Our thoughts, our environment, our education, our companionships and associations, our health, our concepts of wealth, government, and society in the scope of this message are all religious considerations. Religion therefore becomes not a philosophy apart from life to be held up for scrutiny, criticism, and debate. Rather, it is an integrated way of life, a system and program of individual and community living under eternal law which man did not make and cannot change...

There are some who may regard the acknowledgment of spiritual power as a stigma of weakness, that the humility which is essential to the acceptance of divine power is incompatible with strength of manhood and self-determination. That was in large measure the doctrine of Hitler and is today the philosophy of Communism. I hope there are not many who adopt such a philosophy of life.

There are some who seem to feel that their liberties are circumscribed by the acceptance and acknowledgment of spiritual forces and that they are much freer and better off to make no profession of faith whatever. Considered in the light of a deterrent to wrongdoing, perhaps they are right, but such a concept is really an abandonment of the underlying principles of righteousness and good character.

Then there are those, constituting perhaps the largest portion of that group within the Church who seem ashamed of the gospel of Christ, who are just too weak to stand up under all circumstances and conditions for the right and the truth as they know it to be.

But as those affluent years slipped by, voices were heard in the land, singing the siren songs of socialism. And many Americans tapped their feet to the beat of the music. Politicians were already promising something for nothing, that elusive free lunch. Thus, gradually the people let the government infringe upon their precious freedoms, and the preliminary signs of decay began to appear in our young republic.

Ezra Taft Benson, This Nation Shall Endure, p. 93, published 1977 AD

As Americans, we have marched a long way down the soul-destroying road of socialism, atheism, and totalitarianism. It is the price we pay when we turn away from God and turn to government to do everything for us. It is the formula by which nations become enslaved by their own leaders.

As England's Lord Acton so succinctly put it, "Power tends to corrupt—and absolute power corrupts absolutely." (Essays on Freedom and Power, p. 364.)

Increasing numbers of Americans are subscribing to the myth that you can get something for nothing—as long as the government is footing the bill. In fact, they believe it is the duty of government to take care of them, from the womb to the tomb.

There is no such thing as a free lunch. Everything we get from the government, we pay for in debilitating taxes. Everything the government gives to the people, it must first take from the people. This is something few Americans appear to understand.

Ezra Taft Benson, This Nation Shall Endure, p. 94, published 1977 AD

Three of the major devices that have led men to reject the truth concerning God have been and still are

- (1) apostate Christianity,*
- (2) the theory of biological evolution, and*
- (3) communism.*

Marion G. Romney, 1977, Learning For The Eternities, p. 2.

But whenever the God of heaven reveals His gospel to mankind, Satan, the archenemy to Christ, introduces a counterfeit.

Communism introduced into the world a substitute for true religion. It is a counterfeit of the gospel plan. The false prophets of Communism predict a utopian society. This, they proclaim, will only be brought about as capitalism and free enterprise are overthrown, private property abolished, the family as a social unit eliminated, all classes abolished, all governments overthrown, and a communal ownership of property in a classless, stateless society established.

President Marion G. Romney, in the First Presidency Message in the September 1979 Ensign, wrote: "Communism is Satan's counterfeit for the gospel plan, and ... it is an avowed enemy of the God of the land. Communism is the greatest anti-Christ power in the world today and therefore the greatest menace not only to our peace but to our preservation as a free people. By the extent to which we tolerate it, accommodate ourselves to it, permit ourselves to be encircled by its tentacles and drawn to it, to that extent we forfeit the protection of the God of this land" (p. 5).

President Ezra Taft Benson Of the Council of the Twelve, A Witness and a Warning

In distinguishing communism from the United Order, President David O. McKay said that communism is Satan's counterfeit for the gospel plan, and that it is an avowed enemy of the God of the land. Communism is the greatest anti-Christ power in the world today and therefore the greatest menace not only to our peace but to our preservation as a free people. By the extent to which we tolerate it, accommodate ourselves to it, permit ourselves to be encircled by its tentacles and drawn to it, to that extent we forfeit the protection of the God of this land.

Relying on that part of the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States which reads, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," the United States Supreme Court has ruled against Bible reading and prayer in public schools. By so doing, said President David O. McKay, "the Supreme Court of the United States severs the connecting cord between the public schools of the United States and the source of divine intelligence, the Creator himself," who, of course, is the God of this land (Relief Society Magazine, Dec. 1962, p. 878).

Now, of course, we all believe and wholeheartedly support the separation of church and state; but we must not let this wresting of the First Amendment, nor communism, nor atheism, nor any other anti-Christ influence, weaken our conviction that Jesus Christ is the God of this land nor diminish our determination to obey his laws.

President Marion G. Romney Second Counselor in the First Presidency, The Message: America's Promise, New Era, Mar 1980, p.4.

"You were given a great message by Elder Marion G. Romney which was inspiring and profound. He compared socialism with the United Order. I encourage you to study carefully that message. He gave much of the basic theory, the principles, the similarities and the differences between these two basically conflicting systems. As I accept his premises, logic, and conclusions, with your permission, at this time, I would like to use his message as a springboard for my own. The basic principle in his message is the same principle in mine, as already discussed – the principle of the Law of the Harvest – As a Man Sows, So Shall He Reap.

"From my own experience in business and as a lawyer and church worker, and from my firsthand observations in this country and other countries of the world, there appears to me to be a trend to shift responsibility for life and its processes from the individual to the state. In this shift there is a basic violation of the law of the harvest, or the law of justice. The attitude of "something for nothing" is encouraged. The government is often looked to as the source of wealth. There is a feeling that the government should step in and take care of one's needs, one's emergencies, and one's future. Just as my friend actually became a slave to his own ignorance and bad habits by refusing to accept the responsibility for his own education and moral growth, so, also, can an entire people be imperceptibly transferred from individuals, families, and communities to the federal government...

Howard W. Hunter, Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, (Speeches of the Year 1965-1966, pp. 1-11, "The Law of the Harvest." Devotional Address, Brigham Young University, 8 March 1966.)

"Wo unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, and who will not labor with your own hands!"

Doctrine and Covenants 56:17.

False Political Isms

We again warn our people in America of the constantly increasing threat against our inspired Constitution and our free institutions set up under it. The same political tenets and philosophies that have brought war and terror in other parts of the world are at work amongst us in America. The proponents thereof are seeking to undermine our own form of government and to set up instead one of the forms of dictatorships now flourishing in other lands. These revolutionists are using a technique that is as old as the human race—a fervid but false solicitude for the unfortunate over whom they thus gain mastery and then enslave them.

They suit their approaches to the particular group they seek to deceive. Among the Latter-day Saints they speak of their philosophy and their plans under it as an ushering in of the United Order. Communism and all other similar isms bear no relationship whatever to the United Order. They are merely the clumsy counterfeits which Satan always devises of the gospel plan. Communism debases the individual and makes him the enslaved tool of the state to whom he must look for sustenance and religion; the United Order exalts the individual, leaves him his property, "according to his family, according to his circumstances and his wants and needs," (D&C 51:3) and provides a system by which he helps care for his less fortunate brethren; the United Order leaves every man free to choose his own religion as his conscience directs. Communism destroys man's God-given free agency; the United Order glorifies it. Latter-day Saints can not be true to their faith and lend aid, encouragement, or sympathy to any of these false philosophies. They will prove snares to their feet.

First Presidency Message, in Conference Report, Apr. 1942 as found on LDS.org in 2012 AD.

...Assume that you become the world leader of Socialism and in it have marked success, but through your devotion to it you fail to live the gospel. Where are you then? Is anything worthwhile which will estrange you from your friends, your Church membership, your family, your eternal promises, your faith? You might say that such estrangement is not necessarily a result of your political views, but truthfully hasn't your overpowering interest in your present views already started driving a wedge?

President Spencer W. Kimball, Teachings, pp. 408-409

No true Latter-day Saint and no true American can be a socialist or a communist or support programs leading in that direction.

President Ezra Taft Benson, Title of Liberty, p. 190

The gift of the Atonement of Jesus Christ provides us at all times and at all places with the blessings of repentance and forgiveness.

Satan tries to counterfeit the work of God, and by doing this he may deceive many. To make us lose hope, feel miserable like himself, and believe that we are beyond forgiveness, Satan might even misuse words from the scriptures that emphasize the justice of God, in order to imply that there is no mercy.

Apostle Dieter F. Uchtdorf, "Point of Safe Return," Ensign, May 2007, 99–101

Some of Satan's most appealing lines are "Everyone does it"; "If it doesn't hurt anybody else, it's all right"; "If you feel all right about it, it's OK"; or "It's the 'in' thing to do." These subtle entreaties make Satan the great imitator, the master deceiver, the arch counterfeiter, and the great forger.

Agency—Our Alternative: Our agency, given us through the plan of our Father, is the great alternative to Satan's plan of force. With this sublime gift, we can grow, improve, progress, and seek perfection. Without agency, none of us could grow and develop by learning from our mistakes and errors and those of others.

James E. Faust, Second Counselor in the First Presidency, "The Forces That Will Save Us," Liahona, Jan 2007, 2–7

There seems to be developing a new civil religion. The civil religion I refer to is a secular religion. It has no moral absolutes. It is nondenominational. It is nontheistic. It is politically focused. It is antagonistic to religion. It rejects the historic religious traditions of America. It feels strange. If this trend continues, nonbelief will be more honored than belief. While all beliefs must be protected, are atheism, agnosticism, cynicism, and moral relativism to be more safeguarded and valued than Christianity, Judaism, and the tenets of Islam, which hold that there is a Supreme Being and that mortals are accountable to him? If so, this would, in my opinion, place America in great moral jeopardy.

For those who believe in God, this new civil religion fosters some of the same concerns as the state religions that prompted our forefathers to escape to the New World. Nonbelief is becoming more sponsored in the body politic than belief.

Elder James E. Faust of the Quorum of the Twelve, “A New Civil Religion,” Ensign, Oct. 1992, 69A New Civil Religion. For the entire wonderful talk go to: <https://www.lds.org/ensign/1992/10/a-new-civil-religion>

Elder Marion G. Romney of the Quorum of the Twelve taught: “Latter-day Saints know that there is a God. With like certainty, they know that Satan lives, that he is a powerful personage of spirit, the archenemy of God, of man, and of righteousness” (Ensign, June 1971, page 35). President Joseph F. Smith described one of Satan’s methods: “Satan is a skillful imitator, and as genuine gospel truth is given the world in ever-increasing abundance, so he spreads the counterfeit coin of false doctrine” (ibid., page 36).

Apostle Dallin H. Oaks, “Our Strengths Can Become Our Downfall,” Liahona, May 1995, 10

“President Harold B. Lee said, ‘Today you are witnessing the fulfillment [of a prophecy concerning Satan’s dominion. Today is the day when the devil has power over his own dominion.; (Harold B. Lee, Decisions for Successful Living, Deseret Book Co., 1973, p. 221.) That is a prophetic statement from a prophet of God. He also said, “[Satan] is the master of deceit, adulteration and counterfeit.”

Elder Bernard P. Brockbank Assistant to the Council of the Twelve, “Hearken Unto the Voice of God,” Ensign, May 1974, 11

We know that there is available to each of us the gift of the Holy Ghost—the power of revelation which embraces the gift of discernment by which we may unerringly detect the devil and the counterfeits he is so successfully foisting upon this gullible generation. Our course is clear and certain. It is to strictly obey the commandments of the Lord, as they are recorded in the scriptures and as they are being given by the living prophets.

Elder Marion G. Romney, Of the Council of the Twelve, “Satan—The Great Deceiver,” Ensign, Jun 1971, 35

If we really did our homework and approached the Book of Mormon doctrinally, we could expose the errors and find the truths to combat many of the current false theories and philosophies of men, including socialism, humanism, organic evolution, and others.

President Ezra Taft Benson, President of the Council of the Twelve “Jesus Christ—Gifts and Expectations,” New Era, May 1975, 16

We have accepted a frightening degree of socialism in our country. The question is, how much? The amount of freedom depends upon the amount of federal control and spending. A good measurement is to determine the amount, or percentage, of income of the people that is taken over and spent by the state.

Ezra Taft Benson, This Nation Shall Endure

The "communist manifesto" drafted by Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, for the Communist League . . . in . . . 1848 is generally regarded as the starting point of modern socialism.

No, socialism is not the United Order. Distinguishing between these two systems need be no more difficult than solving the problem of the farmer who could not tell one of his horses from the other. They weighed the same, pulled the same load, ran at the same speed; from the looks of their teeth they were the same age. Finally, as a last resort, he measured them, and, sure enough, the white horse was six hands higher than the black one.

Now, not forgetting our duty to eschew socialism and support the just and holy principles of the Constitution, as directed by the Lord, I shall conclude these remarks with a few comments concerning what we should do about the United Order.

President Marion G. Romney, Socialism and the United Order Compared

Under Communism you lose your liberties immediately and perhaps your life. Under Socialism, you lose your liberties a little more slowly but just as surely.

Attributed to President David O. McKay... (Original source could not be found)

"I attended a second lecture on Socialism, by Mr. Finch; and after he got through, I made a few remarks... I said I did not believe the doctrine."

The Prophet Joseph Smith (History of the Church 6:33)

"We believe that our real threat comes from within and not from without, and it comes from that underlying spirit common to Nazism, Fascism, and Communism, namely, the spirit which would array class against class, which would set up a socialistic state of some sort, which would rob the people of the liberties which we possess under the Constitution..."

First Presidency 1941 (Heber J. Grant, J. Reuben Clark, Jr., David O. McKay in a Letter to the Treasury from the LDS First Presidency in 1941 AD)

Concerning the United States, the Lord revealed to his prophets that its greatest threat would be a vast, worldwide “secret combination” which would not only threaten the United States but also seek to “overthrow the freedom of all lands, nations, and countries.” (Ether 8:25.) . . .

In connection with attack on the United States, the Lord told the Prophet Joseph Smith there would be an attempt to overthrow the country by destroying the Constitution. Joseph Smith predicted that the time would come when the Constitution would hang, as it were, by a thread, and at that time “this people will step forth and save it from the threatened destruction.” . . .

One of the most urgent, heart-stirring appeals made by Moroni as he closed the Book of Mormon was addressed to the gentile nations of the last days. He foresaw the rise of a great world-wide secret combination among the gentiles which “. . . seeketh to overthrow the freedom of all lands, nations, and countries; . . .” (Ether 8:25. Italics added.) He warned each gentile nation of the last days to purge itself of this gigantic criminal conspiracy which would seek to rule the world.

The prophets, in our day, have continually warned us of these internal threats in our midst—that our greatest threat from socialistic-communism lies within our country. Brethren and sisters, we don’t need a prophet—we have one—we need a listening ear. And if we do not listen and heed, then, as the Doctrine and Covenants states, “. . . the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles, shall be cut off from among the people.” (D&C 1:14.)

The prophets have said that these threats are among us. The Prophet Moroni, viewing our day, said,

*“Wherefore the Lord commandeth you, when ye shall see these things come among you that ye shall awake to a sense of your awful situation.”
(Ether 8:24)*

Unfortunately our nation has not treated the socialistic-communist conspiracy as “treasonable to our free institutions,” as the First Presidency pointed out in a signed 1936 statement. If we continue to uphold communism by not making it treasonable, our land shall be destroyed, for the Lord has said that “. . . whatsoever nation shall uphold such secret combinations, to get power and gain, until they shall spread over the nation, behold they shall be destroyed; . . .” (D&C 8:22.)...

The world-wide secret conspiracy which has risen up in our day to fulfill these prophecies is easily identified. President McKay has left no room for doubt as to what attitude Latter-day Saints should take toward the modern “secret combinations” of conspiratorial communism. In a lengthy statement on communism, he said:

“. . . Latter-day Saints should have nothing to do with the secret combinations and groups antagonistic to the constitutional law of the land, which the Lord ‘suffered to be established, and which ‘should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh according to just and holy principles.’” (Gospel Ideals, by David O. McKay, p. 306. Italics added.) . . .

Ezra Taft Benson of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, in Conference Report, October 1961, p. 69–72

This feeling of communism and nihilism, aimed at the overthrow of rulers and men in position and authority, arises from a spirit of diabolism, which is contrary to every principle of the Gospel of the Son of God. But then do not the Scriptures say that these things shall occur? Yes. Do not the scriptures say that men shall grow worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived? Yes. Do not the scriptures tell us that thrones shall be cast down and empires destroyed and the rule and government of the earth be trodden under foot? Yes. But I cannot help but sympathize with those who suffer from their influences; while these afflictions are the result of wickedness and corruption, yet we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that those who engage in these pernicious practices are exceedingly low, brutal, wicked and degraded. I would say “my soul come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united.” . . .

I feel more profoundly moved that deeds of this description can occur in a free, liberal and enlightened government like this. We might expect such things in some of the European nations where the principles of nihilism exist to so great an extent, and where there seems a disposition to subvert all rule and government and place the people and nations in the hands of irresponsible mobs, and of low, brutal, murderous men, without any regard to the principles of law, order, justice, equity and righteousness. I could account for some of these things taking place there. It is really astonishing to see what efforts are being made to accomplish the overthrow of rule and government in Russia, Austria, Germany, Spain, England, Italy, France, Turkey, etc. These things are beginning to spread among and permeate the nations of the earth. Do we expect them? Yes. These secret combinations were spoken of by Joseph Smith, years and years ago. I have heard him time and time again tell about them, and he stated that when these things began to take place the liberties of this nation would begin to be bartered away. We see many signs of weakness which we lament, and we would to God that our rulers would be men of righteousness, and that those who aspire to position would be guided by honorable feelings—to maintain inviolate the Constitution and operate in the interest, happiness, well-being, and protection of the whole community. But we see signs of weakness and vacillation. We see a policy being introduced to listen to the clamor of mobs and of unprincipled men who know not of what they speak, nor whereof they affirm, and when men begin to tear away with impunity one plank after another from our Constitution, by and by we shall find that we are struggling with the wreck and ruin of the system which the forefathers of this nation sought to establish in the interests of humanity.

John Taylor, President of the Church, 3 July 1881, Journal of Discourses, vol. 22, pp. 142–144

And speaking of anti-Christ, if you want to get some idea of how we are flaunting the Constitution, see how the Constitution defines treason. Then observe what we are doing to build up the enemy, this totally anti-Christ conspiracy. If we continue on this tragic course of aid and trade to the enemy, the Lord has warned us of the consequences that will follow in chapter 8 of Ether in the Book of Mormon.

Apostle Ezra Taft Benson, President of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, “Jesus Christ—Gifts and Expectations,” New Era, vol. 5, no. 5, May 1975), p. 19

We condemn the outcome which wicked and designing men are now planning, namely: the worldwide establishment and perpetuation of some form of Communism on the one side, or of some form of Nazism or Fascism on the other. Each of these systems destroys liberty, wipes out free institutions, blots out free agency, stifles free press and free speech, crushes out freedom of religion and conscience. Free peoples cannot and do not survive under these systems. Free peoples the world over will view with horror the establishment of either Communism or Nazism as a worldwide system. Each system is fostered by those who deny the right and the ability of the common people to govern themselves. We proclaim that the common people have both this right and this ability.

First Presidency Statement, in Conference Report, October 1942, p. 15

Latter-day Saints should have nothing to do with secret combinations and groups antagonistic to the Constitutional law of the land, which the Lord "suffered to be established," and which "should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles..."

President David O. McKay, General Conference, October 1939

For you know when the Rothschilds and the great bankers among the Jewish nation shall return back to their own land to rebuild the city of Jerusalem, carrying their capital with them, it will almost ruin some of the nations, and the latter will go up against Jerusalem to take a spoil.

Apostle Orson Pratt, 10 March 1872, in Journal of Discourses, vol. 14, p. 353

I have been preaching against Communism for twenty years. I still warn you against it, and I tell you that we are drifting toward it more rapidly than some of us understand and I tell you that when Communism comes, the ownership of the things which are necessary to feed your families is going to be taken away from us. I tell you freedom of speech will go, freedom of the press will go, and freedom of religion will go.

I have warned you against propaganda and hate. We are in the midst of the greatest exhibition of propaganda that the world has ever seen, and all directed toward one end. Just do not believe all you read.

J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, in Conference Report, October 1941, p. 16

If we do not vigorously fight for our liberties, we shall go clear through to the end of the road and become another Russia, or worse.

J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, in Deseret News, "Church Section," 25 Sept. 1949, pp. 2, 15

Let us have no blind devotion to the communist-dominated United Nations.

Apostle Ezra Taft Benson, BYU Address, 10 Dec. 1963

Above all else, strive to support good and conscientious candidates of either party who are aware of the great dangers inherent in communism and who are truly dedicated to the Constitution in the tradition of our founding fathers. They should also pledge their sincere fealty to our way of liberty—a liberty which aims at the preservation of both personal and property rights. Study the issues, analyze the candidates on these grounds, and then exercise your franchise as free men and women. Never be found guilty of exchanging your birthright for a mess of pottage!

President David O. McKay, in Conference Report, October 1962, p. 8

[W]hen you see government invading any of these realms of freedom which we have under our Constitution, you will know that they are putting shackles on your liberty, and that tyranny is creeping upon you, no matter who curtails these liberties or who invades these realms, and no matter what the reason and excuse therefore may be.

J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, The Improvement Era, vol. 43, no. 7 (July 1940), p. 444

Which of the two main political parties in the United States is closest to the vision of the founders of the United States? Neither.

Truman G. Madsen, patriarch of the Provo Utah Sharon East Stake in The Presidents of the Church, p. 372

In the United States and in the old countries, they are divided into six or seven hundred different religious denominations, all disagreeing with each other; besides political and a thousand other kinds of divisions and differences, such as whiggery, democratism, socialism, which, in short, may all be summed up under the term, Devilism. This is not the policy of the Latter-day Saints.

Heber C. Kimball, First Counselor in the First Presidency, 13 Aug. 1853, in Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, p. 105

The paths we are following, if we move forward thereon, will inevitably lead us to socialism or communism, and these two are as like as two peas in a pod in their ultimate effect upon our liberties...

We may first observe that communism and socialism—which we shall hereafter group together and dub Statism—cannot live with Christianity nor with any religion that postulates a Creator such as the Declaration of Independence recognizes. The slaves of Statism must know no power, no authority, no source of blessing, no God, but the State. . .

This country faces ahead enough trouble to bring us to our knees in humble honest prayer to God for the help which He alone can give to save us. . . .

Do not think that all these usurpations, intimidations, and impositions are being done to us through inadvertency or mistake, the whole course is deliberately planned and carried out; its purpose is to destroy the Constitution and our Constitutional government; then to bring chaos out of which the new Statism, with its Slavery, is to arise, with a cruel, relentless, selfish, ambitious crew in the saddle, riding hard with whip and spur, a red-shrouded band of night riders for despotism. . . .

If we do not vigorously fight for our liberties, we shall go clear through to the end of the road and become another Russia, or worse. . . .

We have largely lost the conflict so far waged. But there is time to win the final victory, if we can sense our danger, and fight.

J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, in Deseret News, "Church Section," 25 September 1949, pp. 2, 15

"No true Latter-day Saint can be a Communist or a Socialist because Communist principles run counter to the revealed word of God and to the Constitution of this land which was established by men whom the God of Heaven raised up unto that very purpose [D&C 101:80]."

Elder Ezra Taft Benson, "A Four-Fold Hope", May 24, 1961

"President McKay has said a lot about our tragic trends towards socialism and communism and the responsibilities liberty-loving people have in defending and preserving our Constitution. (See Conference Report, Apr 1963, pp. 112-13.) Have we read these words from God's mouthpiece and pondered on them?"

Elder Ezra Taft Benson, "Be Not Deceived"

"Dr. V. Orval Watts, noted political economist, has described this socialist system which I fear-and I have but suggested a very few evidences. Here are his words: 'Socialism... is the theory and practice of coercive collectivism. It is the evil fruit of greed for other men's possessions and greed for control over other men's labor.'"

Elder Ezra Taft Benson December 10 1963. A Race Against Time.

"We have moved a long way – and are now moving further and more rapidly down the soul-destroying road of socialism. The evidence is clear – shockingly clear for all to see...

"Now we should all be opposed to Socialistic-Communism, for it is our mortal and spiritual enemy – the greatest evil in the world today. But the reason many liberals don't want the American people to form study groups to really understand and then fight Socialistic-Communism is that once the American people get the facts they will begin to realize that much of what these liberals advocate is actually helping the enemy.

"The liberals hope you'll believe them when they tell you how anti-Communist they are. But they become alarmed if you really inform yourself on the subject of Socialistic-Communism. For after you inform yourself you might begin to study the liberal voting record. And this study would show you how much the liberals are giving aid and comfort to the enemy and how much the liberals are actually leading America towards Socialism itself.

"For Communism is just another form of socialism, as is fascism. So now you can see the picture. These liberals want you to know how much they are doing for you – with your tax money of course. But they don't want you to realize that the path they are pursuing is socialistic, and that socialism is the same as communism in its ultimate effect on our liberties. When you point this out they want to shut you up – they accuse you of maligning them, of casting aspersions, of being political. No matter whether they label their bottle as liberalism, progressivism, or social reform – I know the contents of the bottle is poison to this Republic and I'm going to call it poison."

Elder Ezra Taft Benson. Stand Up For Freedom. Assembly Hall at Temple Square, Feb 11, 1966. Given to The Utah Forum for the American Idea

"What is the real cause of this trend toward the welfare state, toward more socialism? In the last analysis, in my judgment, it is personal unrighteousness. When people do not use their freedoms responsibly and righteously, they will gradually lose these freedoms..."

"If man will not recognize the inequalities around him and voluntarily, through the gospel plan, come to the aid of his brother, he will find that through "a democratic process" he will be forced to come to the aid of his brother. The government will take from the "haves" and give to the "have nots." Both have lost their freedom. Those who "have," lost their freedom to give voluntarily of their own free will and in the way they desire. Those who "have not," lost their freedom because they did not earn what they received. They got "something for nothing," and they will neither appreciate the gift nor the giver of the gift.

"Under this climate, people gradually become blind to what has happened and to the vital freedoms which they have lost."

Howard W. Hunter, Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, (Speeches of the Year 1965-1966, pp. 1-11, "The Law of the Harvest." Devotional Address, Brigham Young University, 8 March 1966.)

Latter-day Saints cannot be true to their faith and lend aid, encouragement, or sympathy to false ideologies such as socialism and communism. The official Church position on communism remains unchanged since it was first promulgated in 1936: "We call upon all Church members completely to eschew Communism. The safety of our divinely inspired Constitutional government and the welfare of our Church imperatively demand that Communism shall have no place in America."

Message from the First Presidency, Improvement Era, August 1936, p. 488.

THE NEW BARBARISM. During the first half of the twentieth century we have traveled far into the soul-destroying land of socialism and made strange alliances through which we have become involved in almost continuous hot and cold wars over the whole of the earth. In this retreat from freedom the voices of protesting citizens have been drowned by raucous shouts of intolerance and abuse from those who led the retreat and their millions of gullible youth, who are marching merrily to their doom, carrying banners on which are emblazoned such intriguing and misapplied labels as social justice, equality, reform, patriotism, social welfare.

President David O. McKay, Selections from the Discourses of David O. McKay (Gospel Ideals, p. 273)

In things that pertain to celestial glory there can be no forced operations. We must do according as the Spirit of the Lord operates upon our understandings and feelings. We cannot be crowded into matters, however great might be the blessing attending such procedure. We cannot be forced into living a celestial law; we must do this ourselves, of our own free will. And whatever we do in regard to the principle of the United Order, we must do it because we desire to do it ...The United Order is not French Communism.

President Lorenzo Snow, Journal of Discourses, Vol. 19, p. 346, 349-350

Consider the condition in the world, the number who are determined to take from the rich man not what belongs to themselves, but that which belongs to the others. God has permitted men to get wealth, and if they obtained it properly, it is theirs, and he will bless them in its use if they will use it properly ...

We must not fall into the bad habits of other people. We must not get into the frame of mind that we will take what the other man has. Refer back to the ten commandments, and you will find one short paragraph, "Thou shalt not covet." That is what is the matter with a good many people today.

They are coveting what somebody else has, when as a matter of fact, many of them have been cared for and provided with means to live by those very ones from whom they would take property.

President George Albert Smith, Prophets, Principles and National Survival, p. 343 [compiled by Jay Newquist], CR-10/49:171-2)

God gave this nation the Constitution. No nation in the world has a constitution that was given to it by our Heavenly Father except the United States of America. I wonder if we appreciate that. The Lord gave us a rule of life for this great nation, and as far as we have lived up to it and taken advantage of it, the nation has grown, and the people have been blessed. But there are many people who prefer, or at least they seem to prefer something else.

As one man said to me, "Why not try what Russia has tried and what Germany has tried?" And my answer to him was, "Why try something that has already failed? Why not hold on to what the Lord has given?"

President George Albert Smith, The Teachings of George Albert Smith, Bookcraft, Salt Lake City, [1996], p. 171

...the world have generally made great mistakes upon these points. They have started various projects to try to unite and cement the people together without God; but they could not do it. Fourierism (authors note: Francois Fourier was a French socialist and writer), Communism — another branch of the same thing and many other principles of the same kind have been introduced to try and cement the human family together. And then we have had peace societies, based upon the same principles; but all these things have failed, and they will fail, because, however philanthropic, humanitarian, benevolent, or cosmopolitan our ideas, it is impossible to produce a true and correct union without the Spirit of the living God,

John Taylor, Journal of Discourses, Vol. 18, p. 137

I was speaking, a while ago, about the people there being divided into three classes. One of them you may call infidel, under the head of socialism, fourierism, and several other isms. Communism is a specimen of the same thing, ...

President John Taylor, Journal of Discourses, Vol. 1, p. 23, August 22, 1852

We must keep the people informed that collectivism, another word for socialism, is a part of the communist strategy. Communism is essentially socialism.

President Ezra Taft Benson, This Nation Shall Endure, p. 90, Deseret Book Company

I am confident that it was out of what he saw, the bitter fruit of dictatorship that he developed his strong feelings, almost hatred for communism and socialism. That distaste grew through the years as he witnessed the heavy handed oppression and suffering of the peoples of eastern europe under what he repeatedly described as godless communism. These experiences further strengthened his love for the land of his birth...

Benson never got over his boyhood love for freedom. Rather, it grew within him. Nurtured by what he saw of oppression in other lands, and by what he observed first hand of a growing dominance of government in this land over the lives of the people.

President Gordon B. Hinckley, Talk given at the funeral of Ezra Taft Benson, June 4, 1994

At heart communism is atheistic, and fascism is equally antagonistic to freedom and to other Christian principles—even denying the divinity of Jesus Christ and the existence of God.

David O. McKay, General Conference, October 1951, pp. 10-11

A ruthless dialectical battle is being waged against the Christian way of life against political liberty, against individual freedom, and it is being waged in the name of Freedom. Black becomes White; Tyranny becomes Freedom; The Forced Labor Camp stands for Liberty; The Slave State is represented as Democracy. This is the deadly challenge of Communism. And in this challenge those who put their emphasis upon man as an economic being -- and there are plenty in every so-called free country in the world today who do just that -- those who explain man in terms of scientific and chemical facts and the accident of circumstance, those who treat human beings as so many 'bodies, those who deny man's spiritual and individual existence -- each of them aids and hastens the destruction of the political institutions on which our free society rests, and whether he knows it or not, supports the dialectics and the aims of International Communism.

President David O. McKay, General Conference 1962, The Deadly Challenge of Communism

The Church is prospering and growing. Yet in undiminished fury, and with an anxiety that his time is short—and it is—Satan, that great adversary to all men, is attempting to destroy all we hold dear. The greatest system of slavery ever devised by the forces of evil—communism—has been imposed on over one billion of the earth's inhabitants. We constantly hear or read of wars and rumors of wars. Atheism, agnosticism, immorality, and dishonesty are flaunted in our society.

President Ezra Taft Benson, President of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles "Prepare Yourself for the Great Day of the Lord," New Era, May 1982, 44

Religion and the free exercise thereof, the right to worship God according to one's own conscience—how precious and treasured a boon it is. How necessary that it be safeguarded. Established religion becomes the guardian of the conscience of the people, the teacher of moral values, the defender of belief in the Almighty, the bridge between God and man. No people will live for long in freedom without it. The history of communism, whose founding father declared religion to be the opiate of the people, speaks with harshness and suffering concerning this basic matter.

Congress shall not abridge "the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

The history of tyrants is a history of the muzzling of free expression and the denial of assembly. ("The Bill of Rights," Bonneville International Corporation "Gathering of Eagles," June 20, 1991.)

President Gordon B. Hinckley, Teachings of Gordon B. Hinckley, p. 232 – 233

The voices I hear are persuasive, seductive, fascinating, and confusing. Speaking across the earth, they are part of a mighty battle that is being waged for the minds of men. They are aimed at persuasion in political philosophy. There are voices of democracy competing with voices of communism, and each is winning converts according to the discernment and the judgment of listeners. The stakes are high, the weapons are sophisticated, the methods are clever.

President Gordon B. Hinckley, Teachings of Gordon B. Hinckley, p. 407

Modern communism, fascism, nazism, socialism, and other related systems, are all the same in essential theory. They oppose religion, except as they themselves claim to be revelations, and they reject Christian morality. They prohibit free speech and action; eliminate private ownership and initiative; hold without exception the state above the individual; regiment the people; allow the strong to dominate the weak; they take government out of the hands of the governed, and place it in the hands of a self-appointed, selfish, self-styled, super-group, and they culminate in dictatorships. The free agent has no place in their systems. Their claim that they believe in human equality, as shown by their tyrannical behavior, is false. Force and terrorism are their weapons. All that makes for human security and happiness is destroyed.

Elder John A. Widtsoe, Evidences And Reconciliations

*[A]s a nation we ignored the warning signals which preceded the great depression; we were also unready to face the onrushing realities of Fascism and Communism—whereas today many are blind to the dangers of self-oppression, the chains we put on ourselves, which is the real tyranny of our time.

Elder Neal A. Maxwell, 1972

We hear the voice of one false Christ, echoing from the camps of communism, expounding the devil-devised declaration that religion is the opiate of the people. We hear another such voice when races alien to Israel acclaim that the one God has no need for a Son to mediate between himself and fallen man.

Next Moroni turns the key so that all who have ears to hear can understand what the secret combination is and can identify those who build it up. "For it cometh to pass," he says, "that whoso buildeth it up seeketh to overthrow the freedom of all lands, nations, and countries." This is a worldwide conspiracy. It is now entrenched in many nations, and it seeks dominion over all nations. It is Godless, atheistic, and operates by compulsion. It is communism. "And it bringeth to pass the destruction of all people, for it is built up by the devil, who is the father of all lies; even that same liar who beguiled our first parents, yea, even that same liar who hath caused man to commit murder from the beginning; who hath hardened the hearts of men that they have murdered the prophets, and stoned them, and cast them out from the beginning.

Apostle Bruce R. McConkie, THE MILLENNIAL MESSIAH, 1982, 66

We must keep the people informed that collectivism, another word for socialism, is a part of the communist strategy. Communism is essentially socialism.

President Ezra Taft Benson, This Nation Shall Endure, p. 90, Deseret Book Company

Latter-day Saints should have nothing to do with secret combinations and groups antagonistic to the constitutional law of the land, which the Lord "suffered to be established," and which "should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh according to just and holy principles."

Fundamental in the belief and promulgation of communism is the denial of the existence of God and the desire to substitute for the belief confidence in the state. The state is not an organization to suppress people. The state should have no power but that which the people give it; and when the state becomes a director, a controller of the individual, it becomes despotism; and human nature has fought that since man was created; and man will continue to fight that false ideal.

Individual freedom is innate in the human soul. God has given us our free agency, and next to life itself that is our greatest gift from heaven, and you red-blooded men and women know that is true because of your own love of liberty.

David O. McKay, Selections from the Discourses of David O. McKay, 1952

On the one side the direction which is to make an end of all nations, is through communism; on the other side it is being reached through Fascism and Nazism. While these two forces are apparently arrayed against each other, nevertheless the goal to be reached by them eventually is the same.

Joseph Fielding Smith, 1936, The Progress of Man, p. 397

*Can communism, socialism, fascism, the so-called welfare state, or any other coercive system provide these priceless blessings which flow to us as a part of our American way of life? The common denominator of all these systems is the curtailment of individual liberty.

Ezra Taft Benson, 1960, So Shall Ye Reap

11.21.4.1 Quotes on Social Security

We have accepted a frightening degree of socialism in our country. The question is, how much? The amount of freedom depends upon the amount of federal control and spending. A good measurement is to determine the amount, or percentage, of income of the people that is taken over and spent by the state. In Russia, the individual works almost wholly for the state, leaving little for his own welfare. Scandinavia takes about 65 to 70 percent of the income of the people, England some 60 percent. The United States is now approximately 44 percent.

The chief weapon used by the federal government to achieve this equality is through so-called transfer payments. This is a term that simply means that the federal government collects from one income group and transfers payments to another by the tax system. These payments are made in the form of Social Security benefits, housing subsidies, Medicaid, food stamps, to name a few.

Today, total cost of such programs exceeds $150 billion dollars. That represents about 42 percent of the total of all government federal spending, or about one dollar out of every seven dollars of personal income. (See U.S. News and World Report, August 4, 1975, pp. 32-33.)

Our present Social Security program has been going in the hole at the rate of $12 billion a year. Recognizing that the present program will be insolvent by 1985, President Carter has now recommended that Social Security be funded out of the general tax funds. Charges were made in the last election campaign that the Social Security program was going bankrupt. These charges were denied. Now the truth is out. The President's recommendation must be regarded as an admission of the failure of the present system and as a calculated policy to take this country into full-scale socialism.

Our major danger is that we are currently—and have been for forty years—transferring responsibility from the individual, local, and state governments to the federal government.

President Ezra Taft Benson, This Nation Shall Endure, Deseret Book Company, 1977.

“We have on, at the present time, a great political campaign (1936), and I want to say to the Saints that I hope they will not allow their political affiliations, their regard for political affairs, to cause feelings of ill-will towards one another. I have had some of the most insulting letters that ever came to me, condemning me for not being in favor of the Townsend Plan (Social Security), and that I must be ignorant of the plan. I am not ignorant of the plan. I have not read every word of it, but I have asked one of my secretaries to read every word of the plan and to give me the important points, and to my mind it is in direct opposition to everything I have quoted from Brigham Young and from the revelations of the Lord. The idea of allowing every man and woman who has reached the age of sixty years and wishes to retire from working to get two hundred dollars a month from the government! There is nothing truer than Brigham Young's statement, that we should give nothing to people, unless they are not able to work, without requiring them to do something for it.

President Heber J. Grant, General Conference October, 1936: 13.

To protect this base we must protect the soul of America -- we must return to a love and respect for the basic spiritual concepts upon which this nation has been established. We must study the Constitution and the writings of the founding fathers.

Yes, we must protect the Lord's base of operations by moving away from unsound economic policies which encourage creeping socialism and its companion, insidious, atheistic communism. If we are to protect this important base we must as a nation live within our means, balance our budgets, and pay our debts. We must establish sound monetary policies and take needed steps to compete in world markets.

Ezra Taft Benson, CR, April 1962, p.105-106

11.21.4.2 Quotes on Secular Religion

Satan's attacks on the family: The ultimate purpose of the adversary, who has "great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time," (1) is to disrupt, disturb, and destroy the home and the family. Like a ship without a rudder, without a compass, we drift from the family values which have anchored us in the past. Now we are caught in a current so strong that unless we correct our course, civilization as we know it will surely be wrecked to pieces. Moral values are being neglected and prayer expelled from public schools on the pretext that moral teaching belongs to religion. At the same time, atheism, the secular religion, is admitted to class, and our youngsters are proselyted to a conduct without morality.

Elder Boyd K. Packer, Official Report of the 164th Annual General Conference April, 1994.

Thus, as we have seen, civil control of religion is Lucifer's way of enforcing an enduring state of apostasy and of darkness upon all who are subject to such control. Thus also, as long as government controls our way of worship, Lucifer is in control, and we have no hope except to await the day when the chains will be broken and the bondage will cease.

10. Atheism, a Fatal Belief—"During the Reign of Terror, the French were declared by the National Assembly to be a nation of atheists; but a brief experience convinced them that a nation of atheists could not long exist. Robespierre then 'proclaimed in the convention, that belief in the existence of God was necessary to those principles of virtue and morality upon which the republic was founded; and on the 7th of May [1794], the national representatives, who had so lately prostrated themselves before the Goddess of Reason, voted by acclamation that the French people acknowledged the existence of the Supreme Being, and the immortality of the soul." Students' France, 27, 6.

Bruce R McConkie, A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, Deseret Book Company 1985.

The Religion of Atheism

Some years ago in the United States a plaintiff prospered in her grievance concerning the saying of prayers in public schools. The practice was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. That decision was partial to one ideology, for the effect, regardless of the intent, was to offer great encouragement to those who would erase from our society every trace of reference to the Almighty.

There is a crying need for the identification of atheism for what it is, and that is, a religion albeit a negative one. Atheism is a religious expression; it is one extreme end of religious philosophy.

*One group of so-called believers in God teach in substance that He is man-made. That is, they admit, with tongues in cheeks, that there is a God. But, in the same breath, they explain that God is always a product of the human mind. Early peoples, they say, worshipped tribal Gods, of stock and stone. As the people developed, their conceptions changed, until, in time, God became a Being of spirit. This simply means that God is made by man, and in the image of man; instead of man being made in the image of God. Such colossal self-sufficiency is of the impudent order of King Canute defying the tides of the ocean. The notion of a man-made God is a variation of atheism.

Elder Boyd K Packer, TEACH YE DILIGENTLY, 1975.

A Government Designed For All Mankind

The coming of Columbus to this continent was not a thing of chance. It had been foreseen and foretold by the prophets of God. The coming of the Pilgrim fathers to New England, of the Dutch to New York, and the cavaliers of the Old World to Virginia, was not a thing of chance, it was just the chosen combination of men and women who were calculated to make up the composite government which was established at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. They were prayerful people, they were people who had faith in God, they prayed to him and their prayers were answered; and, as stated in the scripture which the President has read, it was under the Lord's inspiration that these men were moved upon to give us this government under which we have so rapidly and wonderfully developed. It was not to be a government of Englishmen, nor of Dutchmen, nor of royalty represented in the cavaliers, nor of French people who were in Louisiana, and to the north of us, in Canada, but a government designed for the benefit of all mankind, a government which was to make all people equal under the law.

President Anthony W. Ivins, General Conference, October 1927.

Priesthood of this Church the responsibility

We should at all times be willing to sustain the great Bill of Rights in our own country, to sustain and uphold the laws here. I firmly believe that Brigham Young was a prophet of Almighty God. I think that he spoke under the inspiration of the Lord's Spirit. I want to read to you an excerpt from one of his sermons, wherein he laid upon the shoulders of the Priesthood of this Church some very definite responsibilities relative to the fundamental law of our country. He said:

I expect to see the day when the Elders of Israel will protect and sustain civil and religious liberty, and every constitutional right bequeathed to us by our fathers.

He said these rights would go out in connection with the Gospel for the salvation of all nations, and added:

"I shall see this whether I live or whether I die. I do not lift up my voice against the great and glorious government guaranteed to every citizen by our Constitution, but against those administrators who trample the Constitution and just laws under their feet."

We see from this prophecy, uttered by a prophet of God that there will yet devolve upon the Priesthood of this Church the responsibility of protecting the rights and the Constitution of our great country.

Elder Joseph L. Wirthlin , General Conference, October 1938.

Warning Against False Impressions

War has now broken out. Most of the sanctities that were used by the one side or the other to hallow the World War are again coming forth to hallow this one. Many were false then; they are false now. We should not be disturbed, misled, or blinded by any of them. Look at each of them squarely; most of them will wilt under your gaze. There are always deceit, lying, subterfuge, treachery, and savagery, in war, on both sides. There was in the World War. It is not always the other power that commits atrocities.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr, General Conference, October 1939.

Compelling Concepts

Among these elemental concepts is the love of freedom; it is found in man not only, but even in the brutes. Man and beast rebel against slavery. They yield to it only under compelling force.

Another elemental eternal concept is belief in God, which may ripen into a knowledge of God. Normal man ultimately demands this belief to make mortality tolerable.

Modern communism as explained by communists who are in places where they speak their real minds, deny God, declare that other men are beasts that must be tamed and worked as beasts. This is an enemy that threatens us within and without. This is not a Godless world.

But men cannot be led indefinitely, nor driven by a savage despotism, down this road to an intellectual and moral abyss. They may follow along for a generation or two. But they will one day rebel against the rule of liquidation. No group can permanently maintain itself by murder, as history proves from the days of the hideous proscription lists of Sulla till now.

Fear and ruthless cruelty can rule for a time, but the spirit of liberty ultimately breaks forth and sweeps away everything that lies in its path.

So it will be with communism, which now on a world scale may well be only doing the work of the Paris mobs in the French Revolution, for there are fields of human endeavor where the power of birth and station still afflict man's growth and development.

President J. Reuben Clark Jr., Stand Fast by Our Constitution.

May I add again an admonition: Live within your means. Get out of debt. Keep out of debt. Lay by for a rainy day which has always come and will come again. Practice and increase your habits of thrift, industry, economy, frugality. Remember that the parable of the ten virgins, the five that were wise and the five that were foolish, can be just as applicable to matters of the temporal world as those of the spiritual.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.

God Have Mercy On Us

What strength, what value will there be in any law, even in that law which protects us in our property rights, if we degenerate to such a degree that the law breaker has to be arrested by a man who is equally guilty of breaking the law; that when he who is guilty is brought before the bar, that bar which is supposed to be a bar of justice, he has as his prosecutor a district, a city or a county attorney who is himself as guilty as the one he is to prosecute? What an unfortunate condition will prevail if we reach such a situation that the individuals who constitute the jury are as guilty of law breaking as is the man whose guilt they are expected to discover. And then finally, if in addition to all of this, the judge or the justice who occupies the exalted place upon the bench does not himself have respect enough for the law to live in accordance with its provisions, God have mercy on us, for when this condition prevails government of the people, referred to by Abraham Lincoln, will surely be perishing from the earth.

Elder Richard R. Lyman, General Conference, October 1932.

Man: His Origin and Destiny

Parents are commanded by revelation to teach their children these principles of the gospel... Then they go to school and find these glorious principles ridiculed and denied by the doctrines of men founded on foolish theories which deny that man is the offspring of God... These theories so dominate the secular education of our youth. They are constantly published in our newspapers, in magazines and other periodicals, and those who believe in God and his divine revelations frequently sit supinely by without raising a voice of protest. Under these conditions, is it any wonder the student is confused? He does not know whether to believe what his parents and the Church have taught him, or to believe what the teacher says and is written in the textbook. Naturally, students have confidence in their teachers and as confidence increases, there comes a lack of confidence in the doctrines of the Church and the parental instruction.

President Joseph Fielding Smith, Man: His Origin and Destiny, pp. 2-3.

Fundamentals Of Constitution God-given

One of the most important things that we can do for the Church is to stand behind the Constitution of the United States. That does not mean, and no reasoning person would suppose that it meant, that that Constitution may not from time to time be changed as the needs of the people would seem to require. But it does mean that that Constitution should be changed only under the urge of great necessity, and then only in accordance with its great underlying concepts. It does mean that the great fundamental elements of the Constitution are God-given, for he said so. It does mean to me as an individual that the Constitution of the United States and my adherence to it and support of it is a part of my religion.

I have about the Constitution that same sort of conviction that I have about the other doctrines that we are taught, for I believe its precepts are among the doctrines of the Church, and I believe that the Lord will change and modify from time to time those details of its provisions which are ancillary to its great principles; he will cause us--those who live under it--to modify it in accordance with our needs; but the fundamental principles of it we may not sacrifice.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr, General Conference, April 1935.

[We] shall see in our time a maximum if indirect effort made to establish irreligion as the state religion. It is actually a new form of paganism.... Brothers and sisters, irreligion as the state religion would be the worst of all combinations. Its orthodoxy would be insistent and its inquisitors inevitable. Its paid ministry would be numerous beyond belief. Its Caesars would be insufferably condescending. ... Your discipleship may see the time come when religious convictions are heavily discounted. M.J. Sobran also observed, "A religious conviction is now a second-class conviction, expected to step deferentially to the back of the secular bus, and not to get uppity about it." This new irreligious imperialism seeks to disallow certain of people's opinions simply because those opinions grow out of religious convictions.

11.22 Social Security ...⁸⁵

"Make it your ambition to lead a quiet life, to mind your own business and to work with your hands, just as we told you, so that your daily life may win the respect of outsiders and so that you will not be dependent on anybody."
[1 Thess. 4:9-12, Bible, NIV]

"There remain for consideration the contentions that the state act is invalid because its enactment was coerced by the adoption of the Social Security Act, and that it involves an unconstitutional surrender of state power. Even though it be assumed that the exercise of a sovereign power by a state, in other respects valid, may be rendered invalid because of the coercive effect of a federal statute enacted in the exercise of a power granted to the national government, such coercion is lacking here. [301 U.S. 495, 526] It is unnecessary to repeat now those considerations which have led to our decision in the Chas. C. Steward Machine Co. Case, that the Social Security Act has no such coercive effect. As the Social Security Act is not coercive in its operation, the Unemployment Compensation Act cannot be set aside as an unconstitutional product of coercion. The United States and the State of Alabama are not alien governments. They coexist within the same territory. Unemployment within it is their common concern. Together the two statutes now before us embody a cooperative legislative effort by state and national governments for carrying out a public purpose common to both, which neither could fully achieve without the cooperation of the other. The Constitution does not prohibit such cooperation."

"When you pay social security taxes, you are in no way making provision for your own retirement. You are paying the pensions of those who are already retired. "The right to be let alone is indeed the beginning of all freedom."

[Justice William O. Douglas]

"As every man goes through life, he fills in a number of forms for the record, each containing a number of questions. There are thus hundreds of little threads radiating from every man, millions of threads in all, and if these threads were to suddenly become visible, the whole sky would look like a spider's web. They are not visible, they are not material, but every man is constantly aware of their existence."

"We can't be so fixated on our desire to preserve the rights of ordinary Americans ...".

[William Jefferson Clinton, March 11, 1993 in USA Today]

"When we got organized as a country ... we wrote a fairly radical Constitution with a radical Bill of Rights, giving a radical amount of individual freedom to Americans ... A lot of people say there's too much personal freedom. When personal freedom's being abused, you have to move to limit it."

[William Jefferson Clinton, March 22, 1994 on MTV (Music Television)]

"The makers of our Constitution undertook to secure conditions favorable to the pursuit of happiness. They recognized the significance of man's spiritual nature, of his feelings and of his intellect. They knew that only a part of the pain, pleasure and satisfactions of life are to be found in material things. They sought to protect Americans in their beliefs, their thoughts, their emotions and their sensations. They conferred, as against the Government, the right to be let alone - the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized men."

11.24 The New World Order Conspiracy: The Council On Foreign Relations, Secret Societies and Emerging World Government...

"To achieve world government, it is necessary to remove from the minds of men, their individualism, loyalty to family traditions, national patriotism and religious dogmas."

[Brock Chisholm, former Director of the U.N. World Health Organization]

"The world is governed by very different personages from what is imagined by those who are not behind the scenes."

[Benjamin Disraeli, first Prime Minister of England, in a novel he published in 1844 called Coningsby, the New Generation]

"It is our true policy to steer clear of entangling alliances with any portion of the foreign world. The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible."

[George Washington]

"... Within the next hundred years ... nationhood as we know it will be obsolete; all states will recognize a single, global authority. A phrase briefly fashionable in the mid-20th century -- 'citizen of the world' -- will have assumed real meaning by the end of the 21st."

[Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott in the July 20, 1992 issue of TIME magazine]

"The CFR [Council On Foreign Relations, New York City] is the American Branch of a society which originated in England and believes national directives should be obliterated and one-world rule established. I know of the operations of this network because I have studied it for twenty years, and was permitted in the early 1960's to examine its papers and secret records ... I believe its role in history is significant enough to be known."

"We shall have world government whether or not we like it. The only question is whether World government will be achieved by conquest or consent."

"Even the most Bush-happy, flag suckling jack-arse knows deep-down inside that something is wrong. America is over and everyone knows it. The New World Order has a dying empire odor and changing the channel ain't going to make this go away."

[Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., in Foreign Affairs (July/August 1995)]

"Today, America would be outraged if U.N. troops entered Los Angeles to restore order [referring to the 1991 LA Riot]. Tomorrow they will be grateful! This is especially true if they were told that there were an outside threat from beyond [i.e., an "extraterrestrial" invasion], whether real or promulgated [emphasis mine], that threatened our very existence. It is then that all peoples of the world will plead to deliver them from this evil. The one thing every man fears is the unknown. When presented with this scenario, individual rights will be willingly relinquished for the guarantee of their well-being granted to them by the World Government."

[Dr. Henry Kissinger, Bilderberger Conference, Evians, France, 1991]

"The drive of the Rockefellers and their allies is to create a one-world government combining supercapitalism and Communism under the same tent, all under their control.... Do I mean conspiracy? Yes I do. I am convinced there is such a [Congressman Larry P. McDonald, 1976, killed in the Korean Airlines 747 that was shot down by the Soviets]

"The idea was that those who direct the overall conspiracy could use the differences in those two so-called ideologies [marxism/fascism/socialism v. democracy/capitalism] to enable them [the Illuminati] to divide larger and larger portions of the human race into opposing camps so that they could be armed and then brainwashed into fighting and destroying each other."

[Myron Fagan]

"No one will enter the New World Order unless he or she will make a pledge to worship Lucifer. No one will enter the New Age unless he will take a Luciferian Initiation."

[David Spangler, Director of Planetary Initiative, United Nations]

"The world can therefore seize the opportunity [Persian Gulf crisis] to fulfill the long-held promise of a New World Order where diverse nations are drawn together in common cause to achieve the universal aspirations of mankind."

[President George Herbert Walker Bush]

"In the next century, nations as we know it will be obsolete; all states will recognize a single, global authority. National sovereignty wasn't such a great idea after all."

[Strobe Talbot, President Clinton's Deputy Secretary of State, as quoted in Time, July 20th, 1992]

[The United Nations not only failed to give] "even a remote hope for lasting peace, it adds to the dangers of wars which now surround us. The disintegrating forces in the United Nations are the Communist Nations in its membership."

[Former President Herbert Hoover as quoted in the Houston Press on August 10, 1962]

"Since I entered politics, I have chiefly had men's views confided to me privately. Some of the biggest men in the United States, in the Field of commerce and manufacture, are afraid of something. "... our system of credit is concentrated ... in the hands of a few men ... they know that there is a power somewhere so organized, so subtle, so watchful, so interlocked, so complete, so pervasive, that they better not speak above their breath when they speak in condemnation of it. We have come to be ... completely controlled ... by ... small groups of dominant men."

[President Woodrow Wilson, The New Freedom (1913)]

"Every child in American who enters school with an allegiance toward our elected officials, toward our founding fathers, toward our institutions, toward the preservation of this form of government ... all of this proves the children are sick, because the truly well individual is one who has rejected all of those things and is what I would call the true international child of the future."

[Chester M. Pierce, Harvard University psychiatrist, at a 1973 International Education Seminar, as quoted in "Educating For The New World Order" by B.K. Eakman]

"The individual is handicapped by coming face to face with a conspiracy so monstrous he cannot believe it exists."

[J. Edgar Hoover, former head of the FBI]

"From the days of Spartacus, Wieskhopf, Karl Marx, Trotsky, Rosa Luxemburg, and Emma Goldman, this world conspiracy has been steadily growing. This conspiracy played a definite recognizable role in the tragedy of the French revolution. It has been the mainspring of every subversive movement during the 19th century. And now at last this band of extraordinary personalities from the underworld of the great cities of Europe and America have gripped the Russian people by the hair of their head and have become the undisputed masters of that enormous empire."

[Winston Churchill, stated to the London Press, in 1922]

"We are at present working discreetly with all our might to wrest this mysterious force called sovereignty out of the clutches of the local nation states of the world."

[Professor Arnold Toynbee, in a June 1931 speech before the Institute for the Study of International Affairs in Copenhagen]

"The government of the Western nations, whether monarchical or republican, had passed into the invisible hands of a plutocracy, international in power and grasp. It was, I venture to suggest, this semioccult power which....pushed the mass of the American people into the cauldron of World War I."

"Fifty men have run America, and that's a high figure."

[Joseph Kennedy, father of JFK, in the July 26th, 1936 issue of The New York Times]

"Today the path of total dictatorship in the United States can be laid by strictly legal means, unseen and unheard by the Congress, the President, or the people. Outwardly we have a Constitutional government. We have operating within our government and political system, another body representing another form of government - a bureaucratic elite."

[Senator William Jenner, 1954]

"The case for government by elites is irrefutable"

[Senator William Fulbright, Former chairman of the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, stated at a 1963 symposium entitled: The Elite and the Electorate - Is Government by the People Possible?]

"The Trilateral Commission is intended to be the vehicle for multinational consolidation of the commercial and banking interests by seizing control of the political government of the United States. The Trilateral Commission represents a skillful, coordinated effort to seize control and consolidate the four centers of power political, monetary, intellectual and ecclesiastical. What the Trilateral Commission intends is to create a worldwide economic power superior to the political governments of the nation states involved. As managers and creators of the system ,they will rule the future."

[U.S. Senator Barry Goldwater in his 1964 book: With No Apologies]

"The powers of financial capitalism had another far reaching aim, nothing less than to create a world system of financial control in private hands able to dominate the political system of each country and the economy of the world as a whole. This system was to be controlled in a feudalist fashion by the central banks of the world acting in concert, by secret agreements, arrived at in frequent private meetings and conferences. The apex of the system was the Bank for International Settlements in Basle, Switzerland, a private bank owned and controlled by the worlds' central banks which were themselves private corporations. The growth of financial capitalism made possible a centralization of world economic control and use of this power for the direct benefit of financiers and the indirect injury of all other economic groups."

[Tragedy and Hope: A History of The World in Our Time (Macmillan Company, 1966,) Professor Carroll Quigley of Georgetown University, highly esteemed by his former student, William Jefferson Blythe Clinton]

"The Council on Foreign Relations is "the establishment." Not only does it have influence and power in key decision-making positions at the highest levels of government to apply pressure from above, but it also announces and uses individuals and groups to bring pressure from below, to justify the high level decisions for converting the U.S. from a sovereign Constitutional Republic into a servile member state of a one-world dictatorship."

[Former Congressman John Rarick 1971]

"The directors of the CFR (Council on Foreign Relations) make up a sort of Presidium for that part of the Establishment that guides our destiny as a nation."

[The Christian Science Monitor, September 1, 1961]

"The New World Order will have to be built from the bottom up rather than from the top down...but in the end run around national sovereignty, eroding it piece by piece will accomplish much more than the old fashioned frontal assault."

[CFR member Richard Gardner, writing in the April 1974 issue of the CFR's journal, Foreign Affairs]

"The planning of UN can be traced to the 'secret steering committee' established by Secretary [of State Cordell] Hull in January 1943. All of the members of this secret committee, with the exception of Hull, a Tennessee politician, were members of the Council on Foreign Relations. They saw Hull regularly to plan, select, and guide the labors of the [State] Department's Advisory Committee. It was, in effect, the coordinating agency for all the State Department's postwar planning."

[Professors Laurence H. Shoup and William Minter, writing in their study of the C.F.R., "Imperial Brain Trust: The CFR and United States Foreign Policy." (Monthly Review Press, 1977).]

"The most powerful clique in these (CFR) groups have one objective in common: they want to bring about the surrender of the sovereignty and the national independence of the U.S. They want to end national boundaries and racial and ethnic loyalties supposedly to increase business and ensure world peace. What they strive for would inevitably lead to dictatorship and loss of freedoms by the people. The CFR was founded for "the purpose of promoting disarmament and submergence of U.S. sovereignty and national independence into an all-powerful one-world government."

"The old world order changed when this war-storm broke. The old international order passed away as suddenly, as unexpectedly, and as completely as if it had been wiped out by a gigantic flood, by a great tempest, or by a volcanic eruption. The old world order died with the setting of that day's sun and a new world order is being born while I speak, with birth-pangs so terrible that it seems almost incredible that life could come out of such fearful suffering and such overwhelming sorrow."

[Nicholas Murray Butler, in an address delivered before the Union League of Philadelphia, Nov. 27, 1915]

"The peace conference has assembled. It will make the most momentous decisions in history, and upon these decisions will rest the stability of the new world order and the future peace of the world."

[M. C. Alexander, Executive Secretary of the American Association for International Conciliation, in a subscription letter for the periodical International Conciliation (1919)]

"If there are those who think we are to jump immediately into a new world order, actuated by complete understanding and brotherly love, they are doomed to disappointment. If we are ever to approach that time, it will be after patient and persistent effort of long duration. The present international situation of mistrust and fear can only be corrected by a formula of equal status, continuously applied, to every phase of international contacts, until the cobwebs of the old order are brushed out of the minds of the people of all lands."

[Dr. Augustus O. Thomas, president of the World Federation of Education Associations (August 1927), quoted in the book International Understanding: Agencies Educating for a New World (1931)]

"... when the struggle seems to be drifting definitely towards a world social democracy, there may still be very great delays and disappointments before it becomes an efficient and beneficent world system. Countless people ... will hate the new world order ... and will die protesting against it. When we attempt to evaluate its promise, we have to bear in mind the distress of a generation or so of malcontents, many of them quite gallant and graceful-looking people."

[H. G. Wells, in his book entitled The New World Order (1939)]

"The term Internationalism has been popularized in recent years to cover an interlocking financial, political, and economic world force for the purpose of establishing a World Government. Today Internationalism is heralded from pulpit and platform as a 'League of Nations' or a 'Federated Union' to which the United States must surrender a definite part of its National Sovereignty. The World Government plan is being advocated under such alluring names as the 'New International Order, 'The New World Order, 'World Union Now, 'World Commonwealth of Nations, 'World Community, etc. All the terms have the same objective; however, the line of approach may be religious or political according to the taste or training of the individual."

[Excerpt from article entitled "New World Order Pledged to Jews," in The New York Times (October 1940)]

"If totalitarianism wins this conflict, the world will be ruled by tyrants, and individuals will be slaves. If democracy wins, the nations of the earth will be united in a commonwealth of free peoples, and individuals, wherever found, will be the sovereign units of the new world order."

"The statement went on to say that the spiritual teachings of religion must become the foundation for the new world order and that national sovereignty must be subordinate to the higher moral law of God."

[American Institute of Judaism, excerpt from article in The New York Times (December 1942)]

"There are some plain common-sense considerations applicable to all these attempts at world planning. They can be briefly stated: 1. To talk of blueprints for the future or building a world order is, if properly understood, suggestive, but it is also dangerous. Societies grow far more truly than they are built. A constitution for a new world order is never like a blueprint for a skyscraper."

[Norman Thomas, in his book What Is Our Destiny? (1944)]

"He [John Foster Dulles] stated directly to me that he had every reason to believe that the Governor [Thomas E. Dewey of New York] accepts his point of view and that he is personally convinced that this is the policy that he would promote with great vigor if elected. So it is fair to say that on the first round the Sphinx of Albany has established himself as a prima facie champion of a strong and definite new world order."

"Alchemy for a New World Order"

[Article by Stephen John Stedman in Foreign Affairs (May/June 1995)]

"The United Nations, he told an audience at Harvard University, 'has not been able--nor can it be able--to shape a new world order which events so compellingly demand.' ... The new world order that will answer economic, military, and political problems, he said, 'urgently requires, I believe, that the United States take the leadership among all free peoples to make the underlying concepts and aspirations of national sovereignty truly meaningful through the federal approach.'"

[Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York, in an article entitled "Rockefeller Bids Free Lands Unite: Calls at Harvard for Drive to Build New World Order" -- The New York Times (February 1962)]

"The developing coherence of Asian regional thinking is reflected in a disposition to consider problems and loyalties in regional terms, and to evolve regional approaches to development needs and to the evolution of a new world order."

[Richard Nixon, in Foreign Affairs (October 1967)]

"He [President Nixon] spoke of the talks as a beginning, saying nothing more about the prospects for future contacts and merely reiterating the belief he brought to China that both nations share an interest in peace and building 'a new world order.'"

[Excerpt from an article in The New York Times (February 1972)]

"If instant world government, Charter review, and a greatly strengthened International Court do not provide the answers, what hope for progress is there? The answer will not satisfy those who seek simple solutions to complex problems, but it comes down essentially to this: The hope for the foreseeable lies, not in building up a few ambitious central institutions of universal membership and general jurisdiction as was envisaged at the end of the last war, but rather in the much more decentralized, disorderly and pragmatic process of inventing or adapting institutions of limited jurisdiction and selected membership to deal with specific problems on a case-by-case basis ... In short, the 'house of world order' will have to be built from the bottom up rather than from the top down. It will look like a great 'booming, buzzing confusion, to use William James' famous description of reality, but an end run around national sovereignty, eroding it piece by piece, will accomplish much more than the old-fashioned frontal assault."

[Richard N. Gardner, in Foreign Affairs (April 1974)]

"The existing order is breaking down at a very rapid rate, and the main uncertainty is whether mankind can exert a positive role in shaping a new world order or is doomed to await collapse in a passive posture. We believe a new order will be born no later than early in the next century and that the death throes of the old and the birth pangs of the new will be a testing time for the human species."

[Richard A. Falk, in an article entitled "Toward a New World Order: Modest Methods and Drastic Visions," in the book On the Creation of a Just World Order (1975)]

"My country's history, Mr. President, tells us that it is possible to fashion unity while cherishing diversity, that common action is possible despite the variety of races, interests, and beliefs we see here in this chamber. Progress and peace and justice are attainable. So we say to all peoples and governments: Let us fashion together a new world order."

"At the old Inter-American Office in the Commerce Building here in Roosevelt's time, as Assistant Secretary of State for

[Brent Scowcroft (August 1990), quoted in The Washington Post (May 1991)]

"We can see beyond the present shadows of war in the Middle East to a new world order where the strong work together to deter and stop aggression. This was precisely Franklin Roosevelt's and Winston Churchill's vision for peace for the post-war period."

[Richard Gephardt, in The Wall Street Journal (September 1990)]

"If we do not follow the dictates of our inner moral compass and stand up for human life, then his lawlessness will threaten the peace and democracy of the emerging new world order we now see, this long dreamed-of vision we've all worked toward for so long."

[President George Bush (January 1991)]

"But it became clear as time went on that in Mr. Bush's mind the New World Order was founded on a convergence of goals and interests between the U.S. and the Soviet Union, so strong and permanent that they would work as a team through the U.N. Security Council."

[Excerpt from A. M. Rosenthal, in The New York Times (January 1991)]

"I would support a Presidential candidate who pledged to take the following steps: ... At the end of the war in the Persian Gulf, press for a comprehensive Middle East settlement and for a 'new world order' based not on Pax Americana but on peace through law with a stronger U.N. and World Court."

[President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt, in The New York Times (April 1995)]

"For a long time I felt that FDR had developed many thoughts and ideas that were his own to benefit this country, the United States. But, he didn't. Most of his thoughts, his political ammunition, as it were, were carefully manufactured for him in advanced by the Council on Foreign Relations-One World Money group. Brilliantly, with great gusto, like a fine piece of artillery, he exploded that prepared "ammunition" in the middle of an unsuspecting target, the American people, and thus paid off and returned his internationalist political support. The UN is but a long-range, international banking apparatus clearly set up for financial and economic profit by a small group of powerful One-World revolutionaries, hungry for profit and power. The depression was the calculated 'shearing' of the public by the World Money powers, triggered by the planned sudden shortage of supply of call money in the New York money market....The One World Government leaders and their ever close bankers have now acquired full control of the money and credit machinery of the U.S. via the creation of the privately owned Federal Reserve Bank."

[Curtis Dall, FDR's son-in-law as quoted in his book, My Exploited Father-in-Law]

"The governments of the present day have to deal not merely with other governments, with emperors, kings and ministers, but also with the secret societies which have everywhere their unscrupulous agents, and can at the last moment upset all the governments' plans. "

[British Prime Minister Benjamin Disraeli, 1876]

"What is important is to dwell upon the increasing evidence of the existence of a secret conspiracy, throughout the world, for the destruction of organized government and the letting loose of evil."

[Christian Science Monitor editorial, June 19th, 1920]

"Today Americans would be outraged if U.N. troops entered Los Angeles to restore order; tomorrow they will be grateful! This is especially true if they were told there was an outside threat from beyond, whether real or promulgated, that threatened our very existence. It is then that all people of the world will plead with world leaders to deliver them from this evil. The one thing every man fears is the unknown. When presented with this scenario, individual rights will be willingly relinquished for the guarantee of their well being granted to them by their world government."

[Henry Kissinger in an address to the Bilderberg meeting at Evian, France, May 21, 1992. Transcribed from a tape recording made by a Swiss delegates in attendance.]

"To achieve world government, it is necessary to remove from the minds of men, their individualism, loyalty to family traditions, national patriotism and religious dogmas."

[Brock Chisholm, former Director of the U.N. World Health Organization]

"The main purpose of the Council on Foreign Relations is promoting the disarmament of U.S. sovereignty and national independence and submergence into an all powerful, one world government."

[Chester Ward, Rear Admiral and former Navy Judge Advocate 1956 - 1960 and CFR member for 15 years]

"You had me on (before) to talk about the new world order ... I talk about it all the time ... It's one world now ... The council (Council on foreign Relations) can find, nurture and begin to put people in the kinds of jobs this country needs. And that's going to be one of the major enterprises of the Council under me.."

[New CFR president Les Celb (former editor of The New York Times), May 4, 1993 on the "Charlie Rose Show"]

"That the CFR has been in control of the foreign policy of the United States for some time should now be beyond question.."

[Richard Harwood, Oct. 30, 1993, on the op-ed page of the Washington Post]

"The real rulers in Washington are invisible and exercise power from behind the scenes"

[Felix Frankfurter, United States Supreme Court Justice]

"We operate here under directives from the White House .. [to] use our grant making power to alter life in the U.S. so that we can comfortably be merged with the Soviet Union."

[Rowan Gaither, former president of the Ford Foundation, in a 1954 statement to Norman Dodd regarding Congressional investigations of the un-American activities of tax-exempt foundations operating in the U.S.]

"Gentlemen, Comrades, do not be concerned about all you hear about glasnost and perestroika and democracy in the coming years. These are primarily for outward consumption. There will be no significant internal change within the Soviet Union, other than for cosmetic purposes. Our purpose is to disarm the Americans and let them fall asleep."

[Mikhail Gorbachev, former President of the Soviet Union, to the Politburo in November of 1987]

"If their art can be applied to set aside the ordinary maxims of society and introduce policies of disobedience to government, while keeping its true aims secret, it must be obvious that such science and such societies may be perverted to all the ill purposes which have been suspected."

[George Washington, December 25, 1798, in the Salem (Mass.) Gazette, speaking of the known presence of the Illuminati in America at that time]

"The real menace of our Republic is the Invisible Government, which, like a great octopus, spreads its slimy length over the City, State, and Nation. And at the head of this octopus is the small group of Banking Houses, generally referred to as the International Bankers."

[Mayor John F. Hyland of New York, speaking in Chicago on March 26, 1922]

"I believe that if the people of this nation fully understood what Congress has done to them over the past forty-nine years, they would move on Washington. It adds up to a preconceived plan to destroy the economic and social independence of the United States."

[Senator George Malone of Nevada, speaking before Congress in 1957]

"If their art can be applied to set aside the ordinary maxims of society and introduce policies of disobedience to government, while keeping its true aims secret, it must be obvious that such science and such societies may be perverted to all the ill purposes which have been suspected."

[George Washington, December 25, 1798, in the Salem (Mass.) Gazette, speaking of the known presence of the Illuminati in America at that time]

11.25 The Allegedly "Free" and So-Called "Watchdog" Press...

"I love America more than any other country in this world; and, exactly for this reason, I insist on the right to criticize her perpetually."

[James Baldwin]

"In March, 1915, the J.P. Morgan interests, the steel, shipbuilding, and powder interest, and their subsidiary organizations, got together 12 men high up in the newspaper world and employed them to select the most influential newspapers in the United States and sufficient number of them to control generally the policy of the daily press....They found it was only necessary to purchase the control of 25 of the greatest papers. An agreement was reached; the policy of the papers was bought, to be paid for by the month; an editor was furnished for each paper to properly supervise and edit information regarding the questions of preparedness, militarism, financial policies, and other things of national and international nature considered vital to the interests of the purchasers."

[U.S. Congressman Oscar Callaway, 1917]

"News is what someone wants to suppress. Everything else is advertising."

[Former NBC news president Rubin Frank]

"An independent press does not exist in America except perhaps in small country towns; journalists know it and I know it; not one of them dares to express a sincere opinion; if they do so, they know beforehand that it will never be printed. I am paid 150 dollars monthly in order that I should not put my ideas in the newspaper for which I write and that I should keep them to myself. Others are paid similar salaries for a similar service. If I succeeded in having my opinions published in a single issue of my news-paper, I should lose my post in twenty-four hours. The man who would be insane enough to give frank expression to his thoughts would soon find himself in the streets on the look-out for another occupation. It is the duty of New York journalists to lie, to threaten, to bow down to the feet of Mammon, and to sell their country and their race for their salary, that is to say, for their daily bread ... We are the tools and the vassals of the rich who keep in the background; we are puppets; they pull the strings and we dance. Our time, our talent, our life, our abilities, all are the property of these men. We are intellectual prostitutes."

[John Swinton, former chief of staff for the New York Times, when asked in 1953 to give a simple toast before the New York Press Club, stunned a roomful of admiring peers into total silence with the preceding remarks (as reported in the January,

"The People cannot be safe without information. When the press is free, and every man is able to read, all is safe."
[Thomas Jefferson]

"We are grateful to the Washington Post, the New York Times, Time Magazine and other great publications whose directors have attended our meetings and respected their promise of discretion for almost forty years ... It would have been impossible for us to develop our plan for the world if we had been subject to the bright lights of publicity during those years. But, the world is now more sophisticated and prepared to march towards a world government. The supranational sovereignty of an intellectual elite and world bankers is surely preferable to the national auto-determination practiced in past centuries."
[David Rockefeller, in an address given to Catherine Graham, publisher of The Washington Post and other media luminaries in attendance in Baden Baden, Germany at the June 1991 annual meeting of the world elite Bilderberg Group]

"We are going to impose our agenda on the coverage by dealing with issues and subjects that we choose to deal with."
[Richard M. Cohen, former Senior Producer of CBS political news]

"Our job is to give people not what they want, but what we decide they ought to have."
[Richard Salant, former President of CBS News]

". . . this vast right-wing conspiracy conspiring against my husband since the day he announced for President. A few journalists have kind of caught on to it and explained it, but it has not yet been fully revealed to the American public."
[Hillar1 Clinton on NBC's "Today Show" (Jan. 27, 1998)]

11.26 Importance of Voting

"We electors have an important constitutional power placed in our hands: we have a check upon two branches of the legislature, as each branch has upon the other two; the power I mean of electing at stated periods, one branch, which branch has the power of electing another. It becomes necessary to every subject then, to be in some degree a statesman: and to examine and judge for himself of the tendencies of political principles and measures. "
[John Adams, The Papers of John Adams, Robert J. Taylor, ed. (Cambridge: Belknap Press, 1977), Vol. 1, p. 81]

"Let each citizen remember at the moment he is offering his vote that he is not making a present or a compliment to please an individual--or at least that he ought not so to do; but that he is executing one of the most solemn trusts in human society for which he is accountable to God and his country. "
[Samuel Adams, The Writings of Samuel Adams, Harry Alonzo Cushing, editor (New York: G.P. Putnam's Sons, 1907), Vol. IV, p. 256]

"Nothing is more essential to the establishment of manners in a State than that all persons employed in places of power and trust be men of unexceptionable characters. The public cannot be too curious concerning the character of public men."
[Samuel Adams, The Writings of Samuel Adams, Harry Alonzo Cushing, editor (New York: G.P. Putnam's Sons, 1907), Vol. III, p. 236-237]

"Look well to the characters and qualifications of those you elect and raise to office and places of trust. "
[Matthias Burnett, Pastor of the First Baptist Church in Norwalk, An Election Sermon, Preached at Hartford, on the Day of the Anniversary Election, May 12, 1803 (Hartford: Printed by Hudson & Goodwin, 1803), p. 27]

"Now more than ever the people are responsible for the character of their Congress. If that body be ignorant, reckless, and corrupt, it is because the people tolerate ignorance, recklessness, and corruption."
[James Garfield, "A Century of Congress" published in Atlantic, July 1877]

"A share in the sovereignty of the state, which is exercised by the citizens at large, in voting at elections is one of the most important rights of the subject, and in a republic ought to stand foremost in the estimation of the law. "
[Alexander Hamilton, The Papers of Alexander Hamilton, Harold C. Syrett, ed. (New York, Columbia University Press, 1962), Vol III, pp. 544-545]

"Providence has given to our people the choice of their rulers, and it is the duty, as well as the privilege and interest of our Christian nation , to select and prefer Christians for their rulers. "

[Thomas Jefferson, The Jeffersonian Cyclopedia, John P. Foley, ed. (New York: Funk & Wagnalls Company, 1900), p. 842]

"Should things go wrong at any time, the people will set them to rights by the peaceable exercise of their elective rights. "

[Thomas Jefferson, The Jeffersonian Cyclopedia, John P. Foley, ed. (New York: Funk & Wagnalls Company, 1900), p. 842]

"The elective franchise, if guarded as the ark of our safety, will peaceably dissipate all combinations to subvert a Constitution, dictated by the wisdom, and resting on the will of the people. "

[Thomas Jefferson, The Jeffersonian Cyclopedia, John P. Foley, ed. (New York: Funk & Wagnalls Company, 1900), p. 842]

"The rational and peaceable instrument of reform, the suffrage of the people. "

"Impress upon children the truth that the exercise of the elective franchise is a social duty of as solemn a nature as man can be called to perform; that a man may not innocently trifle with his vote; that every elector is a trustee as well for others as himself and that every measure he supports has an important bearing on the interests of others as well as on his own. "

[Daniel Webster, The Works of Daniel Webster (Boston: Little, Brown, and Company, 1853), Vol. II, p. 108]

"In selecting men for office, let principle be your guide. Regard not the particular sect or denomination of the candidate--look to his character. "

"When a citizen gives his suffrage to a man of known immorality he abuses his trust; he sacrifices not only his own interest, but that of his neighbor, he betrays the interest of his country. "

[Noah Webster, Letters to a Young Gentleman Commencing His Education to which is subjoined a Brief History of the United States (New Haven: S. Converse, 1823), p. 19]

"When you become entitled to exercise the right of voting for public officers, let it be impressed on your mind that God commands you to choose for rulers, "just men who will rule in the fear of God." The preservation of government depends on the faithful discharge of this duty; if the citizens neglect their duty and place unprincipled men in office, the government will soon be corrupted; laws will be made, not for the public good so much as for selfish or local purposes; corrupt or incompetent men will be appointed to execute the laws; the public revenues will be squandered on unworthy men; and the rights of the citizens will be violated or disregarded. If a republican government fails to secure public prosperity and happiness, it must be because the citizens neglect the divine commands, and elect bad men to make and administer the laws."

[Noah Webster, History of the United States (New Haven: Durrie & Peck, 1832), pp. 336-337]

"The people in general ought to have regard to the moral character of those whom they invest with authority either in the legislative, executive, or judicial branches. "

[John Witherspoon, The Works of John Witherspoon (Edinburgh: J. Ogle, 1815), Vol. IV, p. 267]

"Those who wish well to the State ought to choose to places of trust men of inward principle, justified by exemplary conversation. "

[John Witherspoon, The Works of John Witherspoon (Edinburgh: J. Ogle, 1815), Vol. IV, p. 266]
